The purpose of this program is to survey the informational resources of intergroup relations agencies and other organizations, to compile and publicize a list of the publications and services available from each, and to refer inquiries that can be answered by existing services to the proper source.

An equally important purpose is to determine from the survey of existing resources and from inquiries the areas in which information (including publications) is not available, to stimulate or carry out the research necessary to fill these informational gaps, to prepare and release this information as obtained, and to answer inquiries that cannot now be handled by existing sources.

Sample inquiries: Referrable

"I am writing a term paper and need information on race relations progress in the past years."

"Send me examples of successful housing integration around the country."

"How many affiliates of the American Dental Association are integrated?" (Probably referrable, but where?)

Sample inquiries: Not Referrable

"How do I organize a citizens' human relations council? a public human relations commission?"

"How many municipal intergroup relations agencies have subpowna powers?"

"What research has been done on the effectiveness of community organizers working with members of their own racial group, in contrast to those working with members of another racial group?"

APPENDIX C (2)

All of these inquiries have been received, some more than once, by the NAIRO office.

Most of the presently non-referrable inquiries could be answered with a minimum of effort, e.g., a few dozen letters would produce the exact data on municipal agencies with subpoena powers. But NAIRO is the logical organization to secure this information -- and does not now have the staff or time to do the necessary research.

An enormous amount of information is available, but, since the demise of the American Council on Race Relations, no organization has even attempted to survey resources, collect publications, and systematically refer inquiries to the best source. Since it is non-competitive and non-partisan among intergroup relations agencies, NAIRO is equipped to cope neutrally with the survey and with inquiries that may come to its attention.

Primary focus will be on informational service to intergroup relations workers, lay leaders, agencies, citizens' groups, institutions, social welfare organizations, governmental bodies, labor unions, and even industry ("Is it legal to require, as a condition of employment, that deliverymen agree to take a lie detector test on request?"). Most inquiries from students and the general public can be referred to existing agencies, thus maintaining NAIRO's special role and conserving its modest staff resources.

This service would meet one of two fates in 1962:

(a) If it has proven to be of sufficient value to agencies in this field, they will have the opportunity to support it or absorb its functions, or

(b) If it has succeeded in filling the major informational gaps and in routinizing referrals of inquiries, it can pass out of existence, having made its contribution to the field.

Dear John:

Your letter to Mire was, indeed, a helpful one, full of good ideas and sound advice. I must add, however, that Mire is overstating the case if he says the proposal has my endorsement. While I did react favorably to the general idea, I also criticized the proposal in some major respects -- notably, the overly large scale on which they propose to begin activity in the South. There is also the fact that only a fraction of the proposed effort deals directly and overtly with human relations; the rest is just interracial workers' education.

But all this is academic, and recognized tactfully in your letter to Mire.

I'm sorry to hear that Taconic has evidently nixed the NAIRO request. Even so, I don't think this necessarily indicates a revision of your material. Try it on Vernon Eagle and Dave Freeman, if you haven't already. If they have serious criticisms, then revision might well be considered.

All the best.

Dear Harold:

I was somewhat startled to receive a copy of Joseph Mire's proposal, sent at Mrs. Eddy's suggestion since I"might be able to offer advice on sources of financing".

You can be sure that I responded quickly. I only hope that it was helpful, too. Truth is, there seems to be little likelihood that other IR-oriented foundations will accept this, which explains my lengthy commentary.

I was sorry to read in the newspaper that you were ill. I hope that it is nothing serious.

The continuing silence at Taconic regarding NAIRO's proposal has convinced me that all is lost. I am now about to approach Field, New World et al. If you have any suggestions for improvement, therefore, we can assume now that they are needed to strengthen our case.

It was good to talk with you in Washington, and I thank you for your advice and comments.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

Mr. Joseph Mire

Dear Mr. Mire:

Thank you for sending me the copy of your proposal on intergroup relations. Since I shall be out of town during your visit to New York, I felt that I should reply by mail as quickly as possible.

The proposal has unquestionable merit and, given the proper selection of participants, offers considerable promise of a significant contribution to Southern community relations. The various projects, but especially that relating to the training of full-time staff members, bear healthy resemblance to the successful national and regional police-community relations institutes sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. I am, in short, not at all surprised that both Harold Fleming and Boris Shishkin have given this their endorsement.

Conferences (also workshops, institutes and consultations) without follow-up are like apple pie without cheese. I suppose that contact with the alumni will be maintained by international union field staff or by the newly-trained Southern local staff; indeed, this is implicit in the proposal. I should like to see this made explicit, however, and I wonder if it might not merit a separate appeal for funds, directed to foundations or to the international unions.

The foundations with an active interest in intergroup relations are few and can be listed quickly: The Field Foundation (Maxwell Hahn, Executive Vice-President), the New World Foundation (Vernon Eagle, Executive Director), and the Rockefeller Brothers Fund (David Freeman, Consultant). There are a few others that operate and give in specific localities, but I know of none in the South. In any case, the three mentioned above do have a national scope; all are located in New York. The McGregor Fund in Detroit might be a possibility for support of one of the more modest projects.

Since the number of such foundations is so pitifully small and since the demands made upon them are so great, I am always tempted to think of other foundations that might be approached, especially if the proposal can be formulated in such a way as to offer its intergroup relations impact as a by-product of a broader purpose.

In this light, I suggest conversations with The Fund for Adult Education regarding a possible grant under its program, "Education for Public Responsibility." I see your proposal under either of two of the Fund's major areas of concern: work with educational organizations and work with national organizations.

Similarly, I find myself wondering if your proposal might be re-formulated to fall within one sphere of interest of the Ford Foundation, namely that relating to community self-help and development. I understand that quite a few grants have been made to community organization projects; the community relations aspect of your proposal might be considered appropriate. The Foundation makes no grants for intergroup relations work per se, but would probably not object if this were an obvious by-product.

I do not need to be told the importance to intergroup relations of the literacy education project and I applaud its inclusion. I do wonder, however, if this particular appeal might not be directed to some foundation (Carnegie? Rockefeller? Hartford? Lilly? or even one of the company foundations?) that would normally avoid contact with intergroup relations per se.

I know from recent involvement in a community self-help project that the National Institute for Mental Health (governmental) operates under an increasingly broad definition of "mental health" or "mental illness prevention." The magnitude of your proposal would not frighten the Institute, and I think that the community relations and adult leadership training aspects of the projects might be squeezed into its concern.

I hope that you do not think that I suggest that this project does not have sufficient intergroup relations impact to attract the support of one of the few foundations oriented to this work. I hope, too, that you realize that I am not suggesting abandonment of the intergroup relations aspect. In truth, I am only suggesting that this proposal -- unlike some others developed in our field -- might be launched under a slightly different guise without losing its reason for being.

It is unfortunate that we cannot meet next week, but I hope to have that pleasure when you come to New York again.

In the meantime, I wish you the best of luck in your search for funds for this project. I will keep my fingers crossed.

Sincerely,

JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

Dear Harold:

I thought that you might be interested in seeing the enclosed document, our final revision of bulletin on career opportunities in intergroup relations. You will notice that all of the suggestions offered by Paul Rilling and you were accepted.

I hope that we will have the pleasure of seeing you at the meeting in Cincinnati this month. If you attend, you may join in the general sadness as I report on our unsuccessful attempts to secure foundation grants for our expansion. Whatever the real reason may be, and I suspect that the fear of professionalism still looms large, we received from all sides the answer that foundations are presently interested in giving their funds for action programs in the South. While I applaud this belated and, I trust, overwhelming recognition of your needs, I do shed a modest tear for NAIRO, which will soon be forced to make its own emergency appeals.

Be not dismayed! I have not given up and still think that we can keep the organization alive. It does make a body wonder none the less.

Best wishes, as always.

Sincerely,

JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

CAREERS IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

This bulletin attempts to summarize the best information and advice available to those interested in a career in intergroup relations. It comprises a description of the field, some facts about professional job openings, generalizations about job requirements, and suggestions for those seeking employment.

THE FIELD OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS

What is intergroup relations? There are almost as many definitions as there are organizations and workers in the field, but there might be general agreement on this: The immediate goals of intergroup relations are the reduction of prejudice and the elimination of discrimination against individuals because of their race, creed, color or national origin. Intergroup relations shares with other disciplines the long-range goal of establishing a society in which groups interact harmoniously and individuals enjoy maximum dignity and opportunity.

Note that intergroup relations is broader than the term "race relations;" it encompasses interreligious relations and intercultural relations, as well as interracial relations. "Human relations" and "community relations" are common if inaccurate synonyms.

An intergroup relations agency then is an organization whose primary purpose is to advance one or both of the field's immediate goals. Its activities may be largely educational or may, on the other hand, focus on social action. It may concern itself with the needs or problems of one minority group -- or with problems of all groups. It may be privately supported (memberships, contributions, community chest funds, foundation grants, etc.) or it may be governmental and therefore financed from public funds.

Governmental or public agencies may operate under federal, state or municipal authorization. Federal agencies and departments are clustered in Washington, D.C., although some departments maintain regional offices around the country. State agencies are located in the state capital or largest city; a few also maintain field offices. Municipal intergroup relations agencies are located in just about every non-Southern city with a population over 250,000 -- and in some that are considerably smaller.

The private or voluntary agencies may be sponsored by a minority or religious group, or may be more general and non-sectarian in character. There are some independent regional, state or local private agencies, but the national agencies (and their regional or local branches and affiliates) constitute the bulk of the voluntary organizations and employ most of the non-public agency personnel in this field.

Note that the agencies have varying philosophies, objectives, methods and resources which shape their functional activities and affect the nature of the programs in which they are engaged.

There are, in any event, some 300 intergroup relations agencies with paid professional staff in the United States and -- counting all local affiliates of national organizations -- a total of over 600 separate staffed offices. NAIRO estimates that 1,500 professional workers are employed full-time by these agencies or by intergroup relations departments of agencies with a broader scope.

Intergroup relations is a young field. Although several of the national private agencies were established as early as 1906-1920, most intergroup relations agencies -- and especially those that are governmental -- have come into existence since World War II. NAIRO, professional association of intergroup relations workers, was founded in 1947.

Openings. It has been estimated that resignations, retirement, and agency expansion create some one hundred professional openings each year. Perhaps one third of these might be open to persons without previous intergroup relations experience, although most would require at least an advanced degree or work experience in some related field. This is not an optimistic picture, given the number of individuals seeking careers in intergroup relations, and yet hundreds have found their way into the field -- from a wide variety of education and experience backgrounds.

The Jobs. An intergroup relations worker might be assigned to one or more of the following duties: research, complaint investigation, negotiation, community organization, membership recruitment, publicity, writing, fund-raising, education, administration, leadership training, etc. Or, instead of a functional assignment, he may specialize in a subject area: housing, employment schools, police-community relations, interreligious understanding, etc. In the larger agencies, he may have one function or be assigned to one subject area; in most intergroup relations agencies -- the one-man or two-man offices -- the worker will have many functions covering several subject areas.

Geography. Most intergroup relations agencies are in the Northeast, Midwest, and Far West, although there are growing needs and opportunities in the South. Not too surprisingly, the number of agencies in a city increases in proportion to its size; in the larger cities, one finds more agencies, more jobs ... and more competition.

In the South, most if not all positions are with private agencies, generally one-man or two-man offices. Preference is given to Southern applicants, especially for field work positions.

There are other important geographic limitations. Some of the city and state public agencies have residence requirements for all job applicants: one must be a resident when one applies and, in some cases, one must have lived there for one, two or three years. This is often written into law, requiring formal waiver when an "outsider" is hired. Other public agencies do not require residence but give preference to qualified residents. And, everything else being equal, most agencies -- private as well as public -- prefer to hire someone who already knows the area in which the agency operates. This is especially true of beginning jobs.

Unfortunately, there is another geographic limitation. No agency will hire a staff member without interviewing him, and few agencies have funds with which to bring applicants from any distance for interviews. It is usually true that an applicant cannot be considered for an opening unless he lives in an area or can get to it at his own expense. Agencies regret this fact, but it is a budgetary limitation.

Salary. There are no set salary standards, maximums or minimums. It is even difficult to generalize about averages. As a rule, however, starting salaries fall in the $4,200 - $5,700 range; middle salaries are in the $5,200 - $8,500 range; and executive salaries in the $7,000 - $15,000 bracket. Salaries will vary according to size of agency, nature of agency, and -- at least in the case of public agencies -- size of city. Note: Many agencies do not have positions for beginners; the lowest salaried post in the agency may require one to four years' experience ....

WHAT MUST YOU OFFER?

Experience. Work experience in an intergroup relations agency or in a related field is still the most valuable asset. What are considered to be related fields? Social work, especially community organization; social welfare; housing; adult education; journalism; public relations; religion; personnel and vocational guidance; investigation; etc. Professional experience in almost any voluntary agency will be helpful if it involved work with volunteers, agency program planning or work with Boards and committees. Two years' experience in one of the related fields would suffice for most starting jobs in intergroup relations.

Education. A college degree is almost essential, but seldom enough by itself. Since intergroup relations agencies have few beginners' jobs, something else -- preferably experience -- must be offered. A master's degree in an appropriate field is helpful, and many agencies will accept this in lieu of one or two years' experience. (Some agencies -- notably the Urban Leagues -- require a master's degree for most positions.) A doctorate is impressive but unnecessary, except perhaps for positions in intercultural education or in research.

Appropriate fields of study? Social work, sociology, human relations, public administration, psychology, religion, anthropology -- and for some positions: law, education, journalism.

Service. Agencies are interested in an applicant's volunteer service in intergroup relations, especially if the person has no professional experience. Prior involvement in the program of one or more intergroup relations agencies offers some indication of commitment and suggests at least a modest exposure to intergroup relations goals and methods. Participation in one of the many summer human relations workshops will be noted fsvorably by agencies.

Personal. Intergroup relations work is difficult, demanding and delicate. Although hard to measure, certain personal qualifications are given great weight in the hiring of new workers:

(1) Dedication: You will need a sincere and well-motivated belief in the goals of intergroup relations, and you will not be happy in this field unless you are prepared to live your beliefs, to practice as well as preach the treatment of all human beings as individuals.

(2) Emotional Stability. For your own sake, and the sake of the greater good, you must be emotionally stable and mature enough to cope calmly and judiciously with irrational people and trying situations. An angry personal reaction is a luxury that must usually be sacrificed in this work.

(3) Sensitivity and Perception. The most difficult to assess and perhaps the most difficult to develop, these qualities are also the most important. In intergroup relations, one must be especially sensitive to the feelings of others, the nuances of delicate situations, the "hidden agendas" that people bring to any conference. One must have a high degree of empathy and an ability to assess people and situations accurately and quickly. This is aided by a broad general understanding of people and of community structure.

HOW AND WHERE TO LOOK

STEP I. Contact the intergroup relations agencies in your area, especially those to which you are known through volunteer service. They may have openings, know of openings elsewhere (including agencies in related fields) or be able to offer sound advice on additional preparation. Affiliates of national agencies may also be in a position to pass your name along for consideration when openings arise in other cities, if you are willing to relocate.

STEP 2. Consider carefully some of the fruitful and important areas of work on the "fringes" of intergroup relations. These other agencies may offer challenging careers in themselves but should, in any case, help you move later into an intergroup relations agency. Many of them are in fields easier to enter than intergroup relations, will more readily accept and train beginners, and may be more interested in skills and education that you already possess.

Your search might include the following, especially if they operate or are located in mixed or changing neighborhoods: settlement houses, community cneters, churches, schools, neighborhood associations, social welfare agencies or civic associations, various city and state governmental agencies, housing projects.

If your city is small, you may be able to contact these personally. In larger cities, you might contact the local council of social welfare agencies, the professional placement service of the state employment agency, and some of the local coordinating bodies in the various fields.

STEP 3. If you are willing and able to relocate, and if you think that you have appropriate experience and education, send a resume to the major national organizations and to any of the larger state and municipal agencies in areas to which you would be willing to move. How to locate these? Buy-- for two ($2.) dollars -- the DIRECTORY OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES WITH PAID PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL, published by NAIRO in late 1959.

STEP 4. Again, if you can relocate and if you have appropriate experience and education, consider joining NAIRO -- at least as an associate member -- to take advantage of its Personnel Registry. Members listed on the Registry receive prompt notice of all intergroup relations job openings posted with NAIRO (forty to fifty jobs annually). Annual dues are $15, entitling you to all services and publications. Details on request.

STEP 5. Various fields peripheral to intergroup relations maintain their own personnel service, and you might want to register with some of them, depending on your interest and background. Examples are: National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, Community Chests and Councils of America, American Society for Public Administration. Do not overlook the professional placement service maintained by the state employment agencies, some of which even exchange information on openings. In very large cities, some commercial employment agencies specialize in non-profit agency professional placement.

Dear John:

Thanks for your two recent letters, which I am taking the liberty of answering in one.

The JOURNAL is an impressive job. We'll be glad to distribute the flyer as an enclosure with New South. (Total needed: 5500.) In all honesty, I should warn you that returns on such enclosures in the past have been mighty slim. But we're willing if you are.

An alternative would be to note the JOURNAL nad briefly review the contents of this issue in the "Highlights" department of New South.

I have no bright ideas for "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital" -- unless the Republican National Committee will buy them up. Slightly more seriously, has the USIA bought any? The report ought to be stocked by every overseas library. Down here, I just don't know where there is any potential market. We've about gotten out of the pamphlet-selling business, except for wholesale orders from other organizations.

Delighted to hear about the awakening of South Central.

In response to your earlier letter, this is the first I've heard of my responsibility at the annual conference. Are there any funds for participants travel, if they don't otherwise be at the conference?

Cordially,

Harold C. Fleming
Executive Director

Dear Harold:

Fred Routh suggested that I write to you about two steps that might offer modest aid to NAIRO in its hour of need.

Would it be possible for you to distribute the enclosed JOURNAL flyer with "New South"? Or is there any other way that you might call it to the attention of your list in the South?

Can you think of any untapped outlets for our pamphlet, "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital"? We have only 900 in stock, but I confess that orders have dwindled to a trickle, steady but slender. In the interests of ready cash, we will part with any quantity over 10 at the 60¢ price. (As indicated on the enclosed, the price drops to 55¢ for 200-500 copies and to 50¢, on which we lose a little money, over 500.

Ideas will be appreciated. Also publicity.

You may be pleased to hear that our cousins are buzzin' in Little Rock, Baton Rouge and Austin, with talk about coming together under Mother NAIRO's aegis. In fact, Wade Mackie writes that the South Central Region will convene in Little Rock, probably on November 10-11. Nicest thing of all, I did nothing to stimulate this.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

CIVIL RIGHTS IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL:

A REPORT ON A DECADE OF PROGRESS

Available now in pamphlet form, this report received nationwide publicity when first released in September, 1959. Typical of press comment is the Washington Post (page one) story quoted in the attached Congressional Record reprint.

Articles by District of Columbia race relations experts analyze in detail the marked changes in patterns of segregation since 1947-8, covering such areas of Washington life as: housing, public schools, craft unions, federal employment, public and private health and welfare agencies, community institutions, public accommodations, District of Columbia government employment, and private employment. Other articles give thoughtful attention to the dynamics and techniques of the social change that serves as "something of a model" in the field of race relations.

Since racial integration in the nation's Capital is of importance to every American, this progress report belongs in your library! And since this report proves that rigid segregation patterns can be changed, it deserves wide circulation among those in your community who doubt that it is possible!

It appeared originally as Volume I, No. 5, of the Journal of Intergroup Relations, in September 1959. The present unabridged pamphlet edition was published in November, 1959.

Dear Colleague:

This letter is a special appeal to NAIRO leadership, to apprise you of NAIRO's desperate financial straits. We need $3,000 to complete this year's budget and something in the neighborhood of $20,000 for next year's budget.

This is not an appeal for personal funds from you, for I know the salary range of most of our professionals. This is an appeal to help get new members for the organization.

We see three benefits coming from a considerably increased membership:

(1) representing more professionals, board members--a wider segment of our field--NAIRO will speak with a bigger voice in the councils of professionalism;

(2) NAIRO will increasingly serve as a professional association, serving an increasing number of those engaged in intergroup relations, thus improving our efforts;

(3) each new member brings $15 to our coffers; the more members served, the lower is the per unit cost of serving them.

We have already asked every member of NAIRO to get at least one new member. We are asking you, as part of NAIRO's leadership, to get 3--5 new members between now and Sept. 1. We are trying to meet our financial obligations through other means too--special approaches are being made to foundations, to large corporations, international labor unions, and interested individuals with money; also, a special appeal will be made to national agencies.

It is the consensus of those with whom I have talked on the west coast, in the midwest, and down east, that NAIRO today better serves professional needs of the workers in our field than at any time in its history. It would be tragic, indeed if, just as we reached this new level of effectiveness, it became necessary to close the national office for lack of funds. Your efforts can prevent this from happening.

Because of your demonstrated dedication to the field and to the Association, I ask you to do all in your power to secure from three to five new members and I promise you that your national officers will do all in their power to secure funds from the other sources mentioned.

Sincerely yours,

Fred

TO: Members of NAIRO
FROM: John Lassoe, Jr., Executive Secretary
SUBJECT: FIVE IMPORTANT MATTERS

1) Please reply now to the enclosed, piteous request for cooperation, addressed to you by the chairman of our Resolutions Committee.

2) Please exercise the same splendid spirit of cooperation in replying to the enclosed questionnaire from the chairman of our Commission on Education.

3) While imbued with this incomparable elan, walk into the next office or pick up the telephone -- to enroll your member in NAIRO's "Each One Get One" membership drive..

And, leaping lizards, pay your 1960 dues now if you have not already done so!

4) Interested in migration and migrants? Do you work directly with newcomers (of any race, creed or national origin)? It has been suggested that those with special concern for migration and migrants come together in a special meeting at our Annual Conference in Cincinnati, to exchange information, ideas, and thoughts about continuing cooperation.

If interested, send your ideas (or at least your name) to:
PAUL ERTEL, JR., Commission on Human Relations, 54 West Hubbard Street, Chicago 10, Illinois. (Paul will arrange this meeting if enough professionals express interest.)

5) In the same vein, please give this your attention:

"The U.S. Census Bureau is under a great deal of pressure from the 'economy bloc' not to tabulate and publish data which is not directly related to business or to congressional representation. I would heartily recommend that every NAIRO member write in the name of his organization, along the following lines, to: Dr. Conrad Taeuber, Assistant Director, Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce, Washington 25, D. C.

a) Ask, in general, for a memorandum on the types of Census materials that will be available, and when, and ask to be put on the Census Bureau mailing list to receive announcements of availability.

b) Ask or urge that Series P-E reports be prepared on the Negro population, the Spanish-speaking population of the United States (this would include Mexicans, Puerto Ricans, Cubans, Filipinos, immigrants from Spain or the Spanish-speaking countries of the Western hemisphere), and any other group of special interest to the member's organization.

c) Ask specifically about Census tract material for his city when it will be available, and exactly what it will contain." ./.

FIVE IMPORTANT MATTERS (2)

This good suggestion comes from CLARENCE SENIOR (Migration and Metropolis Study, American Society of Planning Officials). There is no need to quote Clarence when writing, of course, but you know now that the recommendation comes from a highly knowledgeable source.

Note: The Census Bureau P-E series consists of special reports with data tabulations not published elsewhere. (1950 samples: a report on persons born in Puerto Rico or of Puerto Rican descent living here; a report on the Spanish-speaking population of the five southwestern states.) It is in these reports that intergroup relations workers would hope to find the most significant cross classification of raw data noted in the other series, if the Bureau can be persuaded to include them. Incidentally, reports of the P-E series are scheduled for release in 1962.

Dear Harold:

Railway Express is bringing you 5,500 copies of our JOURNAL flyer. I am very grateful for your willingness to distribute them with New South. The returns may be slim, as you suggest, but we do want to be certain that all likely readers have a chance to subscribe.

I shall again approach USIA about the purchase of "Civil Rights in the Nation's Capital." Twenty-five copies were purchased some time ago, but they might be persuaded to order again.

With regard to your Annual Conference assignment, I must report ruefully that travel funds for participants in Commission sessions are simply not available. These Commission meetings are concurrent and number seven. This means an average attendance of 40-50 persons. Meager funds, raised by the host city committee, simply will not permit payment of expenses for any but the major speaker(s) at general sessions.

Fairly concrete promises and one or two small gifts have begun to trickle in, and I have fairly high hopes that we shall raise the $2,500 or so needed to keep us in operation through 1960. In the meantime, we continue to put together choice packages calculated to make philanthropoids respond with Pavlovian instinct ... just doing what comes naturally, like writing cheques or even checks.

Good wishes.

Sincerely,

John

Dear John:

As I have explained profusely to Fred in a telephone conversation the other day, I was deeply disappointed to have to miss the NAIRO Board Meeting again. I had long planned to come, but between SRC's move to new quarters and the jailing of Bob Hughes in Birmingham, my situationbbecame completely unglued.

I will be more than glad to help out in the session on the sit-ins.

As for a Southern youth, one of the most personable and articulate is Charles Jones, a graduate student at Johnson C.Smith in Charlotte. His address is 2212 Trade Street. Paul Rilling agrees that Jones would be the best bet. If this does not work out, however, let us knowand we will suggest alternative possibilities.

It occurs to me that I am also responsible for a Commission session on theppreceding evening. In view of the special session which you and Saal are organizing, I will plan to deemphasize the sit-ins in such panel discussion as I may arrange.

I am sending a copy of this note to Saal Lesser.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

September 15, 1960

Dear Harold:

Since I am not sure that you will attend tomorrow's Board meeting, I write to place another request -- for participation and information -- before you. We do seem to call on you for alot, don't we?

At the NAIRO Conference in November, we want to have a special session on the sit-in movement. This was decided by the Program Committee, and a few of us worked out the details yesterday. We want to have a panel of participants or representatives of groups involved: Herb Wright from the NAACP, someone from CORE (to be suggested by Marv Rich; hopefully, a Southern youth), and someone from the Southern Leadership Conference wing (also a Southern youth, hopefully suggested by you).

We would like you to precede this panel with a brief (15-20 minute) report on what has been happening since last February, to help all of us get our facts straight and our thinking in perspective. We would then invite brief comments from the panel on their feelings about the sit-ins, after which the meeting would be opened for what we hope will be a good question-answer-and-discussion exchange. Oh yes, the theme of the meeting: "The Southern Sit-Ins: Challenge to Intergroup Relations Agencies?"

We are looking for articulation by the youth or their representatives of their deep feelings about the role of youth in this witness, the role of adults, and the role of the organized civil rights agencies. We want to be told if and where we missed the boat, how and where we (as a field) and help, and what they see as the next round.

So, sir, we would like (a) your acceptance as our fact-bearer and (b) your suggestion(s) of youth who will talk straight about the movement as a youth movement and, essentially, a Negro movement. (We Yankees understand that there are many young leaders who view it in that light.)

Saal Lesser of the Encampment for Citizenship will be the moderator of the session nad has agreed to recruit the panelists. You might want to send your ideas and suggestions directly to him: 2 West 64th Street, New York, New York.

We will pay the expenses of the two young people who are finally invited, but you (and Herb Wright) have been around NAIRO long enough to know that we can never offer the same inducement to our members.

The session, incidentally, is scheduled for 8-10:30 p.m. on Wednesday evening, November 16th.

I and Saal look forward to hearing from you.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

Dear Harold:

I am delighted that you will be able to help out in the session on sit-ins. Saal Lesser will be in touch with you shortly about this.

You are quite right in assuming that you are responsible for planning a session of your Commission on the preceding evening. I must warn you that I will be harassing you increasingly for your topic and participants, for listing in the printed program. I suspect that the printer will give me an October 20th deadline on this.

May I take this opportunity to thank you for your help in promoting JOURNAL subscriptions in the New South mailing. It is hard to identify every subscriber's source, but Frankye and I credit the mailing with a minimum of 40 returns. This looks very good in the light of our modest total circulation.

Best wishes.

October 19, 1960

Dear Harold:

The deceptive thing about the Chinese Boot is the fact that you never feel a thing until someone starts to turn the screws. Uncomfortable now, isn't it?

My copy deadline for the printed program is next Wednesday, October 26. In fact, I leave for Cincinnati that night to deliver it to the printer. May I have from you by then the title, chairman, and participants of your Commission session at the Conference?

The Southern sit-in session has been resolved in a manner deemed to be less threatening to certain agencies. There will be two students following your presentation with personal observations on the genesis, meaning, and future of the movement: Charles Jones and Joe McNeal (Greensboro A & T). We decided against having one from NAACP, one from CORE, and one from the Coordinating Committee. McNeal is, of course, from NAACP, but Jones seems neutral if, as we understand, he is now working for FOR.

Jim Farmer (NAACP), who attended the Atlanta meeting last weekend, gave us a gloomy report. He felt that much steam was lacking now and observed that the perhaps-inevitable organizational scramble for status seemed to dominate the proceedings. I hope that he is wrong.

I hear that SRC's integrated rest room may soon be used by new neighbors. Poor John was certainly downcast at the thought of moving in the middle of such a busy period -- and with so much printed material in stock, too.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

John

SUBJECT: Post-Task Force Assignments

One last word! George Culberson suggested a memo reviewing briefly the assignments that we have in connection with the final draft of our recommendations to the Administration.

I am to (a) prepare a draft of the general introductory statement, (b) prepare a draft of our recommendations on internal and external training, and (c) put together a rough draft of the entire document after your specific section drafts have been received.

John Feild, Bob Greene and Booker McGraw will constitute the editorial committee, reviewing and revising my rough draft. They will also develop strategy for presentation of the document in high places and will, hopefully, carry on the continuing liaison with the Administration.

John Feild and Harold Fleming have been asked to draft a directive incorporating our general recommendations (i.e. calling for departmental and agency review of program, looking to incorporation of intergroup relations personnel and program where needed).

Bill Gremley has already prepared a draft of recommendations on Foreign Service and Peace Corps orientation.

George Culberson will prepare a draft on our research recommendations.

Bob Greene will prepare drafts of our recommendations on (a) internal consultants (to assist President and government agencies) and (b) community consultant services.

Fred Routh will prepare a draft on the role of the President in public information.

George Nesbitt will prepare a draft of our recommendations on needed reference library services.

Booker McGraw will draft our recommendations on the role of the professional worker. (I will forward my notes, Booker.)

John Feild will polish up our specific recommendations to the new President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, hopefully before it holds its first session.

IMPORTANT: Your respective drafts should be sent by Sunday, April 2, to:

John Lassoe
c/o Robert Greene

I am to start drafting the complete document on Monday, April 3, and will need your materials, please!

Dear Harold:

May I have your comments on the enclosed proposal?

NAIRO's Board of Directors has given tentative approval to the idea in its present sketchy form, but has directed me to solicit the reactions of intergroup relations workers in or familiar with the South.

1) Does the present and anticipated need for new Southern field workers warrant a training program?

2) Is the internship program the best means of preparing new workers quickly? Would 8-10 new workers a year for three years create a surplus or still leave a shortage?

3) Would the second phase, the seminars for peripheral workers, be of value -- in their immediate work and as an introduction to professional work in our field?

4) Would your agency be interested in training an intern? Would it be able to match a $2,500 grant, to cover the salary and related expenses of the intern?

5) Is the budget realistic?

I look forward to hearing from you and hope that you will be frank and free in your suggestions.

Sincerely,

JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

SOUTHERN FIELD TRAINING PROGRAM: PROPOSAL OUTLINE

The National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials (NAIRO) seeks $50,000 annually for three years, or $150,000 in all, to subsidize a program of on-the-job training and seminars for potential intergroup relations workers in the South.

The demand for Southerners with intergroup relations experience, to staff newly-created state and local public agencies, as well as expanding private agency programs, is far greater than the supply. This need will be even greater within the next few years, and there is presently no systematic preparation of workers for these posts.

To train workers for the job openings expected in the immediate future, NAIRO proposes to revive its Internship Program, confined this time to Southern agencies. Matching grants of $2,500 each would be offered to selected agencies for one year of on-the-job training for a new worker, chosen by the agency and supervised by an agency staff member. These recruits would be persons without prior experience in intergroup relations, although many would presumably have advanced academic training or experience in a related field. At the end of their internship year, some would probably be retained by the training agencies, but others would be free to fill vacancies elsewhere. At least one regional seminar, and possibly two, would be planned for these trainees each year.

To provide a reservoir of potential workers for less imminent openings, NAIRO proposes a series of regional or area seminars for people of commitment now employed professionally in social agencies, churches, neighborhood centers, YMCAs, YWCAs, and like institutions. Week-long institutes would be scheduled in at least four locations each year. Seminar leadership and consultants would be provided by NAIRO. Travel and living expenses would be subsidized in part, totally in some instances. The purpose would be to sensitize these peripheral workers to intergroup relations concerns and approaches, to aid them in their present assignments and to initiate preparation for possible intergroup relations employment in the future. These would differ from existing race relations institutes in the South, by virtue of their focus on professional practice and their restricted professional participation.

An important phase of the three-year program would be the refinement and expansion of NAIRO's placement services (i.e. Personnel Registry), especially for Southern agencies and workers.

Budget: $50,000 annually for three years, or $150,000.

ANNUAL:	Administration Staff time, travel, postage, publications.	$10,000.
	Internships (10 matching grants of $2,500 to training agencies)	25,000.
	Internship Seminar (s) Leadership, intern travel, room and board.	5,000.
	Peripheral Professional Seminars (4 - 5) Leadership, travel subsidy, lodging, consultants.	10,000.
	TOTAL	$50,000

Dear Harold:

We are happy to acknowledge receipt of your NAIRO dues for the year ending DECEMBER 31, 1961 and to send you your new membership card.

NAIRO is growing rapidly, and we hope that you have found increasing opportunity to participate in its activities. Chapters have been chartered in a number of localities, for example, and regional conferences are becoming regular events in at least a few areas.

If you are affiliated with an agency (as staff or as a Board member), you have been assigned automatically to one of NAIRO's five departments. We hope that you have heard from your chairman, at least through a newsletter, and -- perhaps more important -- that he has heard from you.

Commission and committee members are usually appointed by the chairmen or by the NAIRO Board, but most of them are able to add interested volunteers. If a commission or committee activity appeals to you, you should certainly offer your services.

In any case, we hope that you will always feel free to let us know how we may serve you best.

Cordially,

A Roundup of Activity in the 1959 Sessions

State Civil Rights Legislation

Outstanding among the state civil rights laws enacted during the first six months of 1959 were those of Colorado, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Oregon prohibiting discrimination or segregation in private housing. These were the first such laws enacted at the state level in the United States. Their forerunners were two city ordinances adopted in New York City in December 1957 and in Pittsburgh in December 1958.

Other major civil rights laws passed during the same period include a California statute prohibiting discrimination in public, publicly-aided and redevelopment housing; California and Ohio enactments of effective FEP laws with commission-type enforcement procedures, raising to 16 the number of states with such laws; a Missouri law prohibiting discrimination in state employment, but providing no sanctions; Maine's prohibition of discrimination in places of public accommodation, resort or amusement, making 23 states with such laws; and California's broadening of its civil rights statute.

In addition, Connecticut and New Mexico strengthened the powers of their existing commissions against discrimination, Missouri made its temporary Human Rights Commission a permanent agency of the state, Washington prohibited discriminatory inquiries in connection with applications for credit, and Idaho, California and Nevada repealed their prohibitions against interracial marriages.

Following are more detailed reports and analyses:

Fair Housing Laws

Colorado

The Colorado Fair Housing Act of 1959, the first state statute of its type enacted in the United States, was signed into law by Governor Stephen L. R. Nichols on April 10, 1959.

Originally co-sponsored by a bipartisan group of 41 representatives, a majority of the 65-member House, the bill passed the House 57-3, and the Senate (in a somewhat weakened form) 24-11.

The House subsequently concurred in the Senate version.

The Act covers all housing, public as well as private, with one exception: The owner of a one-family house who lives in the house with his family is not subject to the ban on discriminatory transfers.

The Act prohibits the owner of any housing accommodations from refusing to transfer, rent or lease them to any person because of race, creed, color, sex, national origin or ancestry; or to make any written or oral inquiry or record concerning such characteristics of a prospective buyer or tenant. It prohibits any owner from discriminating on any of those grounds in the terms, conditions or privileges pertaining to any housing or in the furnishing of facilities or services in connection therewith, and from printing or publishing notices or advertisements indicating any preference, limitation or discrimination based on race, creed, color, sex, national origin or ancestry.

In addition, the Act prohibits banks and financial institutions from making inquiries concerning the race, creed, color, sex, national origin or ancestry of persons seeking financial assistance in connection with any housing or discriminating in the terms, conditions or privileges relating to

With this issue, NAIRO Reporter suspends publication. Launched by NAIRO as a needed informational service reporting on trends and developments in the field of intergroup relations, NAIRO Reporter fulfilled its mandated role for upward of eight years. During that time, intergroup relations have come to occupy a position of such import in public policy and public awareness that news about intergroup relations is carried regularly in newspapers and other general media of news and interpretation. The United States Supreme Court rulings on public school desegregation, and the aftermath of the rulings, projected a major area of intergroup relations concern into the forefront of the political scene. Special organs were created to report on developments—Southern School News, with generous subventions, performed and continues to perform an admirable service. As laws protecting equality of opportunity in employment, education and housing multiplied in states and municipalities, information about them and discussion of their implications and their impact became common fare in publications widely available. The special need for which NAIRO Reporter was created, in short, no longer exists. It is with a sense of "mission accomplished," with satisfaction unmarred by regret, that we withdraw from the work of reviewing the passing scene and assign the product of our eight years work to the archives, where, we allow ourselves the pleasant belief, they will continue to serve a useful purpose for many years to come.

Beginning with the autumn of 1959, NAIRO will publish a quarterly Journal of Intergroup Relations. Several issues of such a Journal already have been produced for limited circulation, chiefly within the NAIRO membership. The plan is to improve the Journal, profiting from experience; to make it more broadly representative of the best professional research, experimentation, thinking and observation in the field; and to increase its circulation. Subscribers to NAIRO Reporter, whose subscriptions would have expired during any part of the year subsequent to this final issue of July 1959 will receive the Journal of Intergroup Relations in lieu of the Reporters they would have received during the remainder of their subscription periods. We intend that they shall have cause to regard the exchange as in their favor.

To all our subscribers — thanks for your kind cooperation and support. Farewell!

Limited exception is provided for religious or denominational institutions and organizations which operate or control housing accommodations. Another exception permits leasing of premises only to members of one sex. This covers, for example, YMCA and YWCA homes.

Enforcement of the Act is entrusted to the Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission, which administers the state laws against discrimination in employment and in places of public accommodation.

Massachusetts

Massachusetts became the second state to bar discrimination in private housing on April 22, 1959, when Governor Foster Furculo of Massachusetts signed a bill prohibiting racial or religious discrimination in all "multiple dwellings" and "contiguously located housing." Under the law's definitions of these types of housing, the measure applies to apartment houses with three or more apartments, and to one or two family houses that are parts of developments consisting of ten or more housing units.

Enforcement of the new housing law is vested in the Massachusetts State Commission Against Discrimination which administers the existing laws prohibiting discrimination in employment, in places of public accommodation, resort or amusement, in educational institutions and public, publicly-aided and redevelopment housing.

Connecticut

Connecticut's legislation barring discrimination in private housing was signed by Governor Abraham Ribicoff on May 12, 1959. It covers "any housing accommodation . . . that is one of five or more housing accommodations all of which are located on a single parcel of land or parcels of land that are contiguous . . . and all of which any person owns or otherwise controls the sale or rental thereof." This coverage is narrower than that of the Massachusetts law in respect to multiple dwellings, applying to units of at least five apartments (compared to three in Massachusetts) but broader with respect to one and two family housing developments, applying to groups of five or more such units (rather than 10 or more).

As in the cases of Colorado and Massachusetts, enforcement of the new housing statute is vested in the existing state agency—the Connecticut Civil Rights Commission—charged with responsibility to enforce the other state laws prohibiting discrimination.

Oregon

Oregon's prohibition of discrimination in the sale or occupancy of private housing is contained in two bills signed by Governor Mark O. Hatfield on May 25, 1959. They are Senate Bills 249 and 250.

The former amends the Oregon Law Against Discrimination by prohibiting all persons "engaged in the business of selling or renting real property" from refusing to sell or rent solely because of the race, color, religion or national origin of the would-be purchaser or lessee, from making any other distinctions or restrictions "in the price, terms, conditions or privileges" in connection with the sale, lease or occupancy of such property, or from publishing or displaying any advertisement indicating a preference, limitation or discrimination based on race, color, religion or national origin. Real estate brokers and salesmen are expressly forbidden to accept "a listing of real property . . . with an understanding that a purchaser [or lessee] may be discriminated against . . . solely because of race, color, religion or national origin." The sale or rental of a house by the owner, who is not in the business of selling or renting houses, would not be covered by the new law, unless the owner retains a real estate broker, agent or salesman to help in finding the buyer or lessee or in negotiating the sale or lease.

The second bill, Senate Bill 250, adds as a ground for the revocation or suspension of the license of real estate brokers or salesmen violation of the Oregon Law Against Discrimination, as amended by Senate Bill 249.

Enforcement Procedures

By vesting enforcement in existing state agencies for administration of previously enacted laws against other forms of discrimination, the new laws against discrimination in private housing bring such discrimination within the coverage of procedures already established by the anti-discrimination agencies, namely: preliminary investigation on the basis of a complaint or on the initiative of the agency; efforts to eliminate any revealed discrimination by conciliation; public hearings if this fails, with power to compel testimony and production of records; the issuance of orders enforceable in the courts.

California

On March 16, 1959, the California Assembly passed a bill which prohibits discrimination in public, publicly-assisted or redevelopment housing. The vote was 67 to 9. The Senate acted unanimously on June 15th, but because of several minor amendments, the bill was returned to the lower house for concurrence. Governor Edmund G. Brown has stated that he will sign the bill when it reaches his desk. California thus joined New Jersey, New York and Washington in prohibiting discrimination in housing that receives various forms of governmental aid.

Other Campaigns

Unsuccessful campaigns to pass or strengthen laws against discrimination in housing were waged in Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Washington. In fact, 1959 saw more activity in the state legislatures on the subject of discrimination in housing than in any prior year.

Fair Employment Practices Laws

California

On April 16, 1959, Governor Edmund G. Brown of California signed into law Assembly Bill 91 which had passed both houses of the bicameral legislature by large majorities. The statute declares the opportunity to seek, obtain and hold employment without discrimination based on race, religious creed, color, national origin or ancestry to be "a civil right" and prohibits employers of five or more persons, labor organizations, employment agencies and political subdivisions of the state from discriminating in employment. A five-member Fair Employment Practice Commission, within the Labor Department, is empowered to receive, investigate and pass upon complaints, hold hearings, subpoena witnesses, administer oaths and require the production of books and records relating to any matter under investigation. The Commission is also given power to initiate investigations on its own motion.

Complaints may be filed by any person claiming to be aggrieved or by the State Attorney General. The law prescribes the usual procedure, after preliminary investigation, of attempts to eliminate unfair practice "by conference, conciliation and persuasion," public hearing if such efforts fail, and issuance of cease and desist orders including "such affirmative action, including (but not limited to) hiring, reinstatement or upgrading of employees, with or without pay, or restoration to membership in any respondent labor organization, as, in the judgment of the Commission will effectuate" the purposes of the act. Cease and desist orders of the Commission are reviewable by the courts under the State Administrative Procedures Act, and the Commission may apply to the state court for an order enjoining any respondent from violating Commission mandates.

An effort is under way to force a referendum on this law. The sponsors of this referendum would have to obtain 262,789 valid signatures on petitions within a 90-day period after the State Legislature adjourns. Governor Brown has stated that if this campaign is successful and the FEP Law appears on the ballot for a referendum, he will "stump the state" in opposition to repeal.

Ohio

On April 19, 1959, Governor Michael V. DiSalle of Ohio signed into law Senate Bill No. 10, which had passed the Senate on February 18, 1959 by a vote of 25-6 and was adopted, with some amendments, by the House on April 15, 1959 by a vote of 98-31. In signing the bill, Governor DiSalle commented that it seemed > incongruous that in a nation that has prided itself on the achievement of democratic principles of equality, that in the latter part of the Twentieth Century it is still necessary to adopt legislation guaranteeing to individuals equal opportunities for employment. . . . Judicially administered, this law will not be a tool for persecution but will, in effect, protect and further mutual objectives of those who believe in the oldest of our traditions—equality before the law and equality in opportunity.

The law is essentially similar to the California statute. It applies to employers of four or more persons, labor organizations, employment agencies and political subdivisions of the State. It creates a five-member Ohio Civil Rights Commission, with the same powers and responsibilities as the California commission.

Every person subject to the provisions of the act is required to post conspicuously a notice setting forth the major provisions of the FEP Law and its administration. The Ohio law, like the Michigan and Rhode Island FEP Laws, contains a prohibition against job seekers' specifying their race, religion, color or national origin in advertisements.

Missouri

Although Missouri failed to enact an FEP law, the legislature did pass H.B. 123 which prohibits discrimination in state employment. It passed the House on March 11, 1959 by a vote of 99 to 1 and the Senate on May 18. The upper chamber struck from the bill the criminal sanctions and, after the House concurred in the Senate version, Governor James T. Blair signed the bill into law on June 8, 1959.

Other Actions

The Connecticut legislature vested authority in the State Civil Rights Commission to issue affirmative relief orders in all tyes of cases under its jurisdiction, including employment discrimination cases. Governor Abraham A. Ribicoff signed the bill into law on June 2, 1959. Included in the bill was a reduction of the statute of limitations from six months to ninety days.

New Mexico strengthened its Fair Employment Practice Law by adding criminal sanctions against discrimination if committed by persons expending public funds. Oregon and Connecticut joined Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and New York in prohibiting discrimination because of age and assigning enforcement jurisdiction to their existing administrative agencies.

Unsuccessful campaigns to pass or strengthen laws against discrimination in employment were waged in Arizona, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Maine, Nebraska, Nevada, South Dakota, Washington and Wisconsin.

Public Accommodations

Maine

On May 8, 1959, Governor Clinton A. Clauson signed into law a bill to prohibit discrimination because of race, color, religious creed, ancestry or national origin in places of public accommodation, resort or amusement. The bill passed the House of Representatives on April 17, 1959 by a vote of 112 to 12 and the Senate unanimously on May 6. While Maine previously prohibited discriminatory advertising by places of public accommodation, it did not prohibit actual discrimination.

The new law defines a place of public accommodation, resort or amusement as > any establishment which caters or offers its services, facilities or goods to, or solicits patronage from the members of the general public, including but not limited to any inn, whether conducted for the entertainment, housing or lodging of transient guests, or for the benefit, use or accommodation of those seeking health, recreation or rest, any restaurant, eating house, public conveyance on land or water, bathhouse, barber shop, theater, music hall and any retail store.

Violations are criminal offenses punishable by the courts in the case of first offenders by fines up to $100 or imprisonment up to 30 days, and for subsequent offenses by fines up to $500 or imprisonment up to 30 days.

California

California broadened its conventional civil rights statute by making it applicable to all business establishments and to professional and vocational schools. The new law also adds "religion, ancestry and national origin" to color and race as prohibited grounds for discrimination. Two other bills, to authorize suspension or revocation of trade and professional licenses in cases of a persistent course of discriminatory conduct by the licensee and to permit revocation or suspension of alcoholic beverage licenses for willful or repeated violations of the civil rights law, were killed in the Senate.

Other States

The powers of the Connecticut Civil Rights Commission were broadened to permit it to initiate complaints in cases involving discrimination in places of public accommodation. Kansas amended its civil rights law by eliminating some archaic language (stage coach) and adding "religion, national origin and ancestry" to race and color as the prohibited grounds of discrimination.

Efforts to pass or strengthen public accommodation laws were unsuccessful in Arizona, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Miscellaneous

Measures repealing statutory bans on interracial marriages were passed in Idaho, Nevada and California.

A Florida law permitting absentee voting rights to any person who "on account of the tenets of his religion" cannot cast his ballot on Election Day was signed June 2 by Governor LeRoy Collins.

The Missouri Commission on Civil Rights was made a permanent agency of the state government when Governor James T. Blair signed H.B. 266 into law early in June, 1959.

Questions about race, religion, color and national origin were outlawed from credit application forms of banks, loan companies, insurance companies and other financial institutions in Washington. Governor Albert Rosellini signed H.B. 171 into law on March 3, 1959.

Failing of passage were bills in Illinois to authorize city boards of education to "change or revise existing sub-districts or create new sub-districts in a manner to promote integration and to eliminate the separation of children in public schools because of color, race or nationality"; in Oregon to prohibit discrimination by college fraternities, sororities, student housing cooperatives or student living organizations; in Pennsylvania to prohibit discrimination in private and public colleges and universities and establish a Fair Educational Opportunities Commission within the State Department of Public Instruction; and in Arizona and Iowa to establish commissions on human relations.

Dear Mr. Spiegler:

I should like very much to review Jack Greenberg's book for the Journal of Intergroup Relations, but unfortunately there's not a chance of my getting a review done in time.

It happens that Dr. Leslie Dunbar of our staff is reviewing the book for our own publication, New South, and expects to have the review done by December 1. He and I would be glad to have you use it concurrently with New South, if you wish. It would not be necessary to treat it as other than a review exclusively for the Journal. Dunbar is a political scientist and really better equipped than I to review a book of this type.

Let me know if you would like to receive Dunbar's manuscript.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Mr. Harold C. Fleming, Exec. Dir.

Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Fleming:

As you perhaps know by now, NAIRO is launching a printed quarterly Journal of Intergroup Relations, the first issue of which is scheduled for January 1960.

The purpose of this letter is to ask you to review for that first printed issue of the Journal the just published book by Jack Greenberg, "Race Relations and American Law."

My copy deadline for the January issue is December 1. However, I can extend that deadline for a week or ten days on the strength of a firm assurance that a particular piece of copy would be available. I do hope you can undertake this review. It would be most helpful to the readers of the Journal to have your informed appraisal of the book.

If you should find that you are unable to undertake this assignment - but, please only if you are really quite unable to do so - perhaps you would suggest somebody else whom I might ask; perhaps a member of your own Board, or a colleague.

If you can do it yourself, and do not have a copy of the book, we shall get one for you, to keep as a permanent part of your library. An early favorable response would be much appreciated.

Cordially yours,

Samuel Spiegler

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Several members of NAIRO have given me enthusiastic reports of the speech you made at the recent NAIRO Conference in Washington. To my delight, John Lassoe tells me that you have signified your willingness to prepare this speech, with revisions bringing it up to date, for publication as an article in the Journal of Intergroup Relations. I write to urge you to do so.

If possible, I should like to have the piece for publication in the Autumn 1960 issue. Copy deadline for that issue is September 1. Next copy deadline after that would be November 15 for the Winter 1960-61 issue.

Won't you please write that I can expect your article for the earlier of those two deadlines.

PREFACE

PREPARATION FOR THE JOB, A CONCEPT AS OLD AS WORK ITSELF, IS RECEIVING UNPRECEDENTED EMPHASIS BY MANAGEMENT, LABOR, EDUCATION AND GOVERNMENT TODAY. IT IS BEING BROUGHT MORE SHARPLY AND CRITICALLY INTO FOCUS AS OUR NATION APPROACHES A SECOND SCIENTIFIC-INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION, TYPIFIED BY THE "SPACE AGE." THE COMPLEX OF FEARS, HOPES, AND ASPIRATIONS IN MAN'S FUTURE IS INSEPARABLE FROM WHAT THIS AGE DOES TO PEOPLE, AND ITS IMPACT ON THE DAY-TO-DAY CHALLENGE OF LIVING AND OF EARNING A LIVING.

"GUIDANCE, TRAINING AND APPRENTICESHIP FACTORS AFFECTING MINORITY GROUPS" IS BEING PUBLISHED BECAUSE IT IS SELF-EVIDENT THAT THIS IS THE PRIME AND CRUCIAL SUBJECT IN ANY CONSIDERATION OF THE QUALITY AND QUANTITY OF THE NATION'S PRESENT AND FUTURE MANPOWER RESOURCES.

WITHIN THE PAST TWO DECADES THERE HAS OCCURRED SOME SHIFT OF FOCUS FROM THE PROBLEM OF INITIAL EMPLOYMENT OF MINORITY GROUPS TO THE PROBLEM OF UPGRADING AND PROMOTION. IF WE ARE TO MEET THE CHALLENGE OF THE "SPACE AGE" AND OUR NATION'S ROLE IN WORLD AFFAIRS, WE MUST ACCELERATE THIS PROCESS AND OPEN NEW WORK HORIZONS FOR ALL OF OUR CITIZENS. NEW EMPHASIS MUST BE PLACED ON OVERCOMING THE REMAINING TRADITIONAL BARRIERS TO OCCUPATIONAL MOBILITY AND THEIR SUPPRESSIVE AFFECTS ON INCENTIVE, MOTIVATION AND VOCATIONAL CHOICES OF INDIVIDUALS WHO COMPRISE A LARGE SEGMENT OF OUR FUTURE MANPOWER POTENTIAL.

THE TREATMENT OF THE SUBJECT OF THIS REPORT COMBINES NATIONAL, AS WELL AS LOCAL POINTS OF VIEW AND EXPERIENCES, AND FLOWS FROM THE PROVOCATIVE INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT BY JAMES P. MITCHELL, U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOR. W.C. CHRISTENSEN'S AND J. EDWARD DICKERSON'S CAREFUL LOOKS AT APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING ARE INFORMATIVE AND QUESTIONING. CHARLES UFFORD AND MORRIS RIGER REVEAL TO US WHAT MANAGEMENT AND LABOR ARE THINKING AND DOING. SHELTON GRANGER AND HERMAN MUROV BEAM THEIR CONTRIBUTION TO INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS CONFRONTED WITH THE DELIMITING FORCE OF DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES ON THE VOCATIONAL ATTITUDES AND CHOICES OF NEGROES AND JEWS, WHICH ALSO HAS SIGNIFICANCE FOR ALL OTHER GROUPS.

THIS REPORT, OF NECESSITY LIMITED IN SCOPE AND DETAIL, REPRESENTS EXPERIENCE. IT HAS BEEN OUR HOPE TO OVERCOME KNOWN SHORTCOMINGS BY INVITING RECOGNIZED PRACTITIONERS IN THE FIELD TO AUTHOR ITS CONTENTS. TO EACH OF THE AUTHORS WE EXTEND OUR WARM GRATITUDE FOR MAKING THIS EFFORT A REALITY.

I WOULD LIKE TO EXPRESS MY SINCERE APPRECIATION TO: THE MEMBERS OF THE NAIRO COMMISSION FOR THEIR COUNSEL AND ASSISTANCE; ELI GINSBERG FOR MANY HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS AND PERMISSION TO QUOTE LIBERALLY FROM HIS BOOK, "THE NEGRO POTENTIAL;" ABRAHAM FEINBERG FOR HIS CRITICAL APPRAISAL OF THE FORMAT; MRS. SHIRLEY JACKSON FOR ESSENTIAL SECRETARIAL ASSISTANCE; JAMES R. TICHENOR, FORMER ADMINISTRATOR, OHIO BUREAU OF UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION, FOR HIS CONTINUED INTEREST IN THIS SUBJECT, MAKING IT POSSIBLE FOR THE CHAIRMAN TO SERVE; AND TO MANY OTHERS, TOO NUMEROUS TO MENTION HERE, WHO CONTRIBUTED TO THIS REPORT.

C. J. G.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
FEBRUARY, 1960

THE NATIONAL NEED FOR INTELLIGENT USE OF TOTAL MANPOWER POTENTIAL; ITS RELATIONSHIP TO PEACE, SECURITY, ECONOMIC GROWTH AND SURVIVAL

BY

THE HONORABLE JAMES P. MITCHELL
U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOR
WASHINGTON, D. C.

THE SINGLE ISSUE THAT MOST CLEARLY DIVIDES THE WORLD INTO TWO CONTESTING SYSTEMS IS THAT OF THE DIGNITY OF THE INDIVIDUAL HUMAN BEING, A PHRASE THAT CAN MEAN MANY THINGS. WE OF THE WEST HOLD IT IN ITS TRADITIONAL MEANING OF INDIVIDUAL WORTH AND VALUE BASED UPON THE NATURE OF MAN. WE HAVE A PROUD HERITAGE OF DEVOTION TO THAT IDEAL, A HERITAGE ROOTED IN OUR EARLY HISTORY WHEN HUMAN DIGNITY MEANT EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR INDEPENDENCE, FOR LIBERTY AND FOR THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

NOW THERE ARE NEW TESTS THAT OUR COUNTRY FACES TO MAINTAIN ITS IDEAL OF INDIVIDUAL DIGNITY. THE OPEN ROAD AND THE WIDE LAND ARE NO LONGER THE DOMINANT ANSWER TO OPPORTUNITY.

THE OLD NATIONAL ROAD TO THE WEST, THE OLD HOMESTEAD ACT, FIND THEIR EQUIVALENTS IN EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITY IN ALL OUR PLANTS AND OFFICES AND MILLS AND MINES AND SHIPS. THE ROAD TO NEW OPPORTUNITY IS NO LONGER A GEOGRAPHIC LINE ON A MAP; IT RUNS THROUGH THE PLANT GATE TO THE HIRING OFFICE, AND IT MAY END IN THE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE.

BUT WE ALL KNOW IT HAS BARRIERS, DETOURS, "DO NOT ENTER" SIGNS FOR MANY THOUSANDS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS WHO HOPE TO TRAVEL DOWN IT. IT WAS NOT LONG AGO THAT JEWS AND IRISH IMMIGRANTS FACED THESE SIGNS. TODAY THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH, AND IN SOME NORTHERN COMMUNITIES; THE PUERTO RICAN ON THE EAST COAST; THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL ON THE WEST COAST; THE AMERICAN INDIAN -- THESE STAND BY THE WAYSIDE, WATCHING THE PARADE OF AMERICAN PROGRESS GO BY. THEIR PRESENCE IS ENOUGH TO MAKE US SUSPECT THAT WHAT WE SAY ABOUT AMERICA AND WHAT WE DO ABOUT IT ARE SOMETIMES TWO DIFFERENT THINGS. YET THIS DISCRIMINATION IS INTOLERABLE, NOT ONLY FROM MORAL BUT FOR ECONOMIC REASONS AS WELL, REASONS THAT CAN BE PROVEN DOWN TO THE LAST DECIMAL POINT.

ECONOMICALLY, WE CANNOT SUPPORT OUR STANDARD OF LIVING FOR AN EXPLODING POPULATION, AND MAINTAIN AN ADEQUATE DEFENSE, WITHOUT MAKING USE OF ALL OUR HUMAN RESOURCES. WE NEED ALL THE TALENT, ALL THE SKILL WE CAN MUSTER, AND WE NEED TO DEVELOP IT NOW.

CONSIDER THE FIGURES:

THERE ARE 100 MILLION MORE PEOPLE IN THIS COUNTRY THAN THERE WERE IN 1900. MORE THAN 50 MILLION CHILDREN HAVE BEEN BORN SINCE WORLD WAR 11. BY 1970, THERE WILL BE 210 MILLION AMERICANS.

NOW, NOTE THIS FACT:

IN 1970, THERE WILL BE 20 MILLION PEOPLE IN THIS COUNTRY OVER 65 YEARS OF AGE. THAT IS A TREMENDOUS NUMBER OF PEOPLE NOT IN THE MOST PRODUCTIVE AGE GROUP. AT THE SAME TIME, BECAUSE OUR BIRTH RATE WAS VERY LOW DURING THE DEPRESSION YEARS OF THE 1930'S THERE WILL ACTUALLY BE NEARLY 2 MILLION FEWER 20 TO 29 YEAR-OLDS IN OUR MALE POPULATION IN THE 1960'S THAN THERE ARE NOW.

CONSIDER WHAT THAT MEANS IN TERMS OF NEED FOR SKILLED MANPOWER, FOR REVIEWING OUR PERSONNEL POLICIES IN REGARD TO OLDER MEN AND WOMEN.

BUT THAT ISN'T ALL THE STORY. WITHIN THOSE STATISTICS THERE ARE IMPORTANT CURRENTS AND CHANGES WHICH PUT AN EVEN HEAVIER STRAIN ON OUR SUPPLY OF TRAINED, EDUCATED MANPOWER.

THE COMPOSITION OF THE WORKFORCE IS CHANGING. WE ARE NEEDING FEWER UNSKILLED LABORERS; IN FACT, WE WILL NEED NO MORE TO DO ALL THE ESSENTIAL JOBS IN THE 60'S THAN WE HAVE TODAY. BUT WE'LL NEED 50% MORE PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL WORKERS, 30% MORE CRAFTSMEN, AND 30% MORE SEMI-SKILLED WORKERS.

THOSE ARE THE FIGURES: TO SUSTAIN OUR PRESENT STANDARD OF LIVING, TO SAY NOTHING OF MOBILIZING BETTER THE HUMAN RESOURCES WE HAVE IN A HIGHLY-COMPETITIVE WORLD, WE MUST START NOW TO TRAIN AND EDUCATE ALL OUR YOUNG PEOPLE, WHATEVER THE COLOR, WHEREVER THEIR PARENTS WERE BORN, WHEREVER THEY MAY WORSHIP, BECAUSE WE CANNOT BE WITHOUT THEM.

THE LOW BIRTH RATE OF THE 1930'S HAS PRODUCED A GENERATION WHICH WILL BE ABLE TO PRODUCE ENOUGH GOODS AND SERVICES FOR A MUCH LARGER POPULATION ONLY IF IT IS FULLY USED, ONLY IF WE WASTE NONE OF OUR HUMAN RESOURCES. THAT IS A PRACTICAL ARGUMENT WHICH SHOULD SATISFY EVEN THOSE WHO HAVE NO PATIENCE WITH HISTORY...OR WITH HUMANITY...OR WITH RELIGION.

BUT ALTHOUGH THIS PRACTICAL ARGUMENT IS A COMPELLING AND CONVINCING ONE, OUR STAKE IN BROADER OPPORTUNITY IS MUCH LARGER AND MUCH MORE ESSENTIAL TO AMERICA ON ANOTHER LEVEL, AND ONE THAT IS DIFFICULT TO DOCUMENT.

IN THE WORLD TODAY THERE ARE 20 NEW NATIONS UNDER THE SUN. THEY ARE SOMETHING NEW TO HISTORY -- AND THEY ARE GOING THROUGH A MEASURING-UP AND SIZING PROCESS, MAKING A CAREFUL ESTIMATE OF THE VALUE OF FRIENDSHIP, ESPECIALLY WHEN IT COMES TO THE TWO MOST INFLUENTIAL MEMBERS OF THE COMMUNITY OF NATIONS, RUSSIA AND OURSELVES.

HOW DO WE LOOK TO THEM?

DO WE LOOK LIKE A SOCIETY TOP-HEAVY WITH THE CHOSEN AND PREFERRED? DO WE LOOK LIKE A SOCIETY THAT MAKES MARVELOUS PROGRESS AT THE EXPENSE OF THE LEAST OF US?

IN A WORLD IN WHICH THE EDUCATED, OPULENT WHITE MAN IS IN THE SMALL MINORITY, JUST HOW FAR DO WE EXPECT A SOCIETY TO BE HONORED THAT HONORS HIM TO THE EXCLUSION OF OTHERS?

IT IS AGAINST THAT BACKGROUND OF WORLD AWAKENING AND OF DOMESTIC ECONOMIC NEED THAT THE TRUE STATURE OF THE OPPORTUNITY PROBLEM IN OUR NATION MUST BE MEASURED. THE CHANCE TO LIVE A DECENT COMFORTABLE LIFE, TO ENJOY THE PRODUCTS OF INDUSTRY AND AGRICULTURE, TO HAVE THE PROTECTION OF MEDICINE AND SAVINGS, TO HAVE OPEN ACCESS TO THE BENEFITS OF EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT, AND TO WORSHIP IN THE MANNER THAT THE CONSCIENCE DICTATES -- THAT IS WHAT THE STRUGGLE FOR THE WORLD IS ALL ABOUT. THAT IS WHAT IT BOILS DOWN TO, AS AN ASPIRATION ONLY FOR MANY MANY MILLIONS, AND AS A REALITY FOR A FEW LUCKY ONES. HOW WE CONDUCT OURSELVES IN THE PURSUIT OF THESE GOALS, WHETHER SELFISHLY OR SELFLESSLY, IS THE MOST IMPORTANT DECISION FACING AMERICA TODAY.

ONE MIGHT THINK THAT THERE ARE FEW OCCASIONS FOR A PRACTICAL PURSUIT OF OUR DUTY; AS A MATTER OF FACT, ALMOST EVERY DAY IS AN OCCASION.

A GREAT NUMBER OF WRITERS HAVE, FOR A LONG NUMBER OF YEARS NOW, TRIED TO WRITE ABOUT WHAT THEY CALL "THE AMERICAN EXPERIENCE" -- TRYING TO DEFINE IT, TO ANALYZE IT, TO PICTURE IT. I THINK, IN THE END, IT IS THIS -- A FEELING OF RESPECT FOR EACH AND EVERY FELLOW HUMAN BEING, KNOWING IN OUR HEARTS THAT THERE REALLY IS SOMETHING GOING ON IN SPACE AND TIME WHICH HAS TO DO WITH THE HUMAN SPIRIT, AND KNOWING IN OUR HEARTS THAT WE HAVE A DUTY BECAUSE OF IT.

THE ROLE OF THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING IN TODAY'S ECONOMY

BY

W.C. CHRISTENSEN, DIRECTOR
BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

TRAINED MANPOWER IS THE INVESTMENT WE MUST MAKE TO ASSURE OUR COUNTRY'S FUTURE.

THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING IS THE AGENCY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR CHARGED WITH THE RESPONSIBILITY OF ENCOURAGING MANAGEMENT AND LABOR TO FORMULATE AND OPERATE ON-THE-JOB TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR EMPLOYED WORKERS. IN NO INSTANCE DOES THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING CONDUCT APPRENTICESHIP OR TRAINING PROGRAMS. IT IS STRICTLY A PROMOTIONAL AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AGENCY.

THE OVERALL OBJECTIVES OF THE BUREAU ARE TWO-FOLD:

TO HELP ACHIEVE, THROUGH COOPERATIVE EFFORT, AN ADEQUATE, SKILLED AND VERSATILE WORK FORCE THAT WILL MEET CURRENT NEEDS FOR SKILLED WORKMEN AND THE NEEDS OF FUTURE ECONOMIC CONDITIONS, TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS AND NATIONAL SECURITY, AND INCREASE JOB OPPORTUNITIES, EARNING ABILITY, AND THE SECURITY OF THE INDIVIDUAL WORKER.

SECONDLY, TO STIMULATE THOSE RESPONSIBLE FOR TRAINING TO PROVIDE EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL QUALIFIED INDIVIDUALS TO ACQUIRE SKILLS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, CREED, SEX, AGE, OR PHYSICAL HANDICAPS.

SPECIFICALLY, THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING DEVELOPS AND IMPROVES TECHNIQUES WHICH WILL MORE ACCURATELY MEASURE FUTURE APPRENTICESHIP AND MANPOWER REQUIREMENTS ON A NATIONAL, INDUSTRIAL AND COMMUNITY BASIS.

IT PROMOTES MORE WIDESPREAD USE OF EFFECTIVE TECHNIQUES WHICH WILL ASSIST IN THE SELECTION AND EMPLOYMENT OF WORKERS.

IT MAKES AVAILABLE TO POTENTIAL USERS INFORMATION RELATING TO PROSPECTIVE APPRENTICESHIP AND MANPOWER REQUIREMENTS, OCCUPATIONAL OUTLOOK, AND COUNSELING TECHNIQUES; AND PROCEDURES WHICH WILL AID EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS IN PLANNING CURRICULA; MANAGEMENT AND LABOR IN PLANNING APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING PROGRAMS; PARENTS, TEACHERS AND COUNSELORS IN ADVISING YOUTH; AND INDIVIDUALS IN THEIR OCCUPATIONAL PLANNING.

THE BUREAU ENCOURAGES COMMUNITIES TO SURVEY THEIR APPRENTICESHIP AND MANPOWER NEEDS IN ORDER TO HAVE A SOUND BASIS FOR PROVIDING ADEQUATE EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES, VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE, SELECTIVE PLACEMENT SERVICES AND TO ASSIST IN DEVELOPING SOUND EDUCATIONAL AND TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL INDIVIDUALS.

IT ENCOURAGES THOSE RESPONSIBLE FOR APPRENTICESHIP AND SKILL DEVELOPMENT IN ALL INDUSTRIES TO DETERMINE THEIR OWN FUTURE APPRENTICESHIP AND MANPOWER REQUIREMENTS IN ORDER TO HAVE A SOUND BASIS FOR ACTION.

THE BUREAU PROMOTES EFFECTIVE APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING BY STUDYING THE QUANTITY AND QUALITY OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING IN INDUSTRY; ORGANIZES AND PROMOTES RESEARCH ON EFFECTIVE TRAINING PRACTICES; ENCOURAGES THE USE OF THE MOST EFFECTIVE METHODS IN APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING PRACTICES; DEVELOPS AND PROMOTES SERVICES TO ASSIST MANAGEMENT AND LABOR IN DETERMINING TRAINING NEEDS, AND IN DEVELOPING, ORGANIZING AND OPERATING APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING PROGRAMS.

It also promotes the cooperation of Federal, State and local agencies in the field of manpower so that they will complement each other to contribute to a common goal. It assists state agencies and educational institutions to develop and provide services for apprenticeship programs which are flexible and acceptable to labor and management with a minimum of regulation.

Finally, the Bureau specifically stimulates national, state and local organizations and groups to give active support to effective training programs so that a greater proportion of skilled workers achieve knowledge and skill through sound apprenticeship and training programs.

The apprentice, for purposes of the Bureau's program objective, is an employed worker who is learning a recognized skilled trade, listed by the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training as an apprenticeable occupation, according to a written or implied apprenticeship agreement. This provides for two or more years of carefully planned, progressive training and experience on the job, supplemented by related trade instruction.

In carrying out its objectives the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training performs the following functions:

Indicates the need for apprenticeship and training, not only nationally but with local cooperation in particular areas.

Stimulates business and industry to analyze their own special and individual skilled manpower needs, currently and in the future, in the expectation that they will do something to meet these needs.

Provides technical assistance, training aids and materials to industry where it is necessary and within the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training's available resources.

Conducts research studies to determine the need for specific skills. It endeavors to make the public aware of the need for apprenticeship and training.

Encourages national employer and labor organizations to adopt policies and procedures to create a favorable climate for the development of apprenticeship and skill improvement systems. It works with management and labor unions, State apprenticeship agencies, the schools and community groups to develop the organizational machinery for training and apprenticeship systems. Through its technical staff, it develops training aids and other techniques to increase the effectiveness of apprenticeship and training and serves as a clearing house for training materials.

Over 85 percent of the 500 employees of the Bureau are in field offices in the United States and Hawaii. Twelve Regional Offices are located in Boston; New York City; Chambersburg, Pa.; Atlanta, Ga.; Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Kansas City, Mo.; Dallas, Texas; Denver, Colo.; San Francisco, Calif.; and Seattle, Wash. Local Bureau representatives provide direct technical assistance to employers and employee organizations, both individually and jointly, on training problems, and seek to create an awareness among the public of the need and opportunities for industrial training.

During 1958, a total of 84,731 establishments received service as did 6,813 joint apprenticeship committees, which groups have equal representation from management and labor and administer apprentice training programs. This service included technical assistance to 18,089 firms and, in setting up and maintaining training programs for journeymen in new processes and methods, to 1,207 joint apprenticeship committees.

The International Branch of the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training observed its 10th anniversary in 1958. In cooperation with the International Cooperation Administration and the Office of International Labor Affairs, it programmed trainees from 28 different countries during that 10-year period. Through this program, some 700 foreign nationals spent from three months to a year studying training methods in American industry.

The Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training is making every effort to promote training and the improvement of training in those fields where there is the greatest need. For this reason it has conducted a number of national surveys. These were done in cooperation with management associations, union organizations and educational institutions.

The National Foundry Advisory Committee cooperated closely in a survey in that industry which disclosed that the greatest need is for training in small foundries. As a result, the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training will develop guide lines for pilot programs in three foundry centers directed toward community-wide approaches to solve training problems.

A survey in the Electrical Contracting Industry had excellent support from the industry. Findings were analyzed by the National Joint Apprenticeship and Training Committee for the Electrical Industry and by the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training, and have been published.

The National Tool and Die Manufacturers Association suggested a pilot project in that industry, and it was conducted in Chicago. A joint employer-Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training approach to sell apprenticeship proved successful, and the National Association had its 23 affiliated groups work with the Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training in a nation-wide project. Results will be published in the fall.

A similar survey in the Aircraft Industry is now underway.

The Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training is also attempting through community information programs to make the public aware of the need for more skilled workers.

The Bureau has opened five Training Materials Centers in central locations to provide industry with examples of effective training programs. Each center has approximately 300 samples of training materials, mostly obtained from the Department of Defense but to add to from time to time by private industry. Centers are located in public libraries in Phoenix, Arizona; Bridgeport, Connecticut; Toledo, Ohio; and Dallas, Texas; and in the business office of the American Society of Training Directors in Madison, Wisconsin. One will open at an early date in the St. Louis, Missouri, Public Library.

We are living in an age of atomic energy, of space, and of constantly changing materials and methods -- all of which are having a lasting effect on our industries and skill requirements. New plants, new techniques, new products, entirely new industries are coming into existence with each calling for new knowledgeand new skills.

Recently President Eisenhower told a group of scientists: "We must search out the talented individual and cultivate in all American life a heightened appreciation of the importance of excellence and high standards ... We must be willing to match our increasing investments in material resources with increasing investments in men."

No longer can companies invest only in buildings and equipment and overlook their most important assets, their employees. People are of inestimable value. Employees must be encouraged to better themselves by continuing their education. Supervisors must increase their knowledge, as must management. New employees must be orientated and acquainted with specialized subjects related to their work. In short, it will pay DIVIDENDS TO ALL CONCERNED TO RAISE THE LEVEL OF SKILLS OF ALL EMPLOYEES.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF SKILLED MANPOWER IN THE UNITED STATES IS URGENT FROM THE STANDPOINT OF BOTH DEFENSE AND ECONOMIC GROWTH.

IN CONTRAST TO OUR TRAINING OF TECHNICIANS, THE SOVIETS HAVE A LONG HISTORY OF FORMAL AND SYSTEMATIC TRAINING OF SUCH PERSONNEL FOR THEIR INDUSTRIAL LABOR FORCE. JUST AS THE RUSSIAN LEADERS PLANNED FOR THE PRODUCTION OF SELECTED PRODUCTS FOR INDUSTRIAL USE, THEY PLANNED FOR THE PREPARATION, TRAINING AND UTILIZATION OF TECHNICIANS. AT PRESENT, IT IS BELIEVED, THEY ARE TRAINING AT LEAST NINE TIMES AS MANY TECHNICIANS AS ARE BEING GRADUATED FROM TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN THE UNITED STATES. TODAY WE HAVE NO FORMAL RECRUITING OR TRAINING PROGRAM COMPARABLE TO THAT USED IN RUSSIA.

POPULATION ESTIMATES OF 193 MILLION PERSONS IN THIS COUNTRY IN 1965 CARRY WITH THEM A REQUIREMENT OF ABOUT A 40% INCREASE IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT, ASSUMING ONLY A MODEST RISE IN PER CAPITA CONSUMPTION AND THE STANDARD OF LIVING. THIS MEANS DEVELOPMENT OF SKILLS TODAY TO PRODUCE THE WARES THIS INCREASED POPULATION WILL DEMAND.

IN THIS DAY OF TECHNOLOGIES THAT BECOME OUT-DATED OVERNIGHT, IT IS DIFFICULT TO PREDICT THE FUTURE FOR ANY OCCUPATIONAL CATEGORY. THE INDIVIDUAL MUST ACQUIRE VERSATILE FUNDAMENTAL TRAINING THAT WILL ENABLE HIM TO MOVE BACK AND FORTH ACROSS SPECIFIC OCCUPATIONAL LINES.

TRAINING IS NOT A MATTER OF A FEW SHORT MONTHS, BUT OF YEARS. IT IS A LONG-TERM UNDERTAKING. SO WE NEED THE LEAD-TIME TO TRAIN. CRASH PROGRAMS DO NOT PAY OFF IN SKILL DEVELOPMENT.

THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING RECOMMENDS THAT EVERY EMPLOYER DEVELOP A DEFINITE TRAINING POLICY AND ESTABLISH THE ORGANIZATIONAL MACHINERY NECESSARY TO MAKE THE POLICY EFFECTIVE. EMPLOYERS ARE URGED TO ASSIGN DEFINITE RESPONSIBILITY TO A PARTICULAR OFFICIAL FOR PLANNING AND ADMINISTERING THE TRAINING PROGRAM AND TO EMPLOY FULL-TIME TRAINING DIRECTORS WHENEVER PRACTICABLE.

NOW IS THE TIME TO TRAIN FOR TODAY AND TOMORROW. NOW IS THE TIME TO REVIEW EXISTING PROGRAMS AT ALL LEVELS, TO DETERMINE FUTURE NEEDS, TO PLAN NEW PROGRAMS AND PLACE SOUND PROGRAMS IN OPERATION. PLANNED TRAINING GUARANTEES AN ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF SKILLED WORKERS VERSED IN EFFICIENT METHODS OF PRODUCTION. PLANNED TRAINING DECREASES PRODUCTION COSTS BY REDUCING WASTE. PLANNED TRAINING ASSURES CUSTOMERS OF HIGH-QUALITY PRODUCTS. PLANNED TRAINING PROVIDES OPPORTUNITIES FOR ADVANCEMENT TENDING TO DECREASE FREQUENCY OF HIRING AND REHIRING. PLANNED TRAINING DEVELOPS ABILITY AND INITIATIVE OF THE WORK FORCE AND CUTS DOWN ON SUPERVISION. PLANNED TRAINING PRODUCES A SOURCE OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM WHICH TO DRAW FOR FUTURE SUPERVISORY PERSONNEL.

THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING IS USING EVERY POSSIBLE PROMOTIONAL MEANS TO HELP THE NATION PREPARE FOR A CONSTANT GROWING DEMAND FOR TALENTS OF ALL VARIETIES. AS A NATION WE MUST ATTEMPT TO MEET SPECIFIC NEEDS OF THE FUTURE BY IMPROVING THE QUALITY AND VERSATILITY OF ALL GIFTED INDIVIDUALS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, CREED, SEX, AGE, OR PHYSICAL HANDICAPS.

APPRAISAL OF LIMITATIONS AND POTENTIALS OF APPRENTICESHIP: HOW CAN VOLUNTARY AGENCIES HELP IMPLEMENT GOVERNMENT TRAINING PROGRAMS

BY

J. EDWARD DICKERSON

INTRODUCTION

ACCORDING TO AN ARTICLE PUBLISHED IN THE JUNE, 1956, ISSUE OF NATION'S BUSINESS, AMERICAN INDUSTRY WILL NEED 79 MILLION WORKERS BY 1965. THIS IS 8 MILLION MORE THAN IT NOW HAS.

THE CONSENSUS AMONG PERSONS WHO HAVE GIVEN THOUGHT TO AMERICA'S MANPOWER NEEDS IN THE NEXT DECADE IS THAT THESE WILL BE GREAT IN TERMS OF BOTH NUMBERS AND QUALITY. FURTHERMORE, IT IS AGREED THAT THE RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF OCCUPATIONAL GROUPS WILL BE ALTERED AND THAT THE MOST SUITABLE SOURCE OF SUPPLY LIES IN APPRENTICESHIPS.

THE PURPOSE OF THIS PAPER IS THEN TWO-FOLD: FIRST, A CRITICAL APPRAISAL OF THE LIMITATIONS AND POTENTIALS OF THE APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS AS THEY CURRENTLY FUNCTION. SECOND, AN EXAMINATION OF THE ROLE OF VOLUNTARY AGENCIES IN THE OPERATION OF THESE APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PROGRAMS.

THE AUTHOR'S REFLECTIONS ARE BASED MAINLY ON INTERVIEWS HELD WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF LABOR, MANAGEMENT, THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING, THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM AND COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS IN THE CLEVELAND AREA. EVEN THOUGH THE DATA SUPPORTING THE STUDY ARE EXTREMELY LIMITED AND NARROW, GEOGRAPHICALLY SPEAKING, IT IS THE AUTHOR'S OPINION THAT THE IMPRESSIONS SET FORTH HEREIN ARE MORE OR LESS APPLICABLE TO ANY METROPOLITAN AREA COMPARABLE TO CLEVELAND IN SIZE AND INDUSTRY.

IT WAS THE HOPE OF THE COMMISSION ON MANPOWER UTILIZATION THAT THE SCOPE OF THIS TREATISE WOULD BE PREDICATED ON DATA OBTAINED OVER A WIDER GEOGRAPHICAL AREA. THIS WAS NOT TO BE, HOWEVER. THE PERSONS RESIDING IN THE SEVERAL GEOGRAPHICAL DIVISIONS OF THE UNITED STATES, TO WHOM WE APPEALED FOR ASSISTANCE IN GATHERING OUR DATA, RESPONDED IN ONLY ONE CASE. THIS DEARTH OF RESPONSES MIGHT BE INTERPRETED IN ONE OF TWO WAYS: EITHER THE PERSONS CONTACTED WERE NOT CLOSE ENOUGH TO THE SUBJECT TO KNOW HOW TO PROCEED OR THEY FOUND THE INFORMATION TO BE UNAVAILABLE.

OUR INTERVIEWS WERE DESIGNED TO ELICIT INFORMATION PERTAINING TO THE FOLLOWING: APPRENTICESHIP QUALIFICATIONS, APPLICATION PROCEDURES FOR APPRENTICESHIPS, APPRENTICESHIP OPPORTUNITIES AVAILABLE FOR MINORITY GROUP MEMBERS, THE ADEQUACY OF THE PRESENT APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM IN TERMS OF INDUSTRY'S FUTURE NEEDS, AND THE ROLE OF VOLUNTARY AGENCIES IN OPERATIONS OF THE APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM.

FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS

ANY FORECAST OF THE FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY, IF IT IS TO BE REASONABLY DEPENDABLE, MUST GIVE CONSIDERATION TO SUCH FACTORS AS CHANGES IN THE RELATIVE MAGNITUDE OF THE SEVERAL CLASSES OF OCCUPATIONAL SKILLS, THE REPLACEMENT OF WORKERS LOST TO INDUSTRY THROUGH DEATH OR RETIREMENT, THE NEW OCCUPATIONS ARISING FROM TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE, AND THE SHIFTING AGE DISTRIBUTION OF THE WHITE POPULATION.

IN 1910, THIRTY PERCENT OF THE LABOR FORCE WAS UNSKILLED. IN CONTRAST, THE GROUPS COMPRISING THE SKILLED AND SEMI-SKILLED CONSTITUTED 26.4 PERCENT. BY 1950, THEIR RESPECTIVE PROPORTIONS IN THE TOTAL LABOR FORCE WERE 13 PERCENT AND 33.7 PERCENT. WHEREAS THE AGGREGATE INCREASE OF SKILLED AND SEMI-SKILLED IN THE TOTAL LABOR FORCE WAS 7.3 PERCENT, THE ACTUAL INCREASE OF THIS COMBINATION WAS 27 PERCENT. THE UNSKILLED, ON THE OTHER HAND, DECREASED BY 43 PERCENT.

THE DEMAND FOR PROFESSIONAL, TECHNICAL AND CLERICAL WORKERS DURING THE PAST 15 OR 20 YEARS HAS ALSO INCREASED AT AN EXPANDING RATE.

THE OCCUPATIONAL PLANNING COMMITTEE OF THE CLEVELAND WELFARE FEDERATION CONDUCTED, DURING THE FIRST QUARTER OF 1959, A SURVEY OF THE JOB NEEDS OF CLEVELAND INDUSTRY IN THE NEXT DECADE. THE STUDY, "A SURVEY OF OCCUPATIONAL SKILLS IN THE CLEVELAND AREA", STATES, IN PART: "IT IS APPARENT THAT A NEW DIMENSION HAS BEEN ADDED TO OUR LOCAL MANPOWER PROBLEM -- THE QUALITY OF THE LABOR FORCE. TECHNOLOGICAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THE NEXT FIVE YEARS WILL DEMAND A LABOR FORCE POSSESSING A HIGHER DEGREE OF SKILL AND CREATIVENESS, WITH DECLINING EMPHASIS ON THE NEED FOR UNSKILLED AND SEMI-SKILLED HELP."

RECOGNITION OF MANPOWER NEEDS THAT RESULT FROM AN EXPANDING DEMAND BASED ON SHIFTS IN THE RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF THE SEVERAL OCCUPATIONAL SKILLS IS NOT ENOUGH. CONSIDERATION MUST ALSO BE GIVEN TO THE PROBLEM OF REPLACEMENT; IT IS ESTIMATED THAT 250,000 PERSONS MUST BE TRAINED ANNUALLY TO PROVIDE FOR SKILLED LABOR DEMANDS RESULTING FROM DEATH AND RETIREMENT.

AUTOMATION AND MECHANIZATION HAVE, WITHOUT DOUBT, CREATED A DEMAND FOR NEW JOB SKILLS. FURTHERMORE, TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGES IN THE PAST 15 OR 20 YEARS HAVE LED TO THE MODIFICATION OR ALTERATION OF OLD SKILLS. THE EXTENT OF FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS RESULTING FROM SUCH CHANGES IS NOT KNOWN, BUT THE CONSENSUS IS THAT THESE FUTURE NEEDS WILL BE GREAT.

THE PREDICTION HAS BEEN MADE THAT THE 25-40 AGE GROUP WILL DECREASE BY 600,000 BY THE YEAR 1965. THIS WILL MOST CERTAINLY MAKE MORE DIFFICULT THE SOLUTION TO AMERICA'S COMING MANPOWER PROBLEM.

THE LATE HOWARD WHIPPLE GREENE, COMMENTING IN 1957 ON THE CHANGES IN CLEVELAND'S POPULATION, WROTE: "THERE ARE 2,956 FEWER 31-YEAR-OLD WHITE MEN AND WOMEN IN OUR POPULATION THAN A YEAR AGO, AND THERE WILL BE FEWER EACH YEAR UNTIL 1965. THERE WILL BE 2,950 FEWER WHITE MEN AND WOMEN 32 YEARS OF AGE NEXT YEAR THAN THERE ARE NOW, AND THEY WILL DECREASE EACH YEAR UNTIL 1966, AFTER WHICH THEY WILL INCREASE FOR 13 YEARS (AND DECREASE FOR) NINE -- 22 YEARS TO COMPLETE THE CYCLE.

"NOT ONLY ARE THERE 2,956 FEWER WHITE MEN AND WOMEN 31 YEARS OF AGE THAN A YEAR AGO THIS TIME, BUT THERE ARE 6,179 FEWER WHITE MEN AND WOMEN 25 TO 30 YEARS OF AGE NOW THAN TWELVE MONTHS AGO. THIS MEANS 9,135 FEWER WHITE MEN AND WOMEN 25 TO 31 YEARS OF AGE AVAILABLE FOR OUR LABOR FORCE."

RESOLVING THE PROBLEM OF INDUSTRY'S FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS

IT IS ACCEPTED AS FACT BY ALL CONCERNED THAT THE BEST SOURCE OF SKILLED WORKERS IS APPRENTICESHIP. MANY EXPRESSED DOUBT, HOWEVER, THAT APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS CAN SUPPLY AMERICAN INDUSTRY'S FUTURE NEEDS AT THEIR PRESENT LEVEL OF OPERATION. E.R. CHAPPELL, ASSISTANT TO THE SECRETARY OF LABOR, STATED THAT THE PRESENT APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS ARE INADEQUATE IN TERMS OF BOTH NUMBERS AND QUALITY.

IN THE EYES OF THIS WRITER, THE INADEQUACY OF THE PRESENT PROGRAMS MAY BE ACCOUNTED FOR, AT LEAST IN PART, BY A BROMIDE-PHILOSOPHY, LACK OF INTEREST, SELFISHNESS, AND LACK OF INCENTIVES.

THE BROMIDE-PHILOSOPHY, ADMITTEDLY A COINED TERM, IS APPLIED TO THAT TYPE OF THINKING OR ACTION THAT JUSTIFIES ITS EXISTENCE PURELY ON THE BASIS OF THE CONVENTIONAL, THE OBSOLETE, THE TRADITIONAL. COMMENTS ON THE ADEQUACY OF THE PRESENT PROGRAMS IN TERMS OF FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS WERE EVASIVE, COMPLACENT, AND LACKING IN KNOWLEDGE.

IN SEVERAL INSTANCES, THE REPRESENTATIVES OF LABOR WITH WHOM THE AUTHOR TALKED WERE EMPHATIC IN PROCLAIMING THE ADEQUACY OF THEIR ORGANIZATIONS' APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS. THEY USUALLY SUGGESTED, HOWEVER, THAT SOMEONE ELSE WAS THE LOGICAL PERSON TO ANSWER

SPECIFIC QUESTIONS. CONTACTED BY MAIL OR TELEPHONE, THE SUGGESTED INDIVIDUALS FAILED TO REPLY OR OFFERED NEW REFERRALS.

AN OFFICIAL OF THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIP AND TRAINING, AND A REPRESENTATIVE OF A MANFACTURER'S ORGANIZATION, WERE OF THE OPINION THAT THE TIME TO PREPARE PEOPLE TO FILL INDUSTRIAL MANPOWER NEEDS WAS AFTER THE NEEDS HAD BECOME REALITIES. THE FORMER APPEARED TO GLOAT WHEN REPLYING ("LABOR WOULD FIND THE MEN TO BUILD 10,000 HOMES TODAY, IF SOCIETY NEEDED THEM") TO THE QUESTION: "IS APPRENTICESHIP, AS IT CURRENTLY OPERATES, ADEQUATE TO SUPPLY THE FUTURE LABOR NEEDS OF INDUSTRY?"

ANOTHER STATEMENT WHICH BROUGHT EVASIVE OR PLATITUDINOUS COMMENTS WAS: "MEN IN THE FIELD OF SERVICE TO MINORITY GROUPS LOOK UPON APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PROGRAMS AS TOOLS, IN EFFECT, FOR BLOCKING THE ENTRANCE OF QUALIFIED MINORITY GROUP MEMBERS INTO APPRENTICEABLE OCCUPATIONS." IT IS TRUE THAT NEGROES ARE FOUND IN MOST APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS. HOWEVER, ANY CLAIM THAT THEIR PARTICIPATION, EXCEPT IN THE "MUD TRADES," EXTENDS MUCH BEYOND THE WELL-KNOWN "EXCEPTION THAT PROVES THE ROLE" IS CONTRARY TO FACT.

THERE ARE MANY REASONS FOR THE LIMITED PARTICIPATION OF NEGROES IN APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS. CERTAINLY THEY INCLUDE IGNORANCE OF THE ENTRANCE PROCEDURE, IGNORANCE OF THE OPPORTUNITIES OFFERED INDIVIDUALLY AND COLLECTIVELY BY THE OCCUPATIONS; LACK OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE PART OF VOCATIONAL COUNSELORS AND SCHOOL ADVISERS ABOUT JOB OPPORTUNITIES OPENED TO NEGROES IN THE PAST 15 YEARS; OUT-AND-OUT DISCRIMINATION ON THE PART OF JOINT APPRENTICESHIP COUNCILS, EMPLOYERS, TRADE SCHOOL OFFICIALS, AND LABOR ORGANIZATIONS; AND THE ATTITUDES OF MANY PARENTS TOWARD THE BLUE COLLAR OCCUPATIONS.

WHAT IS BEING DONE TO RESOLVE THE PROBLEM

FILLING THE FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY PRESENTS A PROBLEM OF GREAT SCOPE, AND THE SEVERAL GROUPS CONCERNED -- MANAGEMENT, LABOR, GOVERNMENT, PRIVATE AGENCIES AND PARENTS -- MUST WORK TOGETHER IF THE QUALITY AND QUANTITY OF THE SKILLED WORK FORCE OF TOMORROW IS TO BE SUCH AS TO ENABLE THE PRODUCTIVE PROCESSES TO FUNCTION AT THEIR OPTIMUM LEVEL OF EFFICIENCY.

BASIC TO THE REALIZATION OF THIS END ARE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS AND A SYSTEM OF APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS FREE OF DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES, QUOTAS, SELFISHNESS, AND ACTS OF PIRACY.

THE STUDY CONDUCTED BY THE OCCUPATIONAL PLANNING COMMITTEE OF THE CLEVELAND WELFARE FOUNDATION, QUOTED EARLIER, WAS ONLY A SAMPLE SURVEY "TO DETERMINE POSSIBLE TRENDS OR CHANGES IN THE RELATIVE IMPORTANCE OF THE MAJOR OCCUPATIONAL GROUPS IN THE CLEVELAND AREA LABOR FORCE DURING THE NEXT 5-YEAR AND 10-YEAR PERIODS." WHILE THAT STUDY WAS LIMITED IN SCOPE AND LEFT MUCH TO BE DESIRED, IT POINTS THE WAY TO SURVEYS THAT MIGHT BE UNDERTAKEN IN OTHER CITIES.

IN LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, AN ORGANIZATION WAS FORMED IN MARCH, 1959, FOR THE PURPOSE OF SPEEDING UP AND STRENGTHENING THE LOCAL APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM. THE ORGANIZATION -- LOS ANGELES LABOR-MANAGEMENT APPRENTICESHIP COUNCIL -- WILL FUNCTION AS AN "OVERALL COORDINATING AGENCY FOR THE LOCAL JOINT APPRENTICESHIP COUNCILS." IN ADDITION, THE LOS ANGELES URBAN LEAGUE ORGANIZED A TRADE UNION COMMITTEE ON APPRENTICESHIP TO PROMOTE ACCEPTANCE OF NEGROES IN THESE PROGRAMS.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS ESTABLISHED A DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION. ONE OF ITS PURPOSES IS TO PROVIDE THE MACHINERY TO "STIMULATE AT THE COMMUNITY LEVEL PROJECTS WHICH WILL EXPOSE MORE AND MORE STUDENTS TO VOCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES IN INDUSTRY."

SIMILAR PROJECTS HAVE UNDOUBTEDLY BEEN ORGANIZED IN OTHER PARTS OF THE NATION. IN THE LIGHT OF THE MAGNITUDE AND GRAVITY OF THE PROBLEM, HOWEVER, THESE CAN BE THOUGHT OF ONLY AS AN INDICATION THAT THE SITUATION WARRANTS ATTENTION CONSIDERABLY MORE PROFOUND AND EXHAUSTIVE.

FOR EXAMPLE, ONE EMPLOYER REPRESENTATIVE EXPRESSED THE OPINION THAT THERE SHOULD BE A UNITED AND COOPERATIVE STUDY BY LOCAL INDUSTRY OF THE FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS IN THE CLEVELAND AREA, PRESUMABLY IN GREATER DEPTH THAN THE WELFARE FEDERATION STUDY OF 1959. THE SMALLER COMPANIES, HE NOTED, ARE UNABLE TO MAKE SUCH SURVEYS ON THEIR OWN AND CURRENTLY CONCERN THEMSELVES MORE WITH CALL-BACKS.

IT WOULD SEEM THAT THE PROBLEM OF AMERICAN INDUSTRY'S FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS IS BEING TREATED ALONG THE LINES OF THE OLD ADAGE: "EVERYONE TALKS ABOUT THE WEATHER BUT NOBODY DOES ANYTHING ABOUT IT."

THE ROLE OF VOLUNTARY AGENCIES

AN IMPORTANT ELEMENT IN THE EFFICIENT OPERATION OF APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS IS THE APPRENTICE. THE INDIVIDUALS SELECTED FOR THESE PROGRAMS MUST BE ADEQUATE IN BOTH QUALITY AND QUANTITY.

SIMILARLY, THE PERSONS OR AGENCIES FUNCTIONING IN THE APPRENTICESHIP RECRUITMENT PROCESS MUST NOT ONLY BE WELL-INFORMED, BUT MUST HAVE THE KNACK OF PROVIDING THE INCENTIVES NECESSARY TO IMPEL SUFFICIENT RESPONSE TO THEIR EFFORTS. THERE APPEAR TO BE TOO MANY INDIVIDUALS, FUNCTIONING AS ADVISERS, WHO ARE NOT SUFFICIENTLY INFORMED ABOUT THE NUMBER AND QUALITY OF JOB OPPORTUNITIES AVAILABLE IN INDUSTRY, ESPECIALLY THOSE OPEN TO THE NEGRO.

IT IS NO SECRET THAT, MORE OFTEN THAN NOT, THE WHITE GUIDANCE COUNSELORS IN THE SECONDARY SCHOOLS OF AMERICA ADVISE NEGRO BOYS AND GIRLS TO CHOOSE CAREERS IN THE SO-CALLED TRADITIONAL OCCUPATIONS. THE ADVICE IS NOT ALWAYS BASED ON PREJUDICE, BUT IS RATHER THE RESULT OF IGNORANCE OF THE MANY DIFFERENT JOB OPPORTUNITIES THAT HAVE BEEN OPENED TO NEGROES IN THE PAST FIFTEEN YEARS.

YET ANOTHER LIMITING FACTOR IS THE PARENT. PARENTS, PERHAPS ESPECIALLY NEGRO PARENTS, FEEL THAT BLUE COLLAR JOBS ARE DEGRADING AND, CONSEQUENTLY, OFTEN OPPOSE EFFORTS TO ADVISE THEIR CHILDREN TO PREPARE FOR SKILLED JOBS IN THE BLUE COLLAR FIELDS.

THE YOUNG NEGRO HIMSELF PRESENTS A PROBLEM, SINCE HIS BACKGROUND MAY CAUSE HIM, TOO, TO LOOK UPON CERTAIN KINDS OF WORK AS DEGRADING. HE FEELS THAT THE WHITE COLLAR JOB GIVES HIM PRESTIGE. FURTHERMORE, HE IS OFTEN UNAWARE OF THE MANY JOB OPPORTUNITIES AVAILABLE NOW TO NEGROES.

IN AN EFFORT TO COUNTERACT SOME OF THESE FORCES, THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS SPONSORED, IN FEBRUARY, 1957, A YOUTH TRAINING INCENTIVES CONFERENCE. IT HAS AS ITS PURPOSE THE DEVELOPMENT OF METHODS OF MOTIVATING YOUTH, ESPECIALLY MINORITY GROUP YOUTH, TO TRAIN THEMSELVES FOR THE INCREASING NUMBER OF SKILLED AND TECHNICAL JOBS.

AMONG VOLUNTARY AGENCIES, SUCH PROGRAMS AS THE NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE'S TST ("TOMORROW'S SCIENTISTS AND TECHNICIANS") EFFORT HAVE AS THEIR MAIN PURPOSE THE DEVELOPMENT BY NEGRO YOUTH OF THE ABILITIES AND SKILLS THAT WILL PREPARE THEM FOR THE TECHNOLOGICAL AGE.

THESE INCENTIVE EFFORTS ARE BUT SAMPLES OF THE THINGS THAT INTERGROUP RELATIONS AND OTHER AGENCIES MUST DO ON A MORE EXTENSIVE SCALE IF THE FUTURE MANPOWER NEEDS OF INDUSTRY ARE TO BE REALIZED FULLY. THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THESE EFFORTS WILL DEPEND, IN LARGE MEASURE, ON THE EXTENT TO WHICH THESE AGENCIES FAMILIARIZE THEMSELVES WITH THE SEVERAL APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS, THEIR REQUIREMENTS, AND THEIR ENTRANCE PROCEDURES. AGENCIES MUST BECOME WELL-INFORMED ON CURRENT ACTIVITIES IN RESPECT TO TRAINING CLASSES. FINALLY, COMMUNITY PROJECTS THAT WILL SERVE TO COMBAT MISUNDERSTANDING, LETHARGY, AND AMBIVALENT ATTITUDES OF PARENTS WITH RESPECT TO THE CAREERS OF THEIR CHILDREN SHOULD BE FOSTERED. ONE EXCELLENT TYPE OF INCENTIVE MATERIAL COULD BE DEVELOPED FROM STUDIES OF THE KINDS OF JOBS THAT NEGROES ARE PERFORMING IN THEIR RESPECTIVE COMMUNITIES.

WHATEVER THE MEANS OR MATERIAL, IT IS CLEAR THAT MORE MUST BE DONE.

OUR COMPANY'S EXPERIENCE WITH MERIT EMPLOYMENT

A STATEMENT BY

C.W. UFFORD
DIRECTOR OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS
THE WARNER & SWASEY COMPANY

THE WARNER & SWASEY COMPANY HAS HAD AN INTERESTING AND BENEFICIAL EXPERIENCE DURING THE EVOLUTION FROM ITS CONVENTIONAL PRE-WORLD WAR II THINKING ON THE SUBJECT OF MERIT EMPLOYMENT TO ITS PRESENT ACCEPTANCE AND PRACTICE OF THIS PRINCIPLE. IN RECENT YEARS WE HAVE FOUND IT DIFFICULT, IF NOT IMPOSSIBLE, TO MAN OUR SHOP AND OFFICE IN CLEVELAND, OHIO, WITHOUT FOLLOWING THE PRINCIPLE OF EMPLOYING ANY PERSON WHO, AFTER CAREFUL INTERVIEWING AND INVESTIGATION, APPEARS TO BE THE BEST CANDIDATE AVAILABLE TO DO OR TO LEARN TO DO THE JOB IN QUESTION AND TO BE A WARNER & SWASEY CALIBER EMPLOYEE. THIS IS OUR EMPLOYMENT POLICY. WE HAVE TO USE JUDGMENT, OF COURSE, AND WE HAVE MADE MISTAKES BOTH WAYS, BUT IN GENERAL THE POLICY HAS WORKED WELL.

IT IS NOT OUR POLICY, HOWEVER, TO EMPLOY PEOPLE WHO DO NOT APPEAR TO HAVE A REASONABLE CHANCE OF SUCCESS ON THE JOB IN QUESTION. NEITHER IS IT OUR POLICY TO FAVOR ANY PERSON BECAUSE HE IS A MEMBER OF A MINORITY GROUP. IN ANY EVENT, WE HAVE ON OUR PAYROLL BOTH MEN AND WOMEN, HANDICAPPED AND NON-HANDICAPPED, YOUNG AND OLD, NEGROES AND WHITES, PROTESTANTS, CATHOLICS, JEWS, A HINDU, AND PEOPLE OF COUNTLESS NATIONAL BACKGROUNDS, INCLUDING INDIAN AND KOREAN. WE ALSO HAVE PEOPLE IN MOST OF THESE GROUPS RETIRED UNDER OUR PENSION PROGRAM.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF OUR EXPERIENCE MAY BE INTERESTING. NATURALLY, IN A STATEMENT AS BRIEF AS THIS, MANY GENERALITIES MUST BE UTILIZED, BUT I WILL TRY TO HIGHLIGHT THE REALITIES WITH A FEW CONCRETE EXAMPLES.

LET ME GIVE YOU SOME BACKGROUND ABOUT WARNER & SWASEY. THE COMPANY WAS ORGANIZED IN 1880 AND HAS SINCE THEN BEEN IN THE BUSINESS OF DESIGNING AND BUILDING SOME OF THE COUNTRY'S FINEST AND MOST RESPECTED MACHINE TOOLS, TOGETHER WITH OTHER PRECISION EQUIPMENT THAT INCLUDES OPTICAL GUNNERY CONTROL INSTRUMENTS AND SOME OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST ASTRONOMICAL TELESCOPES.

WHILE WE HAVE DIVERSIFIED GREATLY IN RECENT YEARS, OUR PRINCIPAL PRODUCTS IN CLEVELAND ARE TURRET LATHES, AND SINGLE AND MULTIPLE-SPINDLE AUTOMATIC METAL TURNING MACHINES. ALL THESE MACHINES ARE DESIGNED TO SHAPE METAL AT HIGH SPEED WITH GREAT DEPENDABILITY AND ACCURACY. IF YOU WILL VISUALIZE THAT THE AVERAGE HUMAN HAIR IS ABOUT 3/1000" IN THICKNESS, YOU WILL UNDERSTAND THE DEMANDS FOR SKILL, DEPENDABILITY, AND EXPERIENCE PUT UPON OUR EQUIPMENT, PROCESSES, AND PEOPLE WHEN I TELL YOU THAT MANY OF THE OPERATIONS WE PERFORM INVOLVE FORMING METAL WITHIN TOLERANCES AS SMALL AS 1/10 OR 1/15 THE THICKNESS OF A HUMAN HAIR. UNTIL RECENT YEARS, IT WAS A RARE EVENT TO FIND ANYONE BUT WHITE MALES WHO HAD ACQUIRED THE QUALIFICATIONS TO DO SUCH JOBS.

PRIOR TO WORLD WAR II THE COMPANY FOLLOWED THE CONVENTIONAL ATTITUDE IN OUR INDUSTRY WHICH DID NOT INCLUDE FULL MERIT EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES AS WE KNOW THEM TODAY. FOR EXAMPLE, IT WAS FELT THAT WOMEN COULD NOT POSSIBLY BE EMPLOYED IN OUR SHOP, WHILE NEGROES WERE EMPLOYED ONLY IN JOBS SUCH AS PORTER.

WORLD WAR II CREATED GREATER MANPOWER NEEDS THAN HAD PREVIOUSLY BEEN EXPERIENCED. THE COMPANY TRIED MANY THINGS TO BUILD THE WORKFORCE RAPIDLY, INCLUDING ACCELERATED UPGRADING, ADVERTISING, DOORBELL-RINGING FOR HELP, AND USE OF PART-TIME EMPLOYEES. FINALLY, SOME JOBS WERE SET UP IN THE SHOP WHICH COULD BE PERFORMED BY WOMEN. AS LATE AS 1942, HOWEVER, NEGROES WERE EMPLOYED ONLY IN SERVICE JOBS AND ALMOST EVERYONE, INCLUDING THE UNION, OPPOSED ANY CHANGE.

LATE IN 1942 A GROUP OF NEGROES WAS BROUGHT IN, BOTH TO THE PLANT AND OFFICE, EACH

ONE CAREFULLY SCREENED FOR OUR NEEDS BY THE URBAN LEAGUE AS WELL AS BY OUR OWN EMPLOYMENT PEOPLE. AT FIRST THEY WERE EMPLOYED ON MINOR JOBS, SUCH AS PORTERS, TRUCKERS, BAR STOCK, HEAT TREAT -- JOBS WHICH MANY WHITE EMPLOYEES DID NOT LIKE. THE UNION AND A GREAT MANY EMPLOYEES AT VARIOUS LEVELS WERE DISTURBED AT THE MOVE, AND A FEW EMPLOYEES QUIT IN PROTEST. THE INTEGRATION WAS NOT COMPLETE. THE NEGROES, FOR EXAMPLE, WERE ASKED TO USE CERTAIN PARTS OF THE WASHROOMS. THIS WAS RESENTED AT FIRST. WITHIN A FEW WEEKS, HOWEVER, THE PROBLEMS BEGAN TO WORK THEMSELVES OUT. THE RESTRICTIONS FELL BY THE WAYSIDE, AND THE RESENTMENT DECREASED GRADUALLY IN THE MINDS OF MOST PEOPLE.

OF COURSE, IN A SHOP LIKE OURS MANY OF THE GOOD JOBS REQUIRE AN EXTREME DEGREE OF MACHINE SKILL AND EXPERIENCE. ALMOST NO NEGROES WERE AVAILABLE WHO HAD ANY SUCH BACKGROUND. CONSEQUENTLY, WE COULD HIRE ONLY NEGROES - AND FOR THAT MATTER, ONLY WHITES - WHO LOOKED AS IF THEY COULD ACCEPT EXTENSIVE TRAINING IN COMPLETELY NEW FIELDS. THIS MEANT TURNING DOWN A MAJORITY OF ALL APPLICANTS BECAUSE THEY DID NOT APPEAR TO JUSTIFY THE TRAINING INVESTMENT REQUIRED. MANY WHOM WE DID HIRE -- OF BOTH RACES -- FAILED. CONVERSELY, SOME OF BOTH RACES APPLIED THEMSELVES WELL, DEMONSTRATED ABILITY, AND MADE PROGRESS. OTHERS HAVE STOOD COMPARATIVELY STILL. WHILE MY ILLUSTRATION HAS PERTAINED TO THE SHOP, ABOUT THE SAME PICTURE EXISTED IN THE OFFICE.

AS WORLD WAR II CAME TO AN END, THE COMPANY REDUCED ITS FORCE RADICALLY FROM A PEAK OF OVER 6,000 TO APPROXIMATELY 2,000 BY FEBRUARY 1948. ALL SEPARATIONS WERE STRICTLY ACCORDING TO THE TERMS OF THE LABOR AGREEMENT WHICH WAS NON-DISCRIMINATORY. HOWEVER, PERSONS BROUGHT IN DURING THE WAR WERE NEW AND SUFFERED MOST IN THE LAYOFFS, SO A GREATER PERCENTAGE OF NEGROES THAN WHITES WAS LAID OFF. THE SAME THING WAS TRUE OF WOMEN. HOWEVER, IN NOVEMBER, 1952, THERE WERE ABOUT 17% NEGROES AND OTHER MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES IN THE SHOP AND ABOUT 5% IN THE OFFICE.

TODAY MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES ARE EMPLOYED THROUGHOUT THE SHOP AND OFFICES. SOME IN THE SHOP ARE STILL DOING LABOR WORK. SOME HAVE BECOME HIGHLY SKILLED AND HAVE THE SAME PAY AND STATURE AS ANYONE ELSE. IN THE OFFICE THEY ARE FOUND IN MAILING, FILING, STENOGRAPHIC, ORDER, INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING, SALES ENGINEERING, AND THROUGHOUT THE PRODUCT ENGINEERING DEPARTMENTS.

THE PROGRESS OF A FEW NEGROES OVER THE YEARS MIGHT BE INTERESTING TO YOU.

ONE MAN, A HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE WITH EXPERIENCE ONLY AS A CORE CLEANER AND TRUCK DRIVER, WAS HIRED IN 1942 AT 65¢ AN HOUR. TODAY HE OPERATES A BAR TURRET LATHE AT $2.48 PER HOUR. THIS MAN CONSISTENTLY PERFORMS AT BETTER THAN 100% EFFICIENCY AND EARNS GOOD INCENTIVE PAY. HIS ATTENDANCE IS GOOD, AND HE IS A RESPECTED EMPLOYEE. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $5,399. (I USE 1957 INSTEAD OF 1958 BECAUSE IT WAS MORE NEARLY A FULL EMPLOYMENT YEAR.)

ANOTHER MAN FINISHED 11½ YEARS OF SCHOOL AND HAD EXPERIENCE AS DRUG STORE CLERK, BELLBOY, AND TRUCK DRIVER. HE WAS HIRED IN 1942 AS A PORTER AND IS STILL ONLY A POWER TRUCKER. HOWEVER, HIS PRESENT RATE IS $2.32 PER HOUR. HE IS ON A GROUP INCENTIVE WHICH, THROUGH COOPERATIVE AND DILIGENT WORK, ALLOWS THESE MEN TO EARN CONSIDERABLE ADDITIONAL MONEY. HIS ATTENDANCE IS EXCELLENT. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $6,109.

A THIRD EXAMPLE FINISHED SIX GRADES OF SCHOOL AND HAD EXPERIENCE ONLY AS A CUSTODIAN AND CHAUFFEUR. HE WAS HIRED IN 1942 AS A HELPER AT 65¢ PER HOUR. TODAY HE HAS PROGRESSED THROUGH VARIOUS UPGRADINGS TO WELDER, CLASS "B", AT $2.64 PER HOUR. HIS ATTENDANCE IS GOOD; THE FOREMAN CONSIDERS HIM AN EXCELLENT EMPLOYEE AND SAYS HE IS "STRICTLY BUSINESS." THIS MAN'S GROSS EARNINGS WERE $6,044 IN 1957.

ANOTHER MAN IS A HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE WHO HAD PREVIOUSLY DONE ONLY PORTER AND LABOR WORK. HE WAS HIRED IN 1941 AS A CUSPIDOR CLEANER AT 73¢ AN HOUR. HE IS NOW A POWER TRUCKER AT $2.32 AN HOUR. HIS ATTENDANCE IS EXCELLENT. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $6,089.

ANOTHER MAN FINISHED 11 GRADES OF SCHOOL AND WAS SELF-EMPLOYED AS A PIANO PLAYER; HE WAS HIRED IN 1940 AS A PORTER AT 83¢ AN HOUR. HE HAS BEEN UPGRADED THROUGH SEVERAL STEPS TO MACHINE ASSEMBLER "B" AT $2.56 AN HOUR. THIS MAN CONSISTENTLY PERFORMS AT LOW EFFICIENCY AND SO EARNS NO BONUS. HIS FORMAN CONSIDERS HIM "NOT AMBITIOUS AND OVERRATED." HOWEVER, HIS ATTENDANCE IS VERY GOOD, AND HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $5,640.

A SIXTH NEGRO HAD COMPLETED 10 YEARS OF SCHOOLING AND HAD EXPERIENCE ONLY AS A TRUCK DRIVER AND SERVICE STATION MANAGER. HE WAS HIRED IN 1942 AS AN ELECTRIC TRUCKER. HE HAS ADVANCED THROUGH VARIOUS MACHINE SKILLS TO OPERATING A HORIZONTAL BORING MILL AT $2.72 PER HOUR. THIS IS A HIGHLY SKILLED JOB WHICH HE PERFORMS AT AROUND 100% EFFICIENCY AND SOMETIMES MAKES A BONUS. HE IS SOMEWHAT LIMITED IN THE TYPE OF WORK HE CAN DO ON THIS JOB, BUT HIS ATTENDANCE IS GOOD, HE HAS A GOOD ATTITUDE AND HE IS WELL LIKED. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $6,308.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE FINISHED FIVE YEARS OF SCHOOLING AND HAD EXPERIENCE ONLY AS A HOUSEMAN AND LABORER. WE HIRED HIM IN 1942 AS AN ELECTRIC TRUCKER AT 65¢ PER HOUR. HE IS NOW ONE OF OUR HIGHLY SKILLED BED GRINDERS AT $2.64 PER HOUR. HIS EFFICIENCY IS ONLY FAIR, BUT THE JOB IS A DIFFICULT ONE. HE EARNS LITTLE BONUS, BUT HIS ATTENDANCE IS EXCELLENT. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $6,070.

A FINAL EXAMPLE IS A HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE WITH 10 YEARS' EXPERIENCE AS AN AUTO MECHANIC HELPER. WE HIRED HIM IN 1942 AS A LABORER IN THE BOILER ROOM AT 65¢ PER HOUR. HE HAS PROGRESSED THROUGH VARIOUS GRADES TO HEATING AND AIR CONDITIONING MAINTENANCE AT $2.72 AN HOUR. HIS GROSS EARNINGS IN 1957 WERE $7,655.

IN THESE ILLUSTRATIONS I HAVE INTENTIONALLY CHOSEN EXAMPLES OF BOTH MODEST SUCCESS AND SUBSTANTIAL PROGRESS. SOME NEGROES, OF COURSE, HAVE NOT WORKED OUT AND ARE NO LONGER WITH US. THE SAME VARIETY OF EXPERIENCE APPLIES TO WHITE MALE EMPLOYEES AND TO OTHER MINORITY GROUPS.

WITH THIS BACKGROUND, LET ME PROCEED NOW TO SOME SPECIFIC QUESTIONS WHICH ARE FREQUENTLY ASKED OF US.

TO WHAT EXTENT ARE WORKERS EMPLOYED REGARDLESS OF THEIR MINORITY GROUP STATUS? OUR ANSWER IS THAT ALL OUR WORKERS ARE EMPLOYED TODAY REGARDLESS OF THEIR MINORITY GROUP STATUS ON A FAIR AND REALISTIC BASIS. AS I STATED EARLIER, OUR POLICY IS TO EMPLOY ANY PERSON WHO, AFTER CAREFUL INTERVIEWING AND INVESTIGATION, APPEARS TO BE THE BEST CANDIDATE AVAILABLE TO DO OR TO LEARN TO DO THE JOB IN QUESTION AND TO BE A WARNER & SWASEY CALIBER EMPLOYEE. WE WOULD NOT, HOWEVER, KNOWINGLY EMPLOY ANY PERSON FOR A JOB WHICH FOR SOME REASON HE WOULD NOT HAVE A REASONABLE CHANCE OF PERFORMING.

FOR EXAMPLE, IN VIEW OF PREVALENT, KNOWN ATTITUDES WHICH TEND TO DENY FULL ACCEPTABILITY TO WOMEN AND VARIOUS MINORITY GROUPS, WE WOULD NOT EMPLOY AS A CANDIDATE FOR MACHINE TOOL SALESMAN A WOMAN, A MINORITY REPRESENTATIVE, OR A PERSON WHO FOR ANY PERSONAL OR FAMILY REASON COULD NOT STAND THE RIGORS OF ALMOST CONSTANT TRAVELING, OR WHO COULD NOT BE STATIONED IN ANY AREA OF THE UNITED STATES AS OPPORTUNITY AND NEED FOR HIS SERVICES DEVELOPED. HOWEVER, IF THE CLIMATE OF ACCEPTANCE CHANGES, WE WOULD HAVE NO OBJECTION TO UTILIZING SUCH PERSONS IN THE FIELD IF THEY WERE OTHERWISE QUALIFIED.

HOWEVER, THE BREADTH OF OUR ABILITY TO ABSORB MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES IS CONSTANTLY INCREASING; AS A RESULT, IT LOOKS LIKE THE INDIAN I MENTIONED EARLIER MAY FIND A SUBSTANTIAL PLACE AND CONTINUING PROGRESS FOR HIMSELF WITHIN OUR COMPANY.

WHAT OPPORTUNITIES ARE THERE IN OTHER COMPANIES FOR TRAINING AND UPGRADING OF SUCH MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES? MOST MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES ON OUR PAYROLL HAVE BEEN UPGRADED FROM ONE TO SEVERAL TIMES, FOR EACH STEP OF WHICH HE HAS BEEN GIVEN ADEQUATE TRAINING. THIS PROCESS IS ALMOST CONSTANT IN OUR COMPANY AND ACCOUNTS FOR THE VERY LARGE DEGREE TO WHICH THE COMPANY HAS BUILT FROM WITHIN AN OUTSTANDING ORGANIZATION.

THIS POLICY IS OVER 75 YEARS OLD AND CONTINUES AS A BASIC ORGANIZATION DEVELOPMENT POLICY FOR THE FUTURE.

EVERY EMPLOYEE IS A CANDIDATE FOR UPGRADING IF HE HAS THE NECESSARY ABILITY AND THE WILLINGNESS TO WORK FOR PROMOTION OVER THE NECESSARY PERIOD OF TIME AND IF HE HAS DEMONSTRATED HIGH SUCCESS ON PREVIOUS ASSIGNMENTS. EVERY EMPLOYEE HAS EQUAL RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN OUR EMPLOYEE EDUCATION PROGRAM THROUGH WHICH THE COMPANY SUBSIDIZES UP TO 100% THE COST OF APPROVED EDUCATION TO BENEFIT THE EMPLOYEE. INCIDENTALLY, OUR INDIAN AND OUR KOREAN ARE BOTH DILIGENT PARTICIPANTS IN THIS PROGRAM.

PROBABLY EVERYONE IN OUR COMPANY HAS BEEN CONDITIONED TO THE IDEA OF TRAINING AND UPGRADING OF MINORITY GROUPS BECAUSE, AS A PART OF OUR INTERNATIONAL SALES OPERATIONS, WE HAVE TRAINED OVER THE YEARS TURKS, CHINESE, JAPANESE, INDIANS, EGYPTIANS, INDONESIANS, AND PEOPLE FROM NEARLY EVERY COUNTRY IN LATIN AMERICA AND EUROPE.

WHAT IS OUR POLICY REGARDING MINORITIES IN APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING PROGRAMS? WE HAVE HAD APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS OF VARIOUS TYPES SINCE THE INCEPTION OF THE COMPANY. THE SELECTION OF MEN FOR THEM IS EXTREMELY COMPETITIVE BECAUSE THROUGH THESE PROGRAMS WE RECRUIT EACH YEAR A HANDFUL OF EXCEPTIONALLY QUALIFIED YOUNG PEOPLE WHO APPEAR TO HAVE THE ABILITY AND DETERMINATION TO RISE FAR IN OUR BUSINESS. GRADUATES OF THESE PROGRAM INCLUDE THE FORMER CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD, THE PRESIDENT, A RECENTLY-RETIRED VICE PRESIDENT, THE SECRETARY, TREASURER, WORKS MANAGER, AND OTHERS OF THE PRINCIPAL EXECUTIVES OF THE BUSINESS. I CITE THESE EXAMPLES TO ILLUSTRATE WHAT CANDIDATES FOR THESE PROGRAMS ARE UP AGAINST IN THE WAY OF REQUIREMENTS AND COMPETITION. OF COURSE, WE DO NOT EXPECT ALL TRAINEES TO GO THAT HIGH, AND THE MIDDLE LEVELS OF THE COMPANY ARE STRENGTHENED THROUGHOUT WITH GRADUATES OF THESE PROGRAMS. OUR KOREAN AND OUR INDIAN HAVE BEEN ATTACHED TO THESE PROGRAMS, AND THE ROAD IS OPEN TO THEM, TO THE LIMIT OF THEIR ABILITIES TO MASTER THE SITUATION.

WE HAVE RARELY HAD MINORITY GROUP APPLICANTS FOR THESE PROGRAMS, EXCEPT FOR PERSONS OF OTHER NATIONAL BACKGROUNDS. OF THESE FOREIGN NATIONALS, WE HAVE HIRED SEVERAL EITHER PERMANENTLY OR TEMPORARILY IN RECENT YEARS.

WHAT FACTORS TEND TO PREVENT MINORITY GROUP WORKERS FROM FINDING SUITABLE EMPLOYMENT? THIS, OF COURSE, IS A GENERAL QUESTION. AMONG THE FACTORS ARE LACK OF SPECIFIC SKILL OR EXPERIENCE, LACK OF SUITABLE EDUCATION, LACK OF PERSONAL DEPENDABILITY OR RELIABILITY, AND LACK OF ENERGY, AMBITION AND SELF-CONFIDENCE. MANY OF THE SAME SHORTCOMINGS WHICH WOULD HANDICAP MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES HANDICAP SOME MALE WHITES AS WELL. THESE SHORTCOMINGS ARE A PARTICULAR HANDICAP IN INDUSTRIES LIKE OURS WHICH REQUIRE MUCH SKILL, THE ACQUISITION OF WHICH MAY REQUIRE SEVERAL YEARS AND SEVERAL STEPS OF UPGRADING.

WHAT FACTORS DISCOURAGE OR PREVENT MINORITY GROUPS FROM PREPARING FOR DESIRABLE AND AVAILABLE EMPLOYMENT? MORE DESIRABLE JOBS ARE LIKELY TO BE AVAILABLE IN THE HIGH-REQUIREMENT FIELDS THAN IN THE UNSKILLED FIELDS. THE MAN WHO FOR ANY REASON LACKS THE EDUCATION, THE EXPERIENCE, AND/OR THE PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT TO COME CLOSE TO QUALIFYING IS NATURALLY GOING TO BE DISCOURAGED BY REPEATED TURNDOWNS.

THIS APPLIES TO OFFICE JOBS AS WELL AS TO SHOP JOBS. I THINK THIS POINT IS HIGHLIGHTED BY THE RAPID INCREASE IN RECENT YEARS IN THE SUCCESSFUL EMPLOYMENT OF MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES IN HIGH-GRADE JOBS PROBABLY BECAUSE MORE MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES ARE APPEARING WITH IMPROVED EDUCATION, PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT, AND SELF-CONFIDENCE. IN ADDITION TO THE NEGATIVE FACTORS ABOVE, HOWEVER, IS THE INABILITY OR UNWILLINGNESS OF MANY PEOPLE -- MINORITY OR NOT -- TO WORK THEIR WAY UP FROM THE BOTTOM OR, FREQUENTLY, THEIR WILLINGNESS TO STAY IN LOW-SKILLED JOBS AT GOOD PAY RATHER THAN TO ASSUME THE ADDITIONAL BURDEN OF LEARNING AND TRAINING IN ORDER TO PROGRESS TO THEIR FULL POTENTIAL.

I THINK, TOO, THAT THE SCARCITY OF EXAMPLES OF GREAT ACHIEVEMENT IN BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY BY MINORITY GROUP MEMBERS DISCOURAGES MANY PEOPLE. PERHAPS THE LACK OF ADEQUATELY AVAILABLE AND ADEQUATELY INFORMED VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE IN THE SCHOOLS MAY BE

ANOTHER FACTOR. THESE FACTORS WILL GRADUALLY BE OVERCOME AS THE QUALITY AND QUANTITY OF VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE AVAILABLE TO ALL STUDENT GROUPS --NOT JUST TO MINORITY STUDENTS-- IS IMPROVED.

WHAT BENEFITS FROM MERIT EMPLOYMENT ACCRUE TO EMPLOYERS, AND WHAT IS THE OUTLOOK FOR PROGRESS IN THIS FIELD? WHILE THE QUESTION IS A GENERAL ONE, OUR EXPERIENCE INDICATES THAT THE EMPLOYER WHO HAS ADOPTED MERIT EMPLOYMENT POLICES WILL HAVE AVAILABLE MORE QUALIFIED EMPLOYEES THAN WOULD OTHERWISE BE POSSIBLE. UNDER MOST CONDITIONS, AND TO A CRITICAL DEGREE UNDER TIGHT EMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS, THIS AVAILABILITY WILL BE OF VERY GREAT VALUE IN SOLVING PROBLEMS AND GETTING JOBS DONE. I THINK MORE EMPLOYERS REALIZE THIS EACH YEAR.

I AM SURE MORE MANAGEMENTS REALIZE THAT HONEST ACCEPTANCE OF ALL KINDS OF PEOPLE BY EACH OTHER WITHIN THE FRAMEWORK OF A BUSINESS BOOSTS MORALE, IMPROVES THE EMPLOYEES' CONFIDENCE IN THE BUSINESS, AND DEVELOPS EMPLOYEES WHO ARE MORE UNDERSTANDING AND LESS CRITICAL OF LITTLE THINGS. I BELIEVE THE EARLY STAGES OF ABSORBING MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES INTO A NEW SITUATION MAY INCREASE FRICTION, BUT I THINK MORE AND MORE COMPANIES ARE FINDING THE EFFORT JUSTIFIED BY THE EVENTUAL RESULT.

AS I TALK WITH MY COLLEAGUES IN INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS FROM OTHER COMPANIES WHO HAVE PROGRESSED IN MERIT EMPLOYMENT, AND ALSO WITH UNION LEADERS WHO HAVE EXPERIENCES WITH ABSORBING MINORITY GROUPS, IT APPEARS THAT MOST OF THEM ARE CONVINCED THAT THEIR EXPERIENCE, LIKE OURS AT WARNER & SWASEY, HAS MORE THAN JUSTIFIED THE PROBLEM INVOLVED. I THINK THEY AGREE THAT EXPERIENCE SO FAR INDICATES THAT PRINCIPLES OF MERIT EMPLOYMENT SHOULD BE CARRIED THROUGH TO UPGRADING AND PROMOTION AND SHOULD PERMIT A NATURAL AND UNHAMPERED PROGRESS FOR ALL PERSONS. AS MORE COMPANIES BECOME ACCUSTOMED TO THE IDEA, AS QUALIFIED MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES MOVE UP THE LADDER, AND AS BETTER QUALIFIED NEW MINORITY CANDIDATES BECOME AVAILABLE, I AM CONVINCED THE PRINCIPLE OF FULL MERIT EMPLOYMENT WILL BE MORE GENERALLY ACCEPTED AND WILL MAKE A CONTINUING CONTRIBUTION TO THE SOLUTION OF MANY PROBLEMS IN SOCIETY AND IN BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INTERESTED IN TRAINING PROGRAMS EXTENT OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE OF DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES

BY

MORRIS RIGER
REGIONAL DIRECTOR
TEXTILE WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA

THE PREREQUISITE FOR PROGRESS IN THE FIELD OF TRAINING AND ULTIMATE PLACEMENT OF WORKERS IN SKILLED JOBS ON A NON-DISCRIMINATORY BASIS IS A REALIZATION OF THE DEEP-SEATED AND FAR-FLUNG NATURE OF THE OBSTACLES. ONE GAINS AN UNDERSTANDING OF THIS BY TRACING THE HISTORY OF PROGRESS IN THIS FIELD IN JUST ONE UNION, THE UNITED AUTO WORKERS, WHICH HAS WORKED AT THE PROBLEM VIGOROUSLY THROUGH ITS FAIR PRACTICES PROGRAM AND STAFF, AS WELL AS ITS SKILLED TRADES DEPARTMENT.

TWENTY YEARS AGO, ONLY FIVE TRADES WERE UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE SKILLED TRADES DEPARTMENT. THE NEGRO MINORITY IN THE UAW FACED HIRING GATE DISCRIMINATION AND WAS BESET BY ITS INABILITY TO PARTICIPATE IN THE NORMAL PRODUCTION JOBS IN THE INDUSTRY. EIGHTEEN YEARS LATER, IN 1957, THERE WERE 450 OCCUPATIONS UNDER APPRENTICESHIP STANDARDS, AND NEGRO WORKERS WERE ENJOYING GREATER OPPORTUNITIES ON PRODUCTION JOBS AND IN SKILLED TRADES OCCUPATIONS, BUT A NORMAL PATTERN OF INTEGRATION WAS STILL A LONG WAY OFF. THERE HAS BEEN SOME INTEGRATION OF NEGRO YOUTH IN THE TOOL AND DIE SHOPS IN DETROIT. YET, WITH THE ALL-OUT EFFORT OF A UNION DEVOTED TO FAIR EMPLOYMENT, ONLY A SMALL CRACK IN THE WALL HAS BEEN MADE IN TERMS OF OVER-ALL OBJECTIVE. WHAT IS TRUE OF THE UAW IS SELF-EVIDENT WITH RESPECT TO MANY OTHER TRADE UNIONS. HOWEVER, THERE ARE NUMEROUS INDICATIONS OF REAL PROGRESS, WITHIN THE LABOR MOVEMENT. THE JOINT PROGRAM OF THE OREGON STATE LABOR COUNCIL WITH THE STATE'S FAIR EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION AND THE APPRENTICESHIP COUNCIL, WORKING TOWARD THE DEVELOPMENT OF TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES FOR MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS, IS ONE OF THE MANY ENCOURAGING DEVELOPMENTS.

HARRY FLEISCHMAN AND JAMES RORTY IN THE PAMPHLET, "WE OPEN THE GATES" DETAIL SOME OF THIS PROGRESS. IN WACO, TEXAS, THE RUBBER WORKERS LOCAL UNION WON A FIGHT TO UPGRADE NEGROES TO THE TIRE BUILDING DEPARTMENT IN SPITE OF A WILDCAT STRIKE AT THE GENERAL TIRE PLANT, THREATENING LETTERS FROM THE KKK AND PREDICTIONS THAT THE OFFICIALS WOULD FACE DEFEAT AT THE NEXT ELECTIONS. IN SEABROOK, N.J., WHITE NORTHERNERS AND WHITE MIGRANTS FROM THE DEEP SOUTH WORK AND LIVE SIDE BY SIDE WITH NEGROES, PHILIPPINES, JAPANESE, PUERTO RICANS AND OTHER MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS AND FOR FIFTEEN YEARS THERE HAVE BEEN NO SERIOUS RACIAL OR RELIGIOUS OUTBREAKS. THE COMMUNITY HAD TO BE EDUCATED IN THE PROCESS. IN NEARBY BRIDGETON, N.J., A UNION BOYCOTT HELPED CHANGE THE MIND OF A STOREKEEPER WHO WANTED TO SERVE WHITES ONLY. THE I.U.E. HAS MADE PROGRESS IN THE DEEP SOUTH, DESPITE EMPLOYER USE OF RACIST TACTICS, SUCH AS CIRCULATION OF A PICTURE DEPICTING UNION PRESIDENT JAMES B. CAREY DANCING WITH AN AFRICAN DELEGATE TO A MEETING OF THE UN'S INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION. I.U.E. BREAKTHROUGHS HAVE OCCURRED IN TENNESSEE, ALABAMA, TEXAS AND OTHER PARTS OF THE COUNTRY. IN MANY OTHER INDUSTRIES SUCH AS HOTELS AND RESTAURANTS, RAILROADS, STEEL, COMMUNICATIONS, OIL, GARMENTS AND CLOTHING, EXAMPLES ARE GIVEN OF SLOW BUT STEADY PROGRESS MADE BY UNIONS IN OVERCOMING JOB DISCRIMINATION PATTERNS OF LONG STANDING. TODAY THIS PROGRESS IS SPURRED BY THE EFFORTS OF INDIVIDUAL UNIONS AND BY THE AFL-CIO NATIONAL CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTEE.

LABOR HAS, OF COURSE, FOR OVER FORTY YEARS BEEN ACTIVE IN THE FIELD OF TRAINING PROGRAMS AND VOCATIONAL EDUCATION. MUCH OF THIS ACTIVITY ACCOUNTED FOR THE ENACTMENT OF THE SMITH-HUGHES ACT IN 1917, WHICH PROVIDED SUPPORT FOR AID TO THE STATES IN ESTABLISHING AND MAINTAINING STATE-WIDE PROGRAMS OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION. THE ACT

RECOGNIZED CERTAIN BASIC PRINCIPLES, NAMELY, THAT THE STATES SHOULD ADMINISTER THESE PROGRAMS, THAT THERE SHOULD BE NO FEDERAL DOMINATION AND THAT THE NATION NEEDED PEOPLE WITH PRACTICAL AND MANUAL SKILLS, AS WELL AS ACADEMIC TRAINING. AGAIN IN THE EARLY 1930'S AS A RESULT OF DEPRESSION EROSION OF SKILLS, WORK IN THIS FIELD WAS CLIMAXED BY THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIPS IN THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR. APPRENTICESHIP AGREEMENTS ARE WRITTEN AND REGISTERED WITH THE STATE APPRENTICESHIP COUNCIL OR THE FEDERAL COMMITTEE ON APPRENTICESHIP. PLANS ARE ALSO CARRIED OUT UNDER APPRENTICESHIP AGREEMENTS WITH EMPLOYERS, GROUPS OF EMPLOYERS, OR A GROUP OF EMPLOYEES. NORMALLY THE PROGRAM PROVIDES FOR 4,000 HOURS OF REASONABLY CONTINUOUS EMPLOYMENT WITH APPROVED SCHEDULES OF WORK EXPERIENCE AND ADEQUATE AMOUNTS OF RELATED WORK AND IN MOST CASES THE NET RESULT IS THE PRODUCT OF UNION-MANAGEMENT AGREEMENT AND COOPERATION.

THE PRESENT NECESSITY FOR THE EXPANSION OF TRAINING AND APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS IS RELATED TO THE WHOLE PROBLEM OF THE NATION'S OVER-ALL CHANGING TECHNOLOGY. IT IS CLEAR THAT HIGHER LEVELS OF SKILL WILL BE REQUIRED MORE AND MORE, COUPLED WITH THE NEED FOR INCREASED THEORETICAL TRAINING. AS AUTOMATION TAKES HOLD, IT IS AGREED THAT THE LONG TIME TENDENCY TOWARD SUBDIVISION OF LABOR WILL CHANGE. IN ADDITION, WITH THE ADVENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY AND ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT, PROCESSES WILL BECOME MORE COMPLEX. A VARIETY OF HIGHLY SKILLED MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRMEN WILL BE REQUIRED. MANY SKILLED WORKERS WHO WORKED WITH CALIPERS AND MICROMETERS TO DETERMINE TOLERANCES WILL BECOME FUNCTIONALLY EXTENCT AS WE START TO MEASURE TOLERANCES WITH LIGHT WAVES. OTHER NEW SKILLS, UNHEARD OF NOW, WILL EMERGE.

UNDER THESE CIRCUMSTANCES, EMPLOYERS WILL VERY LIKELY SEEK GENERAL QUALIFICATIONS IN HIRING, RATHER THAN SPECIFIC TYPES OF SKILLS. WE OBVIOUSLY FACE OTHER URGENCIES. FOR EXAMPLE, THE PRODUCTION AGE GROUP WILL HAVE TO TAKE CARE OF AN INCREASINGLY LARGE PERCENTAGE OF CHILDREN AND OLDER PERSONS. IT IS FURTHER AGREED THAT THIS IMBALANCE WILL NOT BE RIGHTED UNTIL APPROXIMATELY 1970. WE ARE ALSO FEELING THE EFFECTS OF THE VIRTUAL CESSATION OF IMMIGRATION, WHILE IT MUST BE REMEMBERED FINALLY THAT, AS A RESULT OF THE INCREASED REQUIREMENTS FOR NATIONAL SECURITY, WE MUST PROVIDE MEN FOR THE ARMED FORCES, WHICH AT PRESENT NUMBER 2,890,000 (MOSTLY IN THE SHORT SUPPLY AGE BRACKET: 20 TO 30 YEARS OF AGE). THERE ARE OTHER DISLOCATIONS, TOO. IN 1953, THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE HAD 1,000,000 CIVILIANS ON THE PAYROLL, AND TECHNICALLY TRAINED PERSONNEL IS BEING USED ABROAD FOR BOTH GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE INDUSTRY.

WHEN WE APPROACH SPECIFICALLY THE AREAS OF MANPOWER SHORTAGE WE FIND, FOR EXAMPLE, THAT IN THE PROFESSIONAL FIELD ALONE (NATURAL SCIENTISTS, ENGINEERS, PHYSICIANS, COLLEGE TEACHERS, NURSES WITH COLLEGE DEGREES AND SCHOOL TEACHERS) THE DEMAND IN 1965 WILL EXCEED THE 1955 SUPPLY BY 905,000. AT PRESENT THE ESTIMATE OF THE ANNUAL ADDITIONS TO THE SKILLED LABOR FORCE NEEDED FOR REPLACEMENT IS 250,000, AND YET ONLY 30 TO 40 THOUSAND REGISTERED APPRENTICES COMPLETE THEIR TRAINING EACH YEAR. OF COURSE, IT IS DIFFICULT TO DETERMINE THE NUMBER OF SKILLED WORKERS DEVELOPED BY OTHER FORMAL TRAINING PROGRAMS, SINCE MANY OF THESE PROGRAMS ARE NOT REGISTERED. THE BUREAU OF APPRENTICESHIPS ESTIMATES THAT NON-REGISTERED APPRENTICESHIPS ARE EQUAL TO 1/5 TO 1/3 OF THE REGISTERED APPRENTICESHIPS, AND IT IS ALSO NOTED THAT ABOUT 60% OF THE REPLACEMENTS RECEIVE SKILLS THROUGH WORK EXPERIENCE. THE PERTINENT FACT, HOWEVER, IS THAT THE REPLACEMENT SKILLS DO NOT MAKE PROVISION FOR AN ALL-TOO-APPARENT GROWTH IN THE SKILLED OCCUPATIONS.

IN THE AREAS OF MANPOWER SHORTAGE, SOME EXAMPLES OF WHICH ARE SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, ENGINEERING AND TECHNOLOGY, HEALTH SERVICES, EXECUTIVE AND SUPERVISORY FIELDS, EDUCATION SEMI-PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL OCCUPATIONS, AND THE NEWER INDUSTRIAL SKILLS, THE PROBLEM WILL BECOME EVEN MORE CRITICAL IN A FEW YEARS. FOR THAT REASON, AMONG OTHERS, A PART OF THE SOLUTION MUST GIVE DIRECT CONSIDERATION TO THE UNDERUSED POTENTIALS OF MILLIONS OF AMERICAN NEGROES AND MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS AS A LARGER MANPOWER RESOURCE.

THERE ARE NUMEROUS APPROACHES TO SOLUTIONS IN THIS FIELD -- SOME DIRECT, SOME OBLIQUE. IN THE FIELD OF EDUCATION, STATISTICS SHOW THAT FIVE PERCENT OF THE NEGROES WHO ARE HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATES ENTER COLLEGE, AS AGAINST 25 PERCENT OF THE WHITES. CLEARLY, AS THE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT MOVES IN A MORE AND MORE SKILLED DIRECTION, THIS LACK OF FORMAL EDUCATION BECOMES INCREASINGLY IMPORTANT. IT IS MY BELIEF THAT FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION IS A "MUST" WITHOUT WHICH WE WILL GO FROM BAD TO WORSE.

IN ADDITION, COMMUNITY AGENCIES, EMPLOYERS AND TRADE UNIONS WILL HAVE TO MAKE CONSCIOUS PLANS FOR MAKING APPRECIABLE DENTS IN THE STATISTICS WHICH SHOW NEGROES AND YOUTHS IN OTHER MINORITIES POSSESSING INADEQUATE HIGHER EDUCATION CREDITS. SUBSIDY, AID AND ENCOURAGEMENT IN GENERAL TO GROUPS AT THE LOWER END OF THE ECONOMIC SPECTRUM WILL BE OF GREAT VALUE, PARTICULARLY TO THE MINORITIES. IN ADDITION, ENCOURAGEMENT AND BROADER COUNSELING FOR MINORITY YOUTH, AND ASSURED PLACEMENTS THROUGH A MORE ACTIVE PROGRAM WITH EMPLOYERS AND UNIONS, ARE VITAL. THIS CAN BE SPEARHEADED BY FEP COMMISSIONS IN THE 19 STATES WHERE THEY EXIST AND THROUGH PRIVATE GROUPS ELSEWHERE.

IN THE STATE OF OHIO IN 1958, GOVERNOR'S ADVISORY COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS MADE A SEARCHING ANALYSIS OF THE RESTRICTIONS OF PRIVATE PROGRAMS STEMMING FROM DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES IN THE COMMUNITY. THE STUDY REVEALED THAT IN MOST INSTANCES WHEN A BREAK-THROUGH OCCURRED, THE INCREASE IN THE NUMBER OF MINORITY GROUP PERSONS EMPLOYED IN THAT COMPANY IN THAT OCCUPATION WAS PAINFULLY SLOW. MANY OF THE BREAKTHROUGHS WHICH OCCURRED DURING WORLD WAR II WERE PROTECTED BY UNION SENIORITY RIGHTS DURING AND AFTER THE WAR, THUS ENABLING MINORITY GROUP MEMBERS TO UPGRADE AND TRANSFER TO JOBS FORMERLY CLOSED TO THEM. THE GREATEST AREA OF CONCERN, HOWEVER, WAS IN THE CLERICAL AND SUPERVISORY AREAS. HERE, MANY COMPANIES WERE COMPLETELY CLOSED TO NEGROES, AND THERE WAS ALMOST NO EMPLOYMENT IN MANAGEMENT OR MANAGEMENT TRAINING AND IN MANUFACTURING OR TRADE INDUSTRIES.

FEW NEGROES WERE FOUND IN SKILLED OCCUPATIONS IN MANUFACTURING. IN SOME CASES THIS WAS DUE TO NARROWLY WRITTEN SENIORITY CLAUSES, LACK OF APPRENTICESHIP TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES OPEN TO NEGROES, LACK OF PROPER EDUCATION OF NEGROES AND THE UNWILLINGNESS OF NEGROES TO PIONEER IN AREAS WHERE THEY DID NOT BELIEVE THEY WOULD BE WELCOME BY FELLOW EMPLOYEES. EVEN IN INDUSTRIES SUCH AS TRANSPORTATION AND TRUCKING, WHILE COMPANIES AND UNION DECLAIMED DISCRIMINATION, THE STUDY REVEALED THAT NEGROES ARE NOT EMPLOYED AS LONG DISTANCE DRIVERS AND ARE RARELY USED AS ROUTE MEN BY DAIRIES, BAKERIES, AND THE LIKE.

WITH RESPECT TO THE APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS PARTICIPATED IN BY UNIONS, IT WAS FOUND THAT THE PRACTICE OF PROTECTING MEMBERSHIP AGAINST ALL OUTSIDERS WAS BROADER THAN JUST A MATTER OF RACE OR COLOR. MOST OFTEN THIS WAS DUE TO BRINGING FRIENDS AND RELATIVES INTO THE APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS. THEY WERE FIRST TO BE APPRISED OF OPPORTUNITIES. SO FAR AS THE EMPLOYER IS CONCERNED, MANY EMPLOYERS DO NOT HIRE NEGROES IF A LONG PERIOD OF TRAINING IS INVOLVED DUE TO STEREOTYPED CONCEPTION OF THE NEGRO AS BEING INCAPABLE OF ASSIMILATING EXTENSIVE TRAINING. APPARENTLY EMPLOYERS WILL GENERALLY GO MUCH SLOWER IN UPGRADING NEGROES, WHEREAS THEY WILL HIRE WHITES WITHOUT EXPERIENCE DIRECTLY INTO TRAINING FOR THE SPECIFIC OCCUPATION.

IN THE PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES THERE IS VERY LITTLE SERVICING OF NEGROES AND APPARENTLY THE DISCRIMINATION IS CONDUCTED ON AN INFORMAL BASIS. GENERALLY SPEAKING, VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE IS INADEQUATE AND THE SCHOOLS ARE GENERALLY VERY MUCH UNDERSTAFFED IN TERMS OF QUALIFIED GUIDANCE PERSONNEL. FURTHERMORE, THEY ARE NOT SPECIALIZED ENOUGH TO BE OF ANY VALUE TO YOUNGER NEGROES.

INSOFAR AS THE VOCATIONAL TRAINING PROGRAMS ARE CONCERNED, THERE IS AN INSUFFICIENT NUMBER OF NEGROES AVAILING THEMSELVES OF THE VOCATIONAL TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES. IN ADDITION, IN THE FIELD OF HIGHER EDUCATION, THE DROP-OUT RATE IS CONSIDERABLY HIGHER FOR NEGROES THAN FOR WHITES, AND THIS WILL BECOME AN INCREASINGLY SERIOUS MATTER AS MORE AND MORE OF THE NEW TECHNOLOGY TAKES HOLD.

WHAT HAS BEEN SAID GENERALLY IS EVEN MORE POINTED SO FAR AS THE SOUTH IS CONCERNED. HERE THE FACILITIES DUE TO SEGREGATION ARE MUCH LESS ADEQUATE FOR NEGROES. THUS, IN 1952 IN FOURTEEN SOUTHERN STATES THE NEGROES CONSTITUTED 20% OF THE POPULATION AND ONLY 10% OF ENROLLMENT OF TRADE AND INDUSTRIAL PROGRAMS. OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION ARE LIMITED MAINLY TO THOSE OCCUPATIONS IN WHICH NEGROES HAVE TRADITIONALLY BEEN EMPLOYED - 30% IN THE BUILDING TRADES, 40% IN FIVE NON-INDUSTRIAL OCCUPATIONS (AUTO REPAIRING, BARBERING, BEAUTY CULTURE, DOMESTIC SERVICE, PRACTICAL NURSING, SEWING, TAILORING). IN THESE FOURTEEN STATES THERE WERE ONLY 263 NEGRO STUDENTS IN MACHINE SHOPS AND ONLY 80 STUDYING DRAFTING. IN ADDITION, THE VOCATIONAL EDUCATORS IN THE SOUTH MAINTAIN THAT THEY CANNOT DEVOTE TIME TO OCCUPATIONS IN WHICH THEY HAVE LITTLE CHANCE FOR EMPLOYMENT. THIS IS TRUE ALSO IN MANY AREAS IN THE NORTH. THUS THE PATTERN OF DISCRIMINATION IN TRAINING IS VERY OBVIOUS. ELABORATE RULES THAT ARE OVERLOOKED FOR WHITE EMPLOYEES ARE USUALLY APPLIED TO NEGROES. SINCE MORE JOBS ARE SECURED FROM INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY RELATIVES AND ACQUAINTANCES AND SINCE SO FEW NEGROES ARE IN SKILLED WORK, THEY ARE LESS LIKELY TO LEARN ABOUT JOB OPPORTUNITIES, UNLESS WE DEVELOP PUBLIC MEANS OF COMMUNICATION ABOUT APPRENTICESHIP OPPORTUNITIES. IN ADDITION, THE WHOLE QUESTION IS CONDITIONED BY THE SMALLER PROPORTION OF NEGROES THAN WHITES WHO ATTEND HIGH SCHOOL. IN SOME PARTS OF THE SOUTH THERE ARE MAINTAINED SEPARATE SENIORITY LISTS FOR SKILLED AND PRODUCTION WORKERS. THUS WHEN NEGROES ARE HIRED FOR JANITORS' JOBS, THEY HAVE NO OPPORTUNITY FOR SENIORITY FOR SKILLED PRODUCTION JOBS. THERE ARE VARYING VIEWS OF THE REASON FOR THE SHORTAGES OF SKILLED LABOR. MILLIS & MONTGOMERY STATE THAT UNION RESTRICTIONS ON APPRENTICESHIPS ARE NOT TO BLAME FOR SHORTAGES OF SKILLED LABOR. THEY POINT OUT THAT NON-UNION SHOPS HAVING NO RESTRICTIONS REGULARLY TRAINED FEWER APPRENTICES PROPORTIONATELY THAN DO UNION SHOPS AND THEY RARELY TRAIN AS MANY AS UNION RULES WOULD ALLOW.

SLICHTER STATES THAT RARELY ARE THE NUMBERS IN TRAINING CONSCIOUSLY GEARED TO THE ACTUAL NEED AS REVEALED BY A STUDY OF DEATH, RETIREMENT, AND EXPANSION OR CONTRACTION OF DEMAND, AND HE POINTS OUT THAT THE MAIN EFFECT OF UNION INFLUENCES IS TO KEEP EMPLOYERS FROM HOLDING TRAINEES AT LEARNERS' RATES AND ASSURE THAT APPRENTICES ACTUALLY RECEIVE THEIR TRAINING.

A VIEW OF NEGRO SELF-SEGREGATION

BY

SHELTON B. GRANGER

ALTHOUGH VARIOUS OF THE MEDIA OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES HAVE TOUCHED ON THE PHENOMENON OF SELF-SEGREGATION REGARDING MINORITY ELEMENTS OF THE TOTAL POPULATION, LITTLE HAS BEEN SAID IN THE INTERGROUP RELATIONS MEDIA ABOUT IT. PROPERLY, MOST OF THE TIME OF AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS HAS BEEN SPENT IN DISCUSSING AND IMPLEMENTING IDEAS AND TECHNIQUES FOR OVERCOMING DISCRIMINATION BASED ON RACE, RELIGION, ETC. IN A SENSE WE HAVE BEEN PREOCCUPIED WITH THE PROPER STAGE SETTING PROCEDURES SO THAT THE INDIVIDUAL IN SOCIETY, WHATEVER HIS RACIAL OR ETHNIC IDENTIFICATION, CAN HAVE A FAVORABLE CLIMATE FOR DEVELOPMENT.

NOW, WITH THE REMOVAL OF MANY PREVIOUSLY COMMON BARRIERS IT IS BECOMING MORE APPARENT THAT CERTAIN OF THE HABIT PATTERNS ESTABLISHED DURING THE PERIOD OF OFFICIAL SEGREGATION ARE NOT FUNCTIONAL. THE HEAVY WEIGHT OF RACE CONSCIOUSNESS IS BEING MEASURED IN TERMS OF ITS SOCIAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL IMPACT ON INDIVIDUALS.

THIS IS NOT AN EFFORT TO GIVE A COMPLETE PICTURE OF THIS QUESTION BUT IS, RATHER, AN ATTEMPT TO DISCUSS THE IMPLICATIONS OF THE OBVIOUS. IN CALIFORNIA, MINNESOTA, OHIO, PENNSYLVANIA AND NEW YORK WITHIN THE PAST SIX MONTHS, VARIOUS PEOPLE HAVE CONVEYED THEIR CONCERN ABOUT THE TENDENCY FOR NEGRO COLLEGE YOUTH TO CONGREGATE, PRIMARILY FOR SOCIAL EXPRESSION, IN ALL-NEGRO GROUPS. WE KNOW THIS TO BE A PROBLEM TO INTERGROUP AGENCIES IN EFFORTS TO PROMOTE INTEGRATED HOUSING; WE KNOW THIS IS A PROBLEM IN GETTING NEGROES TO APPLY FOR "OTHER THAN TRADITIONAL JOBS" IN "UNEXPLORED AREAS OF EMPLOYMENT;" WE KNOW THAT FAIR EMPLOYMENT COMMISSIONS RAISE THE FREQUENT QUESTION ABOUT THE LACK OF COMPLAINTS BEING FILED IN RELATION TO THE SIZE OF THE JOB DISCRIMINATION PROBLEM. ALL THIS IS COMMON KNOWLEDGE AND IN THIS LIGHT THE FOLLOWING CASE REFERENCES ARE SUMMARIZED FOR WHATEVER VALUE THEY MAY OFFER.

CASE A - AN IMPORTANT CIVIC FIGURE, THE FATHER OF TWO COLLEGE AGE BOYS, IN HIS POSITION AS A MEMBER OF THE VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE COMMITTEE OF THE URBAN LEAGUE ANNOUNCED THAT HE MADE CERTAIN HIS BOYS KNOW THE FACTS OF LIFE. HE TOLD THEM THAT THEY SHOULD PREPARE FOR WORK THAT WOULD BE AVAILABLE AND AVOID AN EXPENSIVE WASTE OF TIME AND MONEY PURSUING TRAINING IN FIELDS NOT AVAILABLE TO NEGROES. THROUGH MANY FAMILY CONFERENCES AND DISCUSSIONS THE FATHER'S VIEWS WERE ADOPTED BY HIS TWO YOUNGSTERS. THERE WERE MANY MANIFESTATIONS OF THE FATHER'S SUPPORTING PHILOSOPHY IN THE YOUNGSTERS SOCIAL ATTITUDES; BUT, IN TERMS OF THEIR VOCATIONAL ASPIRATIONS, THERE WERE STRONG INDICATIONS OF FRUSTRATION.

THIS CASE REFERENCE IS MADE BECAUSE IT SEEMS TYPICAL OF MANY SITUATIONS IN THE PROFESSIONAL NEGRO FAMILY SETTING. WHILE NO ONE CAN PREDICT WITH ANY MEASURABLE DEGREE OF ACCURACY WHETHER THE YOUNGSTERS INVOLVED WILL BE "SUCCESSFUL" IN LIFE, AGENCIES WORKING WITH NEGRO FAMILIES ARE AWARE OF MANY CASUALTIES DEVELOPING OUT OF WELL-INTENTIONED FAMILY COUNSELLING.

IT IS INTERESTING TO REFLECT ON THE POSSIBILITY THAT PARENTS IN INSTANCES AS THIS HAVE BECOME INADVERTENT AGENTS FOR THE PERPETUATION OF SOCIAL CUSTOMS FROM WHICH THEY ARE TRYING TO PROTECT THEIR CHILDREN. PROTEST WITHIN THE FRAMEWORK OF ACCOMMODATION TO THE SYSTEM SEEMS TO BE THE ROLE OF SUCH PARENTS.

WHILE CONDEMNING THOSE CAUGHT IN SUCH SITUATIONS IS UNFAIR, IT IS NOT UNFAIR TO REQUIRE PROFESSIONALS IN THE INTERGROUP RELATIONS FIELD, OR THOSE PROFESSIONALLY ENGAGED IN VOCATIONAL COUNSELLING, TO HELP PARENTS THROUGH THE SOCIAL MAZE.

After the fact, the father in this case saw his role and is aiding as a civic personality to help others avoid the same course of action.

Case B - Some time in the development of young people in our nation awareness of race becomes a prominent characteristic. The layman to the field of education can surmise that at junior high school age levels the awareness seems to sharpen. Heterosexual influences in social patterns become clearer along with the complex forces that "guide" an adolescent toward his particular star. Self-segregation practices among Negro students are in evidence at this educational level. And, as in other forms of juvenile behavior, this is not necessarily easily understood. The testimony of many group workers who specialize in teenage programming supports the observations of others that "racially integrated" group experiences are difficult to provide in settings having social connotations. Part of the difficulty lies with Negro participants and their tendency to cluster in small groups-within-the-group. By providing each other with sufficient rationale for this form of in-group structure, often a separate code or standard of behavior emerges.

A small incident seems illustrative of one of the negatives growing out of this group practice. A junior high school in a large northern city conducted a school wide poster art contest. All art students were automatically entered, and the third prize winner was a Negro. By the time of the presentation ceremony, the pressures of other Negro associates were felt, taking the form of jibes at being on the bottom of the prize-winning list and at being the recipient of only a token honor (3rd prize was $1.00). More importantly, the implications of remarks were that this is essentially a "white" contest and the strangeness of Negro participation was indicated. The prize-winning youhgster, suffering now from an exaggerated form of self-consciousness, would not have mounted the platform to receive the prize were she not properly prodded to do so by one of the teachers.

An ordinarily shy youngster, finding an expression through art, discovered that this form of expression ran counter to the standards of the group. This is not a dramatic incident but multiplied a thousandfold adds up to a tragic total. It may very well be part of the "cause" of withdrawal from academic competition by Negro students. This same kind of experience can be cited in other areas of school participation helping to construct the dual standard of performance that seems to emerge fully at the senior high school level.

Case C - Closely related to the previous case experience is that involving adults in positions of direct influence over youth. Many intergroup relations professionals deplore the tendency toward Negro student self-segregation but do not connect it to established adult patterns. The obvious fallacy involved here is to expect youth to construct a philosophy of social participation that is in direct conflict with established patterns and, at the same time, retain other social values considered desirable, i.e. no hostility toward adults, other social groups, immediate family, etc.

One large, northern metropolis has several schools with all-Negro student bodies. The customary practice by the Board of Education is to make teacher assignments with the racial composition of the student body as a guide. With few exceptions, Negro teachers are assigned to schools having a predominantly Negro student body. Many of the Negro teachers are southern-born and educated. A large number received graduate degrees from northern integrated universities. Although many schools are all-Negro at the student level, none have all Negro teachers. In such schools, as well as in the few having between 20 and 60 percent Negro students, the common practice by teachers is to draw social lines of distinction between Negro and white teachers in a manner that is obvious to the students. This practice is clearly illustrated during lunch hours by Negro teachers gathering in small groups to eat. Reports have been received indicating that on several occasions Negro teachers refused to join the other Negroes in this manner, were criticized openly at faculty meetings and, in two cases, were reported to the principal as being uncommunicative with fellow professionals.

LUNCHEON CONVERSATION IN ONE SCHOOL CONSISTED OF THE CUSTOMARY DISCUSSION OF CLASSROOM SITUATIONS, GRIPES AND THE LIKE. IN ADDITION, FREQUENT REFERENCES TO RACE RELATIONS MATTERS AND "RACE TALK" OCCUPIED MUCH OF THE TIME. IN THIS PARTICULAR SCHOOL, IT WAS NOT UNCOMMON FOR VALUE JUDGMENTS TO BE MADE ABOUT STUDENTS BASED ON COMPLEXION, HAIR TEXTURE, SOUTHERN CHARACTERISTICS, ETC. ON THE OCCASION WHEN A WHITE TEACHER JOINED THE GROUP, CONVERSATION WAS RESTRICTED TO PROFESSIONAL MATTERS WITH ONE OR TWO SIDE OBSERVATIONS ABOUT A SOCIAL EXPERIENCE INVOLVING ONE OR MORE OF THE TEACHERS.

THE INTERESTING PART OF THIS COMMON EXPERIENCE OF A GROUP OF PROFESSIONALS IS THAT IT WAS NOT REGARDED AS SIGNIFICANTLY DIFFERENT. NO ONE SEEMED INTERESTED IN SPECULATING INTO WHETHER THE DUALISTIC STRUCTURE OF THE TEACHING STAFF HAD ANY BEARING ON THE TEACHER-PUPIL RELATIONSHIPS AND ULTIMATELY ON THE TEACHING PROCESSES. THERE ALSO SEEMED TO BE A SIMILAR UNCONCERN FOR THE IMPACT OF EXAMPLE ON THE STUDENT BODY. IN FACT, ONE TEACHER SHARING GUIDANCE RESPONSIBILITIES EXPRESSED SURPRISE AT THE TENDENCY FOR NEGRO PUPILS TO ACCEPT RACIALLY LIMITED VOCATIONAL HORIZONS WITHOUT QUESTION. ONE BRIGHT STUDENT EXPRESSED THE POINT IN THIS MANNER, "I DON'T WANT TO STUDY JOURNALISM BECAUSE THERE ARE SO FEW COLORED REPORTERS TO ASSOCIATE WITH..."

THROUGH THIS VOLUNTARY FORM OF SLEF-EXCLUSION, THE NEGRO TEACHERS WERE SEEKING AN EASY SOCIAL ADJUSTMENT IN A PROFESSIONAL SETTING. ON THE FACE OF IT THERE SEEMS LITTLE FOR ONE TO QUARREL WITH, BUT THE FACE IS ONLY PART OF THE PICTURE. THE SOCIAL DIMENSIONS OF PERSONAL BEHAVIOR ARE MORE IMPORTANT IN SOME SETTINGS THAN IN OTHERS. IN THOSE SETTING ESPECIALLY DESIGNED TO PROVIDE MEANINGFUL EXPERIENCES FOR DEVELOPING YOUNGSTERS, SUCH PRACTICES SHOULD BE AVOIDED. THEY HELP TO INTRENCH HABITS OF SOCIAL BEHAVIOR BASED ON RACE.

CASE D - MOST COMMUNITIES WITH A SIZEABLE NEGRO POPULATION HAVE A RATHER HIGHLY DEVELOPED SOCIAL HIERARCHY. MANY WRITERS HAVE BEEN CURIOUS AND EXPLORATIVE ON THIS GENERAL SUBJECT. THE TENDENCY HAS BEEN FOR SEVERAL TO BE DEROGATORY ABOUT THE UPPER CLASS STRIVINGS OF MIDDLE INCOME NEGROES. THIS KIND OF STRIVING SEEMS CONSISTENT ENOUGH WITH PREVAILING AMERICAN PRACTICES AND THE INSATIABLE DESIRE FOR PERSONAL RECOGNITION. THERE IS, HOWEVER, A CRIPPLING INFLUENCE ON THE NORMAL STRIVINGS THAT APPEARS WHEN SUCH STRIVINGS ARE ON AN ALL-NEGRO BASIS.

ONE EXAMPLE (AGAIN VERY COMMON AND NOT DRAMATIC) IS FOUND WITH THE NEGRO TEEN-AGE CLUB AIMED BY AN ADULT LEADER TOWARD EXPOSURE TO THE ARTS. IN WHAT APPEARED TO BE A VERY NORMAL PROCEDURE, THE CLUB LEADER ARRANGED FOR A SERIES OF LECTURES AT THE LOCAL ART INSTITUTE. THIS WAS TO BE FOLLOWED BY SEVERAL FIELD VISITS TO POINTS OF CULTURAL INTEREST, LEADING HOPEFULLY INTO DISCUSSIONS WITHIN THE CLUB.

THE DEGREE OF DIFFERENCE IN CULTURAL BACKGROUND AMONG CLUB MEMBERS WAS HIDDEN FROM THE CLUB LEADER WHO ASSUMED A COMMON CORE OF INTEREST AND EXPOSURE BECAUSE THE CHILDREN REPRESENTED THE "UPPER" ELEMENT OF THE NEGRO POPULATION. SHE DID NOT ACCOUNT FOR THE COMPARATIVE RECENCY OF EXPOSURE TO CLASSICS ON THE PART OF A LARGE MAJORITY OF THE FAMILIES INVOLVED. SHE DID NOT SEE THAT THE FINANCIAL SUCCESS OF PARENTS, OR THE CLASSROOM PERFORMANCE OF THE YOUNGSTERS, CANNOT IN THEMSELVES DETERMINE THE CULTURAL INVOLVEMENT OF THE PARENTS OR YOUNGSTERS. CONSEQUENTLY, THE GROUP HAD A WIDE SPREAD BETWEEN THE "BEST" AND "WORSE" WITHIN IT. THE INSTRUCTOR AT THE ART INSTITUTE WAS FACED WITH A NEARLY-IMPOSSIBLE SITUATION BUT, ALSO SOMEWHAT BLINDED BY THE HARMONY OF COLOR AND OTHER PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS, PROCEEDED TO APPEAL TO THE MAJOR INTEREST LEVEL EVIDENT. THE RESULT IS TOO OBVICUS TO SPEND TIME DESCRIBING -- MOST OF THE YOUNGSTERS HAD A GOOD TIME AND LEARNED EXACTLY NOTHING IN THE PROCESS. THIS IS NOT TO DENY THE VALUES IN A SOCIAL EXPERIENCE, BUT THE CULTURAL EXPERIENCE WAS IN SOME CASES QUITE NEGATIVE.

THE NEGRO GROUP LEADER OF A NEGRO GROUP ASSOCIATED WITH A LARGE NEGRO SOCIAL ORGANIZATION SEEMED TO BE AN EXAMPLE OF THE BLIND LEADING THE BLIND. PROGRESS UNDER SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES IS SLOW, BUT THE LEADER WAS UNABLE TO ACCEPT THE IDEA OF DISTRIBUTING THE CLUB MEMBERS AMONG ALREADY EXISTING GROUPS AT THE ART INSTITUTE. TO DO SO WOULD HAVE BEEN AN ADMISSION THAT IN THIS KIND OF SETTING A NORMAL CURVE OF DISTRIBUTION IS NOT APPLICABLE IN THE SAME WAY AS WITH A SAMPLE OF THE TOTAL SOCIETY. THE "UPPER CLASS" ELEMENT IN THIS INSTANCE DID NOT CONFORM TO "UPPER CLASS" IN THE GENERAL SENSE.

ALTHOUGH THERE ARE OTHER MORE CLEAR-CUT EXAMPLES OF SOCIAL EXPERIENCE ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WASTE INVOLVED IN SELF SEGREGATION, ALL SUBSTANTIATE THE VIEW THAT A "COMFORTABLE" SOCIAL EXPERIENCE IS NOT NECESSARILY THE BEST. MANY ADVOCATES OF RACIAL INTEGRATION RESPOND SO THOROUGHLY TO THE BROAD ETHICAL AND MORAL PRINCIPLES THAT THEY UNDERRATE THE PRACTICAL SIDE. IN A SOCIETY PROVIDING SUCH HISTORICAL INFLUENCES ON NEGROES AS OPERATED IN THE UNITED STATES, SELF-SEGREGATION ADDS UP TO SELF-DEPRIVATION. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE TO EXPOSE YOUNGSTERS TO THE BEST POSSIBLE EXPERIENCES FOR TOTAL DEVELOPMENT UNLESS RACIAL LINES ARE CROSSED. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR NEGROES TO DEVELOP FULLY IN PROFESSIONS, BUSINESS OR OTHER VOCATIONAL PURSUITS WITHOUT MEANINGFUL ASSOCIATIONS ON AN INTERRACIAL BASIS. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR A NEGRO TO INVEST HIS HOUSING DOLLAR WISELY AND NOT FACE UP TO THE NEED TO DEVELOP AN INTEGRATED HOUSING MARKET. IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR AN AMERICAN CITIZEN TO BE TRULY CULTURED WHILE BOTTLED IN A RACIAL OR ETHNIC VACUUM.

EVERY CITIZEN HAS A VESTED INTEREST IN THE QUESTION OF INTERRACIAL PARTICIPATION IN THE SOCIAL, POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC PHASES OF AMERICAN LIFE. THE ONLY PURPOSE OF THIS PAPER IS TO ILLUSTRATE THIS BY FOCUSING ON THE UNDRAMATIC, ORDINARY LIFE EXPERIENCES. IT IS THE SUM TOTAL OF THESE SMALL EXPERIENCES THAT RESTS AS A BURDEN ON THE SHOULDERS OF SOCIAL WORKERS, VOCATIONAL COUNSELLORS, TEACHERS AND OTHER PROFESSIONALS. IT IS ALSO PART OF THE LIVING PROCESS THAT CONFUSES STRONG CIVIL RIGHTS ADVOCATES WHO ARE RIGHTFULLY CONFUSED BY THE RELUCTANCE MANY NEGROES HAVE TO CRASH THE COLOR BAR. SELF-INFLICTED WOUNDS ARE AS FATAL AS THOSE INFLICTED BY ASSAULT.

NEVERTHELESS, VERY OFTEN THE SAME NEGRO LEADERS WHO ADVOCATE THAT THE COLOR BAR MUST BE CRASHED CREATE A CONDITION THAT MAY FOSTER SELF-SEGREGATION. PEOPLE CANNOT BE MOTIVATED TO ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY FOR ANY FORMIDABLE TASK WITHOUT ASSUMING THE ABILITY TO TACKLE OTHER PROBLEMS. IF, THROUGH MOBILIZING THE STRENGTH OF THE NEGRO POPULATION IN ONE COMMUNITY, IT IS POSSIBLE TO ELECT CANDIDATES TO PUBLIC OFFICE, TO INFLUENCE OTHER OFFICE HOLDERS IN POLICY MATTERS, TO SECURE COMMITMENTS FOR FUTURE CIVIC DEVELOPMENTS AND THE LIKE, IT FOLLOWS QUITE NATURALLY THAT THIS SAME ORGANIZATIONAL STRENGTH WILL BE MORE ACTIVE WHICH, IN TURN, MAY HAVE THE EFFECT OF INCREASING THE NATIONALISTIC FEELING WITHIN THE NEGRO MOVEMENT.

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO PASS JUDGMENT ON SUCH MOVEMENTS AT THE COMMUNITY LEVEL TO REALIZE THAT ONE OF THE BY-PRODUCTS IS THE ASSUMPTION OF FRINGE CIVIC AND SOCIAL ACTIVITIES. TOO OFTEN THE FRINGE ACTIVITIES BECOME AS POPULAR AS THE BASIC PURPOSE OF THE MOVEMENT ITSELF. THIS CAN PROVIDE FOR ALL-NEGRO INTEREST GROUPS ON A RANDOM BASIS WITH PRIDE IN RACIAL ACHIEVEMENT OVERSHADOWING NEEDS OF INDIVIDUALS WITHIN THE RACE.

CASE E - AT A MEETING OF A STRONG CIVIL RIGHTS GROUP, SEVERAL AGENCY STAFF PEOPLE WERE INVITED TO GIVE THEIR VIEWS ON THE NEEDS OF YOUTH LEADERS IN VARIOUS COMMUNITIES ACROSS THE STATE. DURING THE DISCUSSION PERIOD THE VARIOUS ADULTS IN CHARGE OF YOUTH LEADERSHIP ACTIVITIES SUMMARIZED PROJECTS UNDERTAKEN IN RECENT YEARS. THE PRIMARY FOCUS OF THESE PROJECTS WAS IN AREAS OF NON-CONTROVERSIAL CIVIC MATTERS, IN ORDER TO PROVIDE A TRAINING EXPERIENCE FOR THE YOUTH. THE POINT WAS MADE FREQUENTLY THAT MEMBERS OF THIS ORGANIZATION WERE INVOLVED WITH NUMEROUS ORGANIZATIONS ON A COMMUNITY-WIDE LEVEL. THE ACTIVITIES ENGAGED IN AT THIS LEVEL INCLUDED, AMONG OTHERS, PARTICIPATION IN A CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN OF THE JAYCEES, THE COUNCIL OF CHURCHE S YOUTH CONFERENCES, A MEETING ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. ALL SUCH ACTIVITIES HAVE MANY BROAD

AS WELL AS ORGANIZATIONAL VALUES. TWO COMMUNITY LEADERS TOOK PRIDE IN STRESSING THAT THEIR COMMUNITIES SPONSORED SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAMS FOR DESERVING NEGRO STUDENTS, INDICATING THAT THIS WAS CONSIDERED GOOD BY IMPORTANT COMMUNITY FIGURES. UNDOUBTEDLY, THE PROJECTS HAD SOME PUBLIC RELATIONS VALUES ACROSS RACIAL LINES DURING THIS PERIOD IN THE NATIONAL HISTORY OF RACE RELATIONS. THE CRY FOR NEGROES TO DO MORE FOR THEMSELVES IS BEING HEARD ACROSS THE NATION AND IS ESPECIALLY INTENSE IN THOSE AREAS DEFINING "DO FOR THEMSELVES" IN TERMS OF RELINQUISHING DEMANDS FOR "DOING WITH ONE ANOTHER" REGARDLESS OF RACE. RESPONDING TO THIS DEMAND, THESE COMMUNITIES SET UP SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAMS AND AWARDED ONE HUNDRED DOLLAR SCHOLARSHIPS WITH ALL THE ATTENDING PUBLICITY IN THE NEGRO PRESS.

FEW PEOPLE OPENLY QUESTIONED THIS PRACTICE, BECAUSE IT IS QUITE DIFFICULT TO ARGUE AGAINST ANY SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM. HOWEVER, A CHECK ON ONE OF THE COMMUNITIES REVEALED THAT TWO NEGRO STUDENTS' NAMES WERE REMOVED FROM CONSIDERATION FOR LARGER SCHOLARSHIPS BECAUSE THEY HAD BEEN "AWARDED SCHOLARSHIP AID FROM OTHER SOURCES."

TWO FAIRLY OBVIOUS LESSONS SEEM IMPLIED IN THIS EXPERIENCE. THE FIRST IS THAT A STRONG PROTEST GROUP, MOVING ON THE TRACK OF RESPECTABILITY, HAD BEGUN TO FUNCTION IN A MANNER APPEALING TO THE LESS VOCIFEROUS ELEMENTS IN THE COMMUNITY. IN DOING SO, THEY ARE AGENTS FOR ABANDONMENT OF BASIC PURPOSES BY THE PARENT ORGANIZATION.

THE SECOND, AND FOR PURPOSES OF THIS DISCUSSION MORE IMPORTANT LESSON, IS THAT BY PROVIDING THE BEST KIND OF SCHOLARSHIP AVAILABLE FROM LIMITED RESOURCES, SOME DESERVING YOUNGSTERS ARE DEPRIVED OF MORE ADEQUATE ASSISTANCE.

THERE ARE WAYS OF AVOIDING SUCH PITFALLS THAT HAVE BEEN LEARNED OVER THE YEARS, BUT, UNLESS THOSE IN LEADERSHIP POSITIONS SEE THEIR RESPONSIBILITIES CLEARLY, A GOOD SOLID PROTEST MOVEMENT CAN BECOME A SOFT, PLIABLE AGENT OF SELF-SEGREGATION AND/OR PART OF THE CONTROL SYSTEM HEAVILY INFLUENCED BY THOSE WISHING TO EXTEND AS LITTLE AS POSSIBLE TO DESERVING NEGRO ASPIRANTS.

A DISCUSSION OF THIS KIND CAN GO ON ENDLESSLY, AND NO SPECIFIC CONCLUSIONS CAN BE REACHED SOLELY ON THE BASIS OF THE FIVE EXPERIENCES DISCUSSED. FROM THESE EXPERIENCES, HOWEVER, THE NEED IS DEMONSTRATED FOR MORE ANALYTICAL THOUGHT TO BE APPLIED TO IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS BASED ON THE SELF ASSERTION CONCEPT OF RACIAL MINORITIES. THE REPORT ON A NEGRO LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE HELD IN CLEVELAND IN 1957 HAD THIS SECTION IN A SUMMARY OF THE CONFERENCE, AFTER PROVIDING SOME HISTORICAL AND OTHER FACTUAL OBSERVATIONS:

"THE GROUP BECAME INGROWN. A REVIEW OF SOME OF THE PROBLEMS OF THIS INGROWN COMMUNITY IS NOT A HAPPY ONE. CRIME RATE IS OUT OF PROPORTION TO THE POPULATION. THE VERY HIGH INCIDENCE OF ILLEGITIMACY AND CRIMES OF ASSAULT HAVE LONG LED TO INTERESTING SOCIOLOGICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL SPECULATIONS ABOUT 'NEGRO PERSONALITY'. EDUCATORS REPORT IRREFUTABLE EVIDENCE THAT NEGRO CHILDREN REPRESENT THE GREATER PROPORTIONATE MAJORITY OF SLOW LEARNERS AND POOR READERS, AND LACK INTEREST IN ACQUIRING SKILLS AND TOOLS FOR EFFECTIVELY PARTICIPATING IN A COMPETITIVE INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY. THE BACKGROUND OF THE NEGRO FAMILY IS STILL TOO LARGELY MATRIARCHAL, WITH LOOSE TIES AND INSUFFICIENT PATTERNS FOR HELPING BOYS ACHIEVE THE STATUS AS MALES SO THAT THEY MAY FUNCTION MORE ADEQUATELY IN THE MASCULINE ROLE THEY ARE EXPECTED TO FULFILL. MOST OF THE BUSINESSES COULD FUNCTION IN ONLY THE NEGRO AREA - THEY LACK PERPETUITY, AND IT IS NOT LIKELY THAT THEY WOULD SURVIVE IN A FREELY COMPETITIVE ECONOMY. THE PROBLEMS OF THE UNCHURCHED AND UNREACHED YOUTH ARE SIGNIFICANT ONES. WITH THE EXCEPTION OF A FEW CORE GROUPS, NEGRO ORGANIZATIONS FUNCTION LARGELY FOR SOCIAL PURPOSES. THE DIFFERENCES IN THE STRUCTURE OF COMMUNITY GROUPS AMONG WHITE AND NEGRO PEOPLE IS IN THE STRONG ABSENCE OF PARALLELING SOCIAL CLASSES. AMONG THE WHITE GROUP THERE IS A SUBSTANTIAL UPPER CLASS, A VERY LARGE MIDDLE CLASS AND A SMALLER LOWER CLASS. AMONG NEGROES THERE IS RELATIVELY NO ARISTOCRACY OR UPPER CLASS, A GROWING BUT RELATIVELY SMALL MIDDLE CLASS, AND A VAST LOWER CLASS. THE PROBLEMS OF THE NEGRO ARE THE PROBLEMS OF SECOND-CLASS CITIZENSHIP."

NEGRO SELF-SEGREGATION IS PART OF THE PACKAGE OF INFLUENCE CREATING NEW PATTERNS OF RACIAL SEGREGATION AND PERPETUATING THE OLD. WHETHER THE CAUSE LIES WITHIN OR WITHOUT, THE EFFECTS ARE INJURIOUS.

VOCATIONAL SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES OF JEWISH PERSONS

BY

HERMAN MUROV

DO PERSONS OF JEWISH RELIGION OR ORIGIN EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CONSIDERING ENTRY INTO CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS OR FROM APPLYING FOR EMPLOYMENT WITH CERTAIN FIRMS OR IN CERTAIN INDUSTRIES? HOW EXTENSIVE IS THIS SELF-EXCLUSION, IF INDEED IT EXISTS? DOES IT HAVE ADVERSE EFFECTS ON THE COMMUNITY AS A WHOLE OR ON THE JEWISH COMMUNITY? DOES IT, FOR EXAMPLE, LIMIT OUR POTENTIAL MANPOWER RESOURCES?

ALTHOUGH THERE IS NO BASIC BODY OF STATISTICAL DATA CONCERNING THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION OF JEWISH PERSONS IN THE U.S., THERE IS A WIDELY HELD STEREOTYPE OF THIS DISTRIBUTION. ACCORDING TO THE STEREOTYPE, JEWS ARE SUBSTANTIALLY A MIDDLE-CLASS GROUP WITH UNUSUALLY HIGH CONCENTRATION IN CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS AND INDUSTRIES. THE OCCUPATIONS OF HIGH CONCENTRATION ARE GENERALLY CONSIDERED TO BE THE FOLLOWING:

1. THE INDEPENDENT PRACTICE PROFESSIONS (LAW, MEDICINE, DENTISTRY, OPTOMETRY, PHARMACY, CHIROPODY, ACCOUNTING
2. OWNERS AND MANAGERS OF SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES
3. WHITE COLOR OCCUPATIONS, PRIMARILY SALES AND OFFICE WORK.

THE INDUSTRIES ARE GENERALLY THOUGHT TO BE THE FOLLOWING:

1. WHOLESALE AND RETAIL TRADE
2. CONSUMER GOODS MANUFACTURING, PARTICULARLY APPAREL MAKING
3. PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS SERVICES
4. GOVERNMENT AND SOCIAL AGENCIES.

SUCH DISTRIBUTION IS, OF COURSE, QUITE DIFFERENT FROM THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE TOTAL POPULATION AND IT MAY BE SOMEWHAT DIFFERENT FROM THE GENERAL MIDDLE-CLASS DISTRIBUTION IN ITS PROFESSIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONCENTRATION.

THE HISTORY WHICH PRODUCED THIS SKEWNESS FROM "NORMAL" IS, OF COURSE, WELL KNOWN. MEDIEVAL EXCLUSION FROM LAND-OWNING AND CRAFT GUILD MEMBERSHIP LED TO SELF-EMPLOYMENT IN TRADE, OFTEN IN NEW AND HAZARDOUS FIELDS. IN TIME, AS LIBERATION AND LIBERALIZATION CAME IN EBB AND FLOW MOVEMENT, JEWS MOVED IN LIMITED NUMBERS INTO SOME OF THE SKILLED CRAFTS AND THE PROFESSIONS.

THE JEWS WHO MIGRATED TO AMERICA IN GREAT NUMBERS IN THE LATTER YEARS OF THE 19TH CENTURY AND EARLY YEARS OF THE 20TH CENTURY WERE, OF COURSE, THOROUGHLY GHETTOIZED, BOTH SOCIALLY AND OCCUPATIONALLY. UNDOUBTEDLY, THEY HAD EXTREME ATTITUDES OF OCCUPATIONAL SELF-EXCLUSION. THEY SETTLED THEMSELVES INITIALLY IN NEW GHETTOS IN THE BIG CITIES ON THE EASTERN SEABOARD AND BECAME, PER FORCE, A WORKING-CLASS POPULATION, EMPLOYED FOR THE MOST PART IN THE JEWISH OWNED NEEDLE TRADES. SOME ESTABLISHED THEMSELVES IN VERY SMALL RETAIL BUSINESSES AND AS PEDDLERS. RELATIVELY FEW VENTURED OUT INTO THE WIDER VISTAS OF THE WORLD OF WORK IN THE EARLY YEARS. WHO CAN DOUBT THAT THE ALREADY DEEPLY ENGRAINED SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES WERE FURTHER REINFORCED BY THE NEWLY EXPERIENCED DISCRIMINATION OF THOSE WHO DID ATTEMPT TO MOVE OUT.

THE DRAMATIC ECONOMIC EXPANSION OF MODERN AMERICA, COMBINED WITH THE JEWS' TRADITIONAL OUTLOOK AND PSYCHOLOGY (SO CLOSELY AKIN TO NATIVE AMERICAN MIDDLE-CLASS PSYCHOLOGY), OPERATED TO CATAPULT THEM INTO A MORE SOLID MIDDLE-CLASS STATUS IN A RELATIVELY SHORT PERIOD OF TIME. THE TAILOR BECAME A CLOTHING MANUFACTURER; THE PEDDLER, A DEPARTMENT STORE OPERATOR; THESCRAP DEALER, A STEEL MERCHANT; AND THE INDEPENDENT GROCER, A WHOLESALER. THEIR SONS AND DAUGHTERS BECAME PHYSICIANS, DENTISTS, LAWYERS, ACCOUNTANTS AND TEACHERS.

LET ME HASTEN TO PROVIDE BALANCE TO THIS PICTURE BY POINTING OUT THAT, WHILE THIS DID OCCUR, SUBSTANTIAL NUMBERS OF JEWISH PERSONS HAVE HAD TO CONTENT THEMSELVES WITH PLACES ON THE LOWER RUNGS OF THE OCCUPATIONAL LADDER, AS SMALL SHOP KEEPERS, SALESMEN, SALES CLERKS, OFFICE WORKERS, AND GOVERNMENT WORKERS, AND PROBABLY IN GREATER NUMBERS THAN MOST OF US BELIEVE, AS INDUSTRIAL WORKERS. IT IS THIS LATTER GROUP, THE EMPLOYEES, THAT OVER THE YEARS CONTINUES TO EXPERIENCE A DEGREE OF DISCRIMINATION EXCEEDED ONLY BY NEGROES. THAT THIS HIGH LEVEL OF DISCRIMINATION PERSISTS, AT LEAST IN SOME COMMUNITIES EVEN TO THIS DAY, IS AMPLY SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE DEVELOPED AND MADE AVAILABLE BY THE BUREAU OF JEWISH EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS OF CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AND SIMILAR ORGANIZATIONS IN OTHER COMMUNITIES.

CONCERN OVER THE PERSISTENCE OF DISCRIMINATION AND THE CONTINUANCE OF SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES DERIVED FROM IT HAS BEEN EXPRESSED BY THE PROFESSIONAL STAFF SOCIAL AGENCIES SERVING THE JEWISH PEOPLE. A CONFERENCE ON JEWISH EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS WAS HELD IN NEW YORK CITY DECEMBER 15, 1953, IN WHICH MEMBER AGENCIES OF THE NATIONAL COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL, THE JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICES AND OTHER INTERESTED ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATED. SOME OF THE OPINIONS AND FINDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE ARE WORTH REVIEWING:

> ....."ONE EFFECT OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST JEWS HAS BEEN TO BRING ABOUT AN INCREASINGLY NARROWING RANGE OF OCCUPATIONAL CHOICE FOR JEWS WHICH, IN TURN, HAS INTENSIFIED THE PROBLEM. JEWISH JOB SEEKERS, EITHER HAVING THEMSELVES EXPERIENCED DISCRIMINATION OR HAVING HEARD OF IT FROM PARENTS, RELATIVES AND FRIENDS, INCREASINGLY APPEAR TO SEEK EMPLOYMENT IN JEWISH FIRMS OR IN INDEPENDENT OPERATIONS. OFTEN HERESAY AND TRADITIONAL AND PERHAPS ERRONEOUS BELIEFS AFFECT JEWISH EMPLOYMENT."

> ....."IN THE PROFESSIONS, TOO, JEWS APPEAR TO CONCENTRATE IN MEDICINE, DENTISTRY, PHARMACY, LAW AND ACCOUNTING, FIELDS IN WHICH THEY CAN OPERATE INDEPENDENTLY WITHOUT THE POSSIBILITY OF BEING SUBJECTED TO DISCRIMINATION BY AN EMPLOYER, WHILE FREQUENTLY AVOIDING SUCH FIELDS AS ENGINEERING, CHEMISTRY OR COLLEGE TEACHING, FOR FEAR THAT DISCRIMINATION MAY IMPEDE THEIR CAREERS."

IN EVALUATING THE FOREGOING COMMENTS, IT IS IMPORTANT TO NOTE THAT VOCATIONAL COUNSELORS IN TOUCH WITH THIS PROBLEM REPORT THAT JEWS HAVE MOVED INTO ENGINEERING, SCIENCE AND EVEN ACADEMIC TEACHING IN GREATER NUMBERS IN THE '50'S THAN IN THE PREVIOUS DECADES. THE PRESENT-DAY BARRIERS TO JEWISH EMPLOYMENT IN THESE FIELDS ARE NOW CONSIDERED TO BE AT THE ADMINISTRATIVE LEVELS OF THESE PROFESSIONS. MANY JEWISH PROFESSIONALS FEEL THAT THEY ARE NOT VERY WELCOME AT THESE LEVELS AND TEND TO EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CONSIDERING UPWARD MOVEMENT FOR THIS REASON.

ANOTHER FACT NOTED BY THE CONFERENCE WAS THAT DESPITETHE OBVIOUS SKEWNESS OF THEIR OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION, THE MASS OF JEWISH PERSONS THEMSELVES SEEM TO BE EXPRESSING LITTLE CONCERN ABOUT THIS, PRIMARILY BECAUSE OF THE GENERALLY BOOMING ECONOMY.

ONE SOURCE OF DATA CONCERNING THE OCCUPATIONAL PROBLEMS OF JEWS IS PROVIDED BY THE OPERATING STATISTICS OF THE JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICE AGENCIES. THERE ARE 24 SUCH AGENCIES IN THE U.S. THEY ARE VOLUNTARY AGENCIES SUPPORTED BY JEWISH PHILANTHROPY AND THEIR BASIC PURPOSE IS TO OFFER VOCATIONAL ADJUSTMENT SERVICES, USUALLY PLACEMENT

AND COUNSELING, TO JEWISH PERSONS. THEY TEND TO SERVE A PREDOMINANTLY JEWISH EMPLOYER CLIENTELE -- IT HAS BEEN ESTIMATED TO AVERAGE AROUND 90 PERCENT. A COMPARISON OF THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE PLACEMENTS MADE BY THE J.V.S. AGENCIES WITH THAT OF CORRESPONDING STATE EMPLOYMENT SERVICES MAY INDICATE WHETHER THERE IS OR IS NOT SKEWNESS IN THIS AREA OF JEWISH EMPLOYMENT.

THE FOLLOWING TABLES PRESENT THE SITUATION AS IT EXISTED IN ONE COMMUNITY:

I. PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF PLACEMENTS BY A J.V.S. AGENCY AND THE CORRESPONDING STATE EMPLOYMENT SERVICE BY OCCUPATION (1952)*

	(MALE PLACEMENTS)		(FEMALE PLACEMENTS)
OCCUPATION	J.V.S.	STATE EMPL. SERV.	J.V.S.	STATE EMPL. SERV.
PROFESSIONAL, TECHNICAL MANAGERIAL	2.4	2.0	.6	5.8
CLERICAL, SALES	74.6	6.8	88.3	7.6

*THIS PARTICULAR STATE EMPLOYMENT SERVICE MAY PLACE MORE JOB SEEKERS IN SERVICE AND UNSKILLED POSITIONS THAN IS TYPICAL FOR THE COUNTRY AS A WHOLE. HOWEVER, THIS COMPARISON DOES DEMONSTRATE IN A GROSS WAY HOW J.V.S. PLACEMENTS DIFFER FROM GENERAL COMMUNITY PLACEMENTS.

SERVICE	3.5	26.8	.7	46.3
SKILLED	1.3	9.6	.3	4.3
SEMI-SKILLED	8.3	24.5	3.4	26.0
UNSKILLED	9.8	30.3	6.5	10.0

II. PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF PLACEMENTS MADE BY A J.V.S. AGENCY AND THE CORRESPONDING STATE EMPLOYMENT SERVICE BY INDUSTRY

	(MALE)		(FEMALE)
INDUSTRY	J.V.S.	STATE EMPL. SERV.	J.V.S.	STATE EMPL. SERV.
CONSTRUCTION	.2	2.8	.5	.1
MANUFACTURING	44.3	46.3	42.1	40.0
TRANS. & COMMUNICATION	.8	2.0	.5	.1
WHOLESALE & RETAIL TRADE	38.5	12.8	34.2	4.0
FINANCE, INSURANCE & REAL ESTATE	1.4	4.0	3.5	.3
SERVICE, EXCEPT DOMESTIC	14.4	23.0	18.9	12.0
DOMESTIC	0.0	7.1	9.0	43.2
GOVERNMENT.	.1	2.0	.1	.4

WHILE THESE PARTICULAR FIGURES WILL VARY IN DIFFERENT LOCALITIES AND AT DIFFERENT TIMES, THE BASIC PATTERN IS VERY SIMILAR AMONG ALL J.V.S.'S. THE OCCUPATIONAL BREAKDOWN SHOWS DISTINCTLY GREATER CONCENTRATION OF JEWISH PLACEMENTS IN THE CLERICAL AND

SALES AREA AND DISTINCTLY LESS CONCENTRATION IN THE SKILLED, SEMI-SKILLED, UNSKILLED AND SERVICE AREAS. THIS IS VERY MUCH IN LINE WITH THE POPULAR STEREOTYPE OF JEWISH OCCUPATIONAL DISTRIBUTION. THE INDUSTRIAL COMPARISON SHOWS GREATER CONCENTRATION IN WHOLESALE AND RETAIL TRADE AND LESS CONCENTRATION IN TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATION, FINANCE, SERVICE AND DOMESTIC FIELDS, AGAIN MUCH IN LINE WITH THE POPULAR STEREOTYPE. A BREAKDOWN OF THE MANUFACTURING CATEGORY IN THESE TABLES WOULD SHOW THAT THIS JEWISH AGENCY WAS PLACING MOST OF ITS APPLICANTS IN THE NEEDLE TRADES AND LIGHT MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY.

IT WOULD APPEAR TO BE OBVIOUS FROM THE FOREGOING DATA THAT JEWISH PERSONS WHO AVAIL THEMSELVES OF THE PLACEMENT SERVICES OF J.V.S. AGENCIES ARE MOST LIKELY TO BE PLACED IF THEIR SKILLS, EXPERIENCE, PREFERENCES AND EXPECTATIONS ARE IN LINE WITH THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL PATTERNS OF THOSE AGENCIES. THIS IN ITSELF ESTABLISHES A STRUCTURE OF CHOICE WHICH EXCLUDED A NUMBER OF OCCUPATIONS AND INDUSTRIES.

IN ORDER TO OBTAIN THE IMPRESSIONS AND OPINIONS OF VOCATIONAL COUNSELORS WORKING WITH JEWISH PERSONS, A QUESTIONNAIRE WAS SUBMITTED TO ALL J.V.S.'S. SEVENTEEN AGENCIES RESPONDED. A COMPILATION OF THE RESPONSES FOLLOWS:

	NO. OF AGENCIES RESPONDING
I. EXTENT OF PROBLEM WITH ADULTS
A. JEWISH ADULT CLIENTS KNOWN TO US DO NOT EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM ANY OCCUPATIONS AND/OR PLACES OF WORK	2
B. JEWISH ADULT CLIENTS KNOWN TO US EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS AND/OR PLACES OF WORK TO AN INSIGNIFICANT EXTENT ONLY.	12
C. JEWISH ADULT CLIENTS KNOWN TO US EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS AND/OR PLACES OF WORK TO A SIGNIFICANT EXTENT	1
II. EXTENT OF PROBLEM WITH YOUTH
A. JEWISH HIGH SCHOOL YOUTH PLANNING CAREERS DO NOT EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM ANY VOCATIONS	4
B. JEWISH HIGH SCHOOL YOUTH PLANNING CAREERS EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CERTAIN VOCATIONS TO AN INSIGNIFICANT EXTENT ONLY.	7
C. JEWISH HIGH SCHOOL YOUTH PLANNING CAREERS EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CERTAIN VOCATIONS TO A SIGNIFICANT EXTENT.	4

APPARENTLY MOST RESPONDENTS BELIEVE THAT JEWISH ADULT JOB SEEKERS EXCLUDE THEMSELVES OCCUPATIONALLY AND INDUSTRIALLY TO AN INSIGNIFICANT DEGREE ONLY. THERE IS A SHARPER DIVISION OF OPINION WITH RESPECT TO YOUTH. A FAIRLY HIGH PROPORTION OF JEWISH HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS ARE THOUGHT TO EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM CERTAIN VOCATIONS - BUT PRIMARILY BECAUSE OF STATUS AND PRESTIGE REASONS.

SOME OF THE COMMENTS MADE BY THE RESPONDENTS FOLLOW:

1. FROM AN IMPORTANT MIDWEST INDUSTRIAL COMMUNITY .....
   RE ADULTS - "THERE IS SOME FEELING THAT A FEW FIRMS IN THIS CITY DISCRIMINATE. THEREFORE, SOME CLIENTS HESITATE TO APPLY TO THESE FIRMS.

THIS SITUATION IS LESS PREVALENT NOW THAN IN PREVIOUS YEARS."

RE YOUTH - "THERE IS ALWAYS A QUESTION HERE OF WHETHER THEY EXCLUDE THEMSELVES BECAUSE THEY MAY NOT BE WELCOME OR BECAUSE THESE CAREERS DO NOT FIT IN WITH THE EXISTING PRESTIGE STANDARDS IN THEIR CULTURE." "THERE PROBABLY HAVE BEEN INSTANCES OF DISCRIMINATION ON THE PART OF THE FIRMS IN QUESTION, BUT ON THE OTHER HAND, JEWISH APPLICANTS WITH PROPER QUALIFICATIONS HAVE BEEN HIRED BY THESE FIRMS. WE DO NOT FEEL THAT THERE IS MUCH BASIS FOR THE SELF-EXCLUSION."

2. FROM A NORTHCENTRAL CITY .....
THIS RESPONDENT REPORTS THAT A FEW JEWISH PERSONS HAVE ATTAINED SENSITIVE AND IMPORTANT POSITIONS IN LOCAL "BIG" INDUSTRY AND THAT THIS HAS RESULTED IN A "BREACH OF THE WALLS" AND HAS CAUSED INCREASING HIRINGS ON A LOWER LEVEL.

HOWEVER, THERE IS A TENDENCY ON THE PART OF MANY OF THE NEWLY HIRED JEWISH EMPLOYEES TO LEAVE AFTER A BRIEF PERIOD OF TIME, WITH COMPLAINTS REGARDING THE INTOLERANCE OF THEIR CO-WORKERS. THESE PEOPLE TEND TO EXCLUDE THEMSELVES FROM OTHER SIMILAR FIRMS AS A RESULT OF THIS EXPERIENCE.

3. FROM A MIDWESTERN CITY .....
THIS RESPONDENT REMARKS THAT JEWISH YOUTH SEEK PLACEMENT IN PRESTIGE OCCUPATIONS AND OPPORTUNITIES FOR BEING THEIR OWN BOSS. RESPONDENT IS NOT CONVINCED THAT SELF-EXCLUSION IS LIMITING FACTOR.

4. FROM A MAJOR NORTHEASTERN CITY .....
"SOME ENGINEERING AND OTHER SCIENTIFIC PERSONNEL FEEL THAT DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES EXIST IN HIGHER ADMINISTRATIVE POSTS."

5. FROM A MAJOR NORTHCENTRAL CITY .....
RE ADULTS - SELF-EXCLUSION EXISTS TO A DEGREE "MAINLY ON THE BASIS OF REPUTATION. WE ARE ASKED BY CLIENTS NOT TO ATTEMPT TO PLACE THEM WITH CERTAIN COMPANIES BECAUSE THEY, THE APPLICANTS, UNDERSTAND THESE COMPANIES TO NOT HIRE JEWS."

RE YOUTH - "IN VOCATIONAL PLANNING WE HAVE FOUND SELF-EXCLUSION IN CERTAIN TECHNICAL AND SKILLED TRADES."

6. FROM AN IMPORTANT INDUSTRIAL CITY IN A BORDER STATE .....
RE ADULTS - "SUCH FIELDS AS BANKING AND CHEMISTRY ARE AVOIDED BECAUSE OF APPARENT DISCRIMINATION."

7. FROM A MIDCENTRAL STATE .....
RE ADULTS - "SELF-EXCLUSION BASED ON 'KNOWLEDGE' OR 'FEELING' THAT GIVEN OCCUPATION OR PLACE OF WORK WILL REALISTICALLY OFFER LITTLE OPPORTUNITY FOR JOB - OR CAREER. AS CHECKED, THE PERCENTAGE INVOLVED IS, THESE DAYS, SMALL."

RE YOUTH - "WHERE IT APPEARS, IT SEEMS TO STEM PRIMARILY FROM PARENTS' ATTITUDE REGARDING CAREERS THEY FEEL JEWISH BOYS ARE BETTER OFF WITHOUT." "WE HAVE KNOWN OF DISCRIMINATORY ATTITUDES THAT WOULD CALL FORTH A REACTION OF SELF-EXCLUSION (ESPECIALLY IN REGARD TO PLACES OF WORK). ALTHOUGH AS INDICATED ABOVE, THERE SEEMS TO BE SOME REAL BASIS IN FACT, THE PARENTS' EMOTIONAL PERCEPTION MAY LEAD HIM TOWARD A BIASED VIEW OF OPPORTUNITIES IN SPECIFIC VOCATIONAL AREAS THAT MAY NOT ACTUALLY FIT THE FACTS AT ANY GIVEN TIME."

8. FROM A FAR SOUTHWESTERN CITY .....
RE ADULTS - "SELF-EXCLUSION SEEMS TO EXIST TO SOME DEGREE, PARTICULARLY AMONGST PERSONS SEEKING SECRETARIAL AND SALES WORK, WHO MIGHT BE QUALIFIED FOR THIS INDUSTRY."

THE RESPONSES TO THE QUESTIONNAIRE SUGGEST:

1. THAT SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES ARE DETECTED BY COUNSELORS AND THOUGHT TO EXIST IN VARYING DEGREES RANGING FROM "INSIGNIFICANT" TO "SIGNIFICANT." THE PROBLEM SEEMS TO VARY GEOGRAPHICALLY.

2. THAT PRESTIGE ANDSTATUS FACTORS PLAY A MORE IMPORTANT PART IN DETERMINING THE VOCATIONAL CHOICES OF JEWISH YOUTH, IN PARTICULAR, THAN DO CONSCIOUS EFFORTS TO AVOID DISCRIMINATION.

IN REVIEWING THE AVAILABLE DATA, I DID NOT FAIL TO INCLUDE MY OWN EXPERIENCE AS A COUNSELOR. ON THE BASIS OF THIS EXPERIENCE, I AGREE WITH MY COLLEAGUES IN OTHER JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICES THAT THERE IS NOT MUCH EVIDENCE THAT JEWISH YOUTH AVOID CERTAIN CHOICES BECAUSE OF CONSCIOUS FEAR OF ENCOUNTERING DISCRIMINATION. PRESTIGE AND STATUS ARE MUCH MORE IMPORTANT AS MOTIVATORS OF CHOICE AND EXCLUSION.

IN MY EXPERIENCE, HOWEVER, ADULTS SEEKING EMPLOYMENT OFTEN EXPRESS ATTITUDES OF SELF-EXCLUSION IN RELATION TO CERTAIN FIRMS AND INDUSTRIES. ATTITUDES OF OCCUPATIONAL SELF-EXCLUSION HAVE BEEN EXPRESSED TO ME BY YOUNG ADULTS IN CERTAIN PROFESSIONS. FOR EXAMPLE WITHIN THE PAST YEAR:-

A YOUNG GRADUATE ENGINEER TOLD ME THAT HE LEFT THE FIELD OF ENGINEERING EIGHT YEARS AGO BECAUSE HE ENCOUNTERED ANTI-SEMITISM AND STILL RETAINED A STRONG IMPRESSION THAT JEWS ARE NOT WELCOME IN ENGINEERING.

TWO GRADUATE ENGINEERS RELATED THAT THEY HAD REACHED A POINT WHERE THEY BELIEVED THAT FURTHER PROFESSIONAL PROGRESS WOULD DEPEND ON THEIR PROMOTION TO SALES OR ENGINEERING ADMINISTRATION LEVELS. THEY WERE BOTH OF THE OPINION THAT JEWISH ENGINEERS WERE DISCRIMINATED AGAINST AT THESE LEVELS.

A MARKET RESEARCH CONSULTANT WAS SO FIRMLY CONVINCED THAT BIG COMPANIES WOULD NOT HIRE A JEWISH PERSON IN A SENIOR POSITION THAT HE HAD CHANGED HIS NAME.

A YOUNG INVESTMENT BROKER WAS CONSIDERING MOVING TO THE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY AS A COMPTROLLER TRAINEE. HE DECIDED AGAINST THIS, IN PART BECAUSE HE FELT THAT HE WOULD NOT BE WELCOME AS A JEW.

THE EVIDENCE PRESENTED IN THIS PAPER IS, OF COURSE, QUITE FRAGMENTARY. MORE THAN ANYTHING ELSE IT POINTS UP THE NEED FOR OBTAINING MORE SUBSTANTIAL DATA AND, ALSO PERHAPS, INDICATES THE KIND OF DATA THAT IS REQUIRED AND CAN BE OBTAINED.

TENTATIVELY, AND SUBJECT TO THE VERIFICATION OF A MORE SUBSTANTIAL STUDY, THE FOLLOWING HYPOTHESES AND QUESTIONS ARE SUGGESTED BY THIS EXPLORATORY PAPER:

1. THE OCCUPATIONS AND THE INDUSTRIES IN WHICH JEWS ARE EMPLOYED VARY SIGNIFICANTLY FROM THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE LABOR FORCE AS A WHOLE. HOWEVER, SINCE JEWS ARE A MIDDLE CLASS, A WHITE COLLOR GROUP, IT WOULD BE IMPORTANT TO KNOW HOW JEWS DIFFER FROM OTHER MIDDLE CLASS GROUPINGS IN THIS RESPECT.

2. FEELINGS OF DISCRIMINATION AND DEFENSIVE SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES BASED ON THESE FEELINGS HAVE BEEN NOTED AMONG JEWISH COLLEGE GRADUATES AND GRADUATE STUDENTS WHO HAVE MAJORED IN BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AND WHO HAVE ATTEMPTED TO FIND EMPLOYMENT IN ADMINISTRATIVE AND MANAGERIAL POSITIONS WITH PROMINENT NATIONAL MANUFACTURING AND MERCANTILE COMPANIES, BANKS, LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES, ETC. SIMILAR REPORTS COME FROM TECHNICAL PERSONNEL WHO HAVE ATTEMPTED TO BREAK INTO ADMINISTRATIVE JOBS. A STUDY OF THE JOB FINDING EXPERIENCES OF JEWISH COLLEGE SENIORS AND GRADUATE STUDENTS SHOULD BE UNDERTAKEN TO DETERMINE HOW WIDESPREAD AND VALID THESE COMPLAINTS ARE.

3. THE JEWISH COMMUNITY HAS, OVER THE YEARS, DEVELOPED "INSTITUTIONS" WHICH IN EFFECT GUIDE JEWISH EMPLOYMENT IN CERTAIN PROTECTED DIRECTIONS AND WHICH OFFER OTHER FORMS OF SECURITY FROM DISCRIMINATION. FOR EXAMPLE, THE JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICES PLACE THEIR CLIENTS, MOST OF WHOM ARE JEWISH, WITH EMPLOYERS WHO ARE PREDOMINANTLY JEWISH. IN MANY COMMUNITIES IT IS THE MOST NATURAL THING IN THE WORLD FOR A JEWISH JOB SEEKER TO FILE HIS APPLICATION WITH THE JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICE AND TO RELY ON IT FOR EMPLOYMENT. WHILE MANY SEEK THE SERVICES OF THE JEWISH AGENCY IN ORDER TO BE PLACED WITH JEWISH FIRMS, CONSCIOUS ATTEMPTS TO AVOID DISCRIMINATION MAY BE QUITE ABSENT IN OTHER JOB APPLICANTS. THEY MAY BE WILLING TO WORK WHEREVER THEY CAN FIND THEIR BEST OPPORTUNITY. HOWEVER, THE CHANCES ARE THAT THEY WILL BE PLACED IN JEWISH FIRMS.

OBVIOUSLY, THIS PROCEDURE TENDS TO PROLONG THE HISTORIC CONCENTRATION OF JEWISH JOB SEEKERS IN CERTAIN OCCUPATIONS AND INDUSTRIES.

JEWISH LAWYERS PROBABLY PREFER JEWISH LAW GRADUATES. JEWISH EMPLOYERS IN GENERAL, LIKE OTHER EMPLOYERS, EXTEND PREFERENCE IN HIRING TO RELATIVES, FRIENDS AND FRIENDS OF FRIENDS. JEWISH HOSPITALS OFFER A PROFESSIONAL HAVEN FOR FURTHER TRAINING TO JEWISH INTERNS, RESIDENTS AND PRACTICING PHYSICIANS IF THEY SHOULD NEED IT.

ONE CANNOT QUARREL WITH THE HISTORIC NECESSITY WHICH CREATED THESE PROTECTIVE INSTITUTIONS AND PRACTICES. ONE DOES WONDER IF THE TIME HAS NOT COME FOR THE JEWISH COMMUNITY TO REVIEW THEM IN THE LIGHT OF CONDITIONS WHICH PREVAIL TODAY. SUCH A REVIEW MIGHT POINT UP THE DESIRABILITY OF HAVING THE JEWISH VOCATIONAL SERVICE AGENCIES DEVELOP PROGRAMS TO WIDEN THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL VISTAS OF JEWISH JOB SEEKERS AND CAREER-PLANNING YOUTH. CERTAINLY THE PASSAGE OF F.E.P. LEGISLATION PAVES THE WAY FOR SUCH PROGRAMS.

4. THIS STUDY SEEMS TO INDICATE THAT JEWISH YOUTH ARE GUIDED IN THEIR CHOICE OF CAREER MUCH MORE BY CONSIDERATION OF PRESTIGE AND STATUS THAN THEY ARE BY CONSCIOUS FEAR OF ENCOUNTERING DISCRIMINATION. YET PRESTIGE AND STATUS CONSIDERATIONS SEEM TO LEAD FOR THE MOST PART TO THE SAME OCCUPATIONS WHICH THEIR PARENTS AND OLDER SIBLINGS CHOSE IN ORDER TO AVOID DISCRIMINATION.

A DEEPER STUDY OF THE CAREER CHOICES OF JEWISH YOUTH AND THE MOTIVATIONS BEHIND THESE CHOICES WOULD BE MOST HELPFUL AS A GUIDE TO THE COUNSELORS WHO ARE ENGAGED IN HELPING THEM MAKE VOCATIONAL DECISIONS LEADING TO MAXIMUM SATISFACTION AND ADJUSTMENT.

5. BY AND LARGE, THE JEWISH PEOPLE SEEM TO BE COMFORTABLE WITH THEIR PRESENT ECONOMIC AND VOCATIONAL SITUATION. CONTRARY TO THE CONCERN EXPRESSED BY SOME PROFESSIONAL WORKERS IN THE FIELD OF COMMUNITY RELATIONS, JEWS ARE NOT CONFINED WITHIN LIMITS WHICH ARE GROWING NARROWER. THE LIMITS SEEM TO HAVE A CERTAIN LATITUDE AND SEEM TO BE EXPANDING SLOWLY.

A DECADE OR MORE AGO, ENGINEERING AND OTHER TECHNICAL FIELDS WERE REGARDED AS PRESENTING SEVERE HANDICAPS TO JEWISH ENTRANTS AND WERE AVOIDED BY MANY. TODAY THIS IS NO LONGER TRUE AND THE PREVAILING COMPLAINT IS THAT DISCRIMINATION EXISTS MAINLY IN THE UPGRADING AND EMPLOYMENT OF EXECUTIVE AND MANAGERIAL PERSONNEL. ONE HEARS THAT THE PRESENT STEREOTYPE OF THE JEW IN CORPORATE CIRCLES IS THAT HE IS "A RESEARCH MAN," RATHER THAN AN "ORGANIZATION MAN." STUDIES OF BIG BUSINESS SUCH AS THE ORGANIZATION MAN POINT TO CERTAIN PRACTICES IN CHOOSING ADMINISTRATIVE PERSONNEL WHICH WOULD TEND TO RULE OUT ALL MEMBERS OF MINORITY GROUPS.

ONE CONCERN ABOUT THE PRESENT ECONOMIC POSITION OF AMERICAN JEWRY SHOULD BE GIVEN ESPECIALLY CAREFUL STUDY, EVEN THOUGH THIS CONCERN IS SHARED BY RELATIVELY FEW PERSONS. IT IS FELT BY SOME STUDENTS OF OUR ECONOMY AND OUR SOCIETY THAT THE APPARENT SECURITY OF THE JEWISH COMMUNITY'S ECONOMIC POSITION MAY BE QUITE ILLUSORY BECAUSE IT IS TOO DEPENDENT ON ENTRENCHED POSITIONS IN SMALL, MEDIUM-SIZED AND RISKIER TYPES OF INDUSTRY. THESE ARE THE INDUSTRIES, IT IS POINTED OUT, THAT MAY SOMEDAY SUFFER

SEVERELY IN UNEQUAL COMPETITION WITH THE EVER-GROWING GIANTS OF OUR ECONOMY. THE OCCUPATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL DISTRIBUTION OF AMERICAN JEWS SHOULD BE STUDIED WITH THIS CONCERN IN MIND.

THE CURRENT RESTRICTIONS AGAINST JEWISH EMPLOYMENT AND THE SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES GENERATED BY THEM MAY NOT BE LIMITING OUR PRESENT MANPOWER RESOURCES SEVERELY AT THE TECHNICAL, SKILLED OR SEMI-SKILLED LEVELS OF EMPLOYMENT. HOWEVER, IT IS QUITE LIKELY THAT THESE RESTRICTIONS AND ATTITUDES DO LIMIT OUR RECRUITMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF MANAGERIAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PERSONNEL, WHICH WE ARE TOLD IS A MAJOR BOTTLENECK IMPEDING THE FURTHER EXPANSION OF THE ECONOMY.

EVEN MORE IMPORTANT RESTRICTIONS AGAINST JEWISH EMPLOYMENT ARE NOT AN ENTITY IN THEMSELVES. THEY ARE PART AND PARCEL OF THE TOTAL PICTURE OF DISCRIMINATION WHICH IS SO OBVIOUSLY LIMITING OUR FULL USE OF MANPOWER FOR DEFENSE AND FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS.

AS LONG AS DISCRIMINATION AND ITS CRIPPLING EFFECTS ON ONE MINORITY PERSISTS TO A SIGNIFICANT DEGREE, THERE IS DANGER TO ALL MINORITY GROUPS AND TO THE GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF A DEMOCRATIC WAY OF LIFE FOR ALL.

THE CHALLENGE FOR THE DECADE AHEAD: ROLE OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS PERSONNEL

IN THE PROGRAM PROSPECTUS FOR THE NAIRO 1959 CONFERENCE, IT WAS SUGGESTED THAT THE NAIRO COMMISSIONS DIRECT THEIR INQUIRY TO THE EXPECTED ECONOMIC CHANGE NOW DEVELOPING IN THE UNITED STATES. IT WOULD BE REDUNDANT TO DWELL AT THIS TIME ON THE CAUSES FOR THIS CHANGE, RESULTING FROM POPULATION INCREASE AND MOBILITY, INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION, TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCES, AUTOMATION, AND THE INTERNATIONAL SCENE.

ONE OF THE GOALS OF THIS REPORT IS TO PROVIDE INSIGHT INTO A PARTICULAR FACET OF MANPOWER UTILIZATION AS IT RELATES TO NAIRO'S PURPOSES AND GOALS. THE MANPOWER COMMISSION, WITH A FULL AND COMPLETE UNDERSTANDING OF THE PRESSING NEED TO ACCELERATE THE EXPANSION OF NEW JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUP WORKERS, DECIDED TO CONCENTRATE ON TRAINING, AS IT RELATES TO CAREER PLANNING, AS THE MOST SIGNIFICANT OBJECTIVE FOR THE FUTURE. IT IS OUR BELIEF THAT THIS SUBJECT SHOULD OFFER TO NAIRO MEMBERS AND OTHERS CONCERNED WITH THIS PROBLEM, A GOAL THAT, IN ADDITION TO EMBRACING THE IMMEDIATE PROBLEM OF JOB PLACEMENT AND UPGRADING, PINPOINTS THE TARGET FOR SERVICING THE SCHOOL GENERATION AND THE POTENTIAL BEGINNING WORKER.

WE BELIEVE THAT, AS A RESULT OF THE CHANGES THAT ARE TAKING PLACE DUE TO LEGISLATION AND VOLUNTARY EFFORTS, INTERGROUP RELATIONS PRACTITIONERS MUST PLAY A MORE MEANINGFUL ROLE IN PREPARING AND INFLUENCING THE PREPARATION OF STUDENTS AND NEW ENTRANTS INTO THE WORK FORCE BEFORE THEY REACH THE PERSONNEL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE.

ELI GINSBERG MAKES THE POINT IN HIS BOOK THE NEGRO POTENTIAL WHEN HE WROTE: "BETTER PREPARATION FOR WORK INVOLVES MUCH MORE THAN A FORMAL EQUALIZATION OF EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES. FOR NEGROES AS FOR WHITES, BASIC PREPARATION FOR SCHOOL AND FOR WORK OCCURS WITHIN THE FAMILY, THE NEIGHBORHOOD AND THE COMMUNITY. THE HABITS, THE VALUES AND THE GOALS THAT THE CHILD ACQUIRES PROVIDE THE BASIS FOR HIS LATER ACCOMPLISHMENTS IN SCHOOL AND AT WORK.

"TO APPRAISE HOW NEGRO POTENTIAL CAN BE FULLY DEVELOPED, THEREFORE, REQUIRES CONSIDERATION OF A WHOLE COMPLEX OF FACTORS, INCLUDING THE STRUCTURE AND FUNCTIONING OF THE NEGRO FAMILY AND COMMUNITY AND THE VALUES AND BEHAVIOR OF BOTH NEGROES AND WHITES, AS WELL AS THE PRESENT STATE OF AND THE FUTURE PROSPECTS FOR HIS EDUCATIONAL AND ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITIES. EACH FACET IS INSEPARABLY CONNECTED WITH ALL OF THE OTHERS. A DEFICIENCY IN ANY AREA WILL LEAD TO CUMULATIVE BENEFITS. TO SPEED THE DEVELOPMENT OF NEGRO POTENTIAL, THEREFORE, REQUIRES A CONCERTED AND SIMULTANEOUS ATTACK ON ALL CONDITIONS THAT NOW IMPEDE THAT DEVELOPMENT." THIS STATEMENT OBVIOUSLY APPLIES TO ALL GROUPS FACED WITH THE PROBLEM OF EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING DISCRIMINATION.

THE PREPARATION OF THIS REPORT WAS AN INTERESTING AND PARADOXICAL EXPERIENCE. ON THE ONE HAND, WE FOUND INDUSTRY, LABOR AND GOVERNMENT EXPENDING MONEY AND EFFORT FOR TRAINING PROGRAMS. ON THE OTHER HAND, WE FOUND A LACK OF COORDINATION IN SOME OF THESE PROGRAMS - A REAL DEARTH OF INFORMATION AS TO THE EXPERIENCE OF MINORITY GROUP MEMBERS IN RELATION TO THEM.

WHETHER OR NOT THERE CAN BE A REALIZATION OF A FULL MANPOWER POTENTIAL THROUGH EXISTING TRAINING PROGRAMS REMAINS UNANSWERED. THERE IS A NEED FOR STUDY AND RESEARCH TO DETERMINE WHETHER THESE TRAINING PROGRAMS ARE CARRIED OUT IN THE TRADITIONAL MANNER OR WITH A REAL SENSITIVITY TO THE FACT THAT THERE CAN NEVER BE FULL UTILIZATION OF OUR MANPOWER IF THE TRADITIONAL PRACTICES OF EXCLUSION ARE FOLLOWED IN MANY TRAINING PROGRAMS NOW BEING CONDUCTED.

THE PRIMARY RESPONSIBILITY FOR CAREER PLANNING AND JOB TRAINING LIES IN OUR HOMES, SCHOOLS, COMMUNITY AGENCIES, LABOR AND MANAGEMENT. IT IS WITH THESE INSTITUTIONS THAT THE NAIRO PROFESSIONAL IN THE COMMUNITY MUST EXAMINE AND EXPLORE HIS ROLE AND RELATIONSHIPS. TO WHAT EXTENT DOES THE GUIDANCE WORKER AND THE EDUCATOR ACCEPT THE STEREOTYPE PATTERN OF CAREERS FOR MINORITY YOUTHS, THUS HOLDING ON TO AND ENTRENCHING UNEQUAL VOCATIONAL CONCEPTS WHICH FURTHER SUPPORT AND REINFORCE DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES?

HOW CAN THE NAIRO MEMBER HELP THESE INSTITUTIONS TO RECONCILE THE EXPRESSED STATEMENT OF NON-DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES BY LABOR, INDUSTRY AND GOVERNMENT, WITH THE HARSH FACTS OF PRACTICE IN THE COMMUNITY? WHAT RESPONSIBILITY HAVE THESE INSTITUTIONS TO DEAL WITH THE PROBLEM OF SELF-EXCLUSION ATTITUDES OF THEIR CLIENTS? HOW CAN THE NAIRO MEMBER HELP DEVELOP AND COOPERATE IN PROGRAMS DEALING WITH THE ATTITUDINAL ASPECT OF THE PROBLEM?

IT IS OUR HOPE THAT FUTURE NAIRO MANPOWER COMMISSIONS WILL MEET THE CHALLENGE OF THE CHANGES IN EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY AND THE RELATED PROBLEMS, BY PROVIDING COUNSEL, PROGRAMS AND STUDIES BEARING ON THESE CHANGES.

JOHN K. GALBRAITH IN HIS BOOK THE AFFLUENT SOCIETY USES THE TERM " CONVENTIONAL WISDOM" TO DEFINE WHAT IS COMMONLY TERMED "ACCEPTED PRACTICES AND THOUGHTS" IN SOCIETY OR BY ORGANIZATIONS. HE MAKES THE POINT THAT EVENTS AND NOT NECESSARILY IDEAS ARE THE MAJOR INFLUENCING FACTORS IN AFFECTING CHANGE. IF WE APPLY THIS CONCEPT TO THE PROBLEM OF MANPOWER UTILIZATION, THEN THE REAL CHALLENGE FOR THE FUTURE IS HOW TO DEAL WITH CHANGE AND MOVE FORWARD TO THE END THAT MANPOWER TRAINING AND UTILIZATION POLICIES WILL BE MORE REALISTIC AND PRACTICAL IN THE LIGHT OF PRESENT AND FUTURE DEMANDS AND REQUIREMENTS.

TO ACCOMPLISH THIS, GUIDANCE, TRAINING, APPRENTICESHIPS AND JOBS MUST BE MADE AVAILABLE TO THE TOTAL POPULATION ON THE BASIS OF INDIVIDUAL POTENTIAL, ABILITY AND INTEREST. SO-CALLED MINORITY GROUP STATUS IN EMPLOYMENT AND ITS DETERRENTS, MUST, FOR THE SIMPLE REASON OF ECONOMIC NECESSITY AND NATIONAL SURVIVAL, BE FIRST TO COMPLETELY DISAPPEAR FROM THE DOMESTIC SCENE.

Dear Mr. Spiegler:

I am painfully conscious of my promise to update the Washington speech and submit it to you in time for the Fall issue of the Journal. My apologies for not having written you before now.

The problem about this that has been gnawing at me is the obsoleteness of the Washington speech. In almost every respect, it has been outdated by later developments in the lunch-counter situation. We we -- or, at least, I -- had hoped would be a job of moderate revision has become the need to write a new article altogether. This I have wanted to do, but simply haven't been able to manage.

The problem is further complicated by the fact that what is said today about the sit-ins may be ancient history within a few weeks. The students are back in college and are shaping their plans for renewed protests on a massive scale.

In view of all this, I would like to ask for a reprieve, at least until the deadline for the next issue. I hope you'll be charitable about my letting you down, and I'll look forward to word on a new deadline.

I am holding space in the Autumn 1960 issue of the Journal of Intergroup Relations for an article by you.

You will remember, I hope, your letter of May 23, in which you promised to revise and update your talk in Washington last May on the "sit-ins" into an article for our Journal.

We should close this issue within the next few days. Please write me whether or not we can expect your contribution in time for this issue, or whether we shall schedule it for the next.

Best regards.

Dear Sam:

At last I have got back to the office long enough to get the enclosed typed. It is largely a reworked version of the Washington speech made last spring, which was what you requested. I would have been happier with a completely fresh approach -- perhaps something along the lines of my remarks at Cincinnati last week -- but there simply hasn't been the time to start from scratch.

Anyhow, I hope it will serve.

It was good to see you, though briefly, at the annual conference.

"THE CHANGING SOUTH AND THE SIT-INS"

by: Harold C. Fleming
Southern Regional Council
Atlanta, Georgia

That durable term "the changing South" has become something of a cliche, especially since the Supreme Court's school decision of 1954. Until recently, any intergroup relations worker with any claim to a Southern exposure could be expected to produce a ready-made speech or article on this subject at a moment's notice. Now, however, the canned presentation won't do. Since February 1, 1960, and the advent of the student protest movement, "the changing South" has taken on profound new meanings, and fresh insights and interpretations are required. For the South has reached a psychological turning-point as important as the legal turning-point of 1954.

To understand this, we first need to consider how civil rights progress is made in the South. It results from a complicated interplay of forces: a variety of pressures from inside and outside the region, and the response of the powers-that-be to those pressures. This complex process can't be reduced to a formula. But if it could, we know what some of the main factors in the equation would be.

One factor is what might be called the national will. Negroes are, after all, a minority in the South, as in the country as a whole. The rapidity and the extent of their advance toward equal rights depend on the support they get from the federal government and other national institutions. This support is increasing at an accelerating rate. Since 1957 Congress has passed the first two Civil Rights Acts since Reconstruction; the platforms of both major parties this year contained stronger civil rights planks than in living memory; and the new administration is pledged to vigorous action against discrimination.

Yet, from a Southern vantage point, there is still cause for concern about the depth of the national commitment in this field. As one follows the Congressional maneuvers, reads some of the statements made by influential Americans, views the performance of national business, religious, and other institutions, there are grounds aplenty for uneasiness. When, for example, the Congress of the United States refuses to endorse the Supreme Court's school decision, resistance to the decision gets a new lease on life. To the extent that Southerners can find evidence that the rest of the nation (or the "North") is hypocritical in its allegiance to civil rights, to that extent they can more easily deny the inevitability and rightness of integration.

A second factor in our hypothetical equation is the readiness of white leadership in the South to come to terms with the new aspirations of Negroes and the mandates they have won in the courts and the marketplace. In this respect, the solid South falls abruptly apart. As the school desegregation issue has demonstrated, the enthusiasm for another Pickett's charge is by no means universal in the former Confederate states. To be sure, there never has been much power behind voluntary change in the South. What differentiates one part of the region from another is a quality of reasonableness, a willingness to make some concessions to the inevitable, and an unwillingness to cut off the nose to spite the face. These are not heroic virtues, but to anyone concerned about civil rights in the South, they are important ones. And fortunately they are spreading. The severest challenge of the die-hard segregationists is not coming exclusively from Negroes and the Federal government; it is also coming from fellow whites who want to keep the public school system and the business economy intact.

Finally, and most importantly, there is the determination of Negroes themselves to achieve equal rights. This is the indispensable factor -- or, to change the analogy, the steam in the boiler, without which the engine won't move. And the steam is building up. The sit-in protests are the most dramatic evidence yet that Negro Southerners are no longer willing to play the part of contented subordinates, the role in which they were cast for so long by the white South.

True, it is the young people who have been doing most of the demonstrating, but they have widespread support among their elders. The demonstrations have fired the imagination of the Negro group, young and old, and there is no sign that the movement will fizzle out as so many complacent people assumed at the beginning. Rather, it is broadening its range of both objective and techniques.

The most important effect of the "sit-ins" may not be the number of lunch-counters or other facilities desegregated -- although the total is impressive -- but the communication they establish across racial lines. Southern whites cling tenaciously to the myth of the "happy Negro," who not only acquiesces in segregation, but finds a positive joy in it. All of the events that have transpired since May 1954 have not yet dispelled this wistful image. It is not hard to understand why. At some level of consciousness, even the most prejudiced person knows that segregation is an impossibility if Negroes en masse refuse to play the game.

Whenever and wherever a majority of the segregated gropp begin simply to refuse to play by the old rules, the only way segregation can be maintained is through continuous and ruthless coercion - in effect, through a police state. In our kind of society -- particularly the modern, urban South -- this is not a tolerable prospect. For it would mean sacrificing everything else the society is striving for -- industry, prosperity, law and order, and social progress on every other front.

Thr trouble is, however, that the response of most white Southern leadership is lagging far behind the realities of the situation. Not all the reactions have been negative. Some white students and adults, some newspapers, some religious leaders, some public officials, and some merchants have accepted the legitimacy of the goals, if not always the methods, of the protest. Some cities have risen to the occasion with a truly community-wide decision to open lunch counters to all patrons, and others are trembling on the brink of democratic countermanship. But such instances are more than matched by the sullen immobility or harsh repressive measures with which many communities have met the demonstrations. Even the communities that have made progress have hardly realized and accepted the breadth and speed of change now required.

In short, the steam of protest is steadily building up in the boiler, but there is not yet a commensurate opening of the safety valves of adjustment.

I am not predicting a major racial explosion in the South as a whole. Hopefully, there are now enough escape valves -- in the form of the courts and a somewhat more realistic climate of opinion in the South -- to prevent any region-wide eruption of violence. In fact, the dismal portents in the South today are probably better balanced by hopeful ones than ever before. But it is not our business to comfort ourselves by dwelling on the bright side of intergroup relations. And it is a sober fact, I believe, that if we continue on the present course, much of the South is in for a further era of bad feeling.

The relevant question, of course, is: How can a general upsurge of interracial hostility and tension be averted? More specifically, what can human relations agencies do to substitute orderly processes of change for a destructive war of attrition?

It is beyond my allotted space -- to say nothing of competence -- to give a detailed answer. But I will venture a few brief suggestions.

Obviously, there cannot be too much sound and persuasive interpretation of the deeper meanings of the protest movement. The great danger is that white leadership will underestimate the depth and seriousness of the Negroes' discontent and determination. Whatever we can do to dispel the usual miasma of myths and clarify the realities as we see them, should be done through the press and other media, through our own publications and speakers, through face-to-face consultation with leaders of our states and communities.

The current situation presents unlimited opportunity for the community relations specialist. In dozens of cities in the South, the push-and-pull of the decision-making process is going on in the face of, or in the wake of, demonstrations. No doubt in some of these places even a small-scale push by persons of professional competence in intergroup relations could tip the balance favorably.

There is a premium on the techniques of negotiation in many areas. With all due tribute to the students for their dignity and courage, few if any of them have had any experience in the give-and-take of bargaining. And few merchants or public officials know how to deal with Negroes, particularly Negro youngsters, as equals at the conference table. Intergroup agencies have a special obligation to help bridge this gap.

Nothing is more crucial in the protest situation than the performance of the police. Harsh, punitive law enforcement can almost be guaranteed to convert an economic tug-of-war between two elements of the citizenry into an ugly racial crisis. Where there is bad faith on the part of the police, this is no doubt inevitable. But in many places poor judgment and ineptness rather than evil intentions lead to police mistakes. Here, intergroup relations agencies and the community leaders who work with them can make a decisive difference.

We need to make the best possible use of successful precedents. There are now a good many Southern cities that have rallied enough business, religious, and political leadership to desegregate lunch counters and, here and there, other public accommodations. We need to study these processes of decision -- as well as those that have failed -- and interpret them to the communities where well intentioned efforts are possible or in progress. Equally important, we need to help get these successful precedents perceived and understood in the public forum, south and north. The morale-boosting effect may do as much as their informational value to point the way for uncertain and faint-hearted community leaders.

Finally, there is the general responsibility not only to prod but to assist the forces of government in this area. The new national administration presumably will need all the constructive advice and help it can get in implementing constitutional guarantees. This is a test of the competence of every agency concerned about discrimination. Having lamented loudly the shortcomings of the Federal establishment, what workable recommendations and what practical support are we now prepared to offer?

NAIRO holds as a basic tenet that intergroup relations work is, or ought to be, a profession, not merely a sentimental journey into the realm of brotherhood. If it hasn't already passed, the time is surely here when we must deliver on this optimistic promise. In the South today -- and in other areas as well, of course -- we are no longer limited to the role of neglected prophets or voices in the wilderness. The South is full of people in decision-making positions who are beginning to want what we claim to offer -- if not out of moral commitment, at least out of the pinch of practical necessity. There will never be a better time to show what we can do in a seller's market.

NAIRO's Board of Directors will hold its quarterly meeting on Friday and Saturday, January 13th and 14th, in New York City. We will meet in the offices of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, Room 1530, 55 West 42nd Street.

Please note that we are experimenting with a shift from our traditional time schedule: we will meet at 4 P.M. on Friday, convene again after dinner, and meet on Saturday until 3 P.M.

This change was suggested by several members reluctant or unable to give up a full working day; its success will depend on your willingness to remain until mid-afternoon on Saturday.

We will have a full agenda of important items of business. A copy will be mailed to you early next month.

I am happy to report that the McGregor Fund of Detroit has awarded us one more $5,000 grant (1961). This is the Fund's fourth such grant to us for operating expenses, and we are warned that it will be the last.

Dear George:

Since I am not going to be able to make the NAIRO meeting this weekend, this is to answer your letter of December 28 without further delay.

I am complimented, of course, that you and the Board members want me to be responsible for drafting this year's statement of concern. I have given the matter a good deal of thought and had an opportunity to discuss it with Fred Routh when he was here over the New Year weekend.

It is a stimulating assignment, and I would like to do justice to it. It is only fair to point out, however, that my own work and knowledge, such as it is, are focused on the South. Therefore, any statement I produce, even with the help of other Board members, is likely to be disproportionately directed toward problems of intergroup relations.

If you are willing to accept this limitation, I shall be glad to accept the appointment.

My very best regards.

Dear Harold:

You have been relieved of one NAIRO assignment only to be handed another. I presented your name to the Board on November 18 as Chairman of the Resolutions Committee and it was approved with enthusiasm. The Civil Rights Commission, which you had for a part of last year, has not yet been filled but we think you can be of greater service in this spot. I sincerely hope you will find it possible to accept.

The function of the "committee" is to develop a draft statement of concern. In 1958, when we first began the tradition, it was said that "the statement of concern is seen as a more appropriate alternative to specific topical resolutions; it is hoped that its early submission to the membership will encourage its consideration by local NAIRO groups (now Chapters) in advance of the Annual Meeting."

Two pertinent observations are that it has never been a committee and only once was a draft sent out in advance and this not in time for group discussion. Both original ideas are sound--can we make it work? There has been considerable criticism during the last two years about the amount of time taken at the Annual Conference for discussion of the statement and the impossibility of making basic changes at that time. The length of the document has also made it practically useless for any purpose except study. There has always been a feeling that some pronouncement should come from the Conference that would have meaning and be of interest to the general public. In this we have failed.

All of the above is intended to challenge you rather than discourage you from undertaking this task. If we could just devise a method of putting together and getting out a timely "state of the nation in intergroup relations" I am convinced that we would make a real contribution to the country--all of it. The Board meets on January 13-14 in New York City. I hope you can be there and if not that you will write to me before that date.

Sincerely,

George

Dear George:

This is to give you my affirmative vote on the questions raised in your memoranda of February 20 and 22. I think the task force idea is an excellent one and, of course, I will be glad to contribute whatever I can to it. I am not certain at this moment whether I can make the Washington meeting, but I will do it if at all possible.

I would like to advance one suggestion. I notice that I am the only Southerner in the group (excluding such emeritus figures as Fred Routh and Alex Miller). If it is not too late to consider enlarging the committee, I strongly urge that at least one other Southern member be added. There are obvious candidates -- John Hope, Herman Long, Paul Rilling, among them.

I will look forward to further instructions from you on this very timely project.

To: Lloyd Davis, Fred Routh, Harold Fleming, George Nesbitt, Booker McGraw, Alex Miller, Robert Greene, John Lassoe, David Danzig, Will Maslow, Reginald Johnson, John Morsell, John Feild, Arnold Aronson, Ed Rutledge, John Yoshino

From: George W. Culberson, President
Date: February 22, 1961
Subject: NAIRO TASK FORCE: Intergroup Relations and the Federal Government

I am asking each of you to accept appointment to membership on a special Task Force to prepare recommendations on the scope and function of an intergroup relations bureau in the Federal Government and related matters. Acceptance will entail preliminary home work for all, special work assignments for some, and a final two-day work session for all who can make it to Washington on March 25 and 26, 1961.

The need for NAIRO to make such proposals, the method by which it could be accomplished, and the timing, has been the subject of correspondence and telephone consultations between Lloyd Davis, John Lassoe, Fred Routh, Bob Greene, John Feild and myself for the last two weeks. Time is of the essence, as is due deliberation by a sufficiently large and knowledgeable cross-section of our membership. The weekend dates, following the annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House seemed to provide the best and most suitable time for the face-to-face phase of the work to be done.

In assuming the chairmanship of the Task Force, I am asking Bob Greene, as chairman of the Washington Chapter and also chairman of the Department of Federal Services, to serve as Executive Secretary for the Task Force. He has already arranged for use of the Michigan Room in the Statler-Hilton Hotel from 9 to 5 on these two days and those who do not have private housing should consider staying in this hotel. The preliminary work assignments mentioned above are being outlined now by those mentioned in paragraph two, under the leadership of John Lassoe.

The Washington Chapter of NAIRO, in cooperation with the Department of Federal Services, has had a Study Group at work and have completed an inventory of "Intergroup Relations in the Federal Government as of the end of 1960." This will be made available to each of you who find it possible to accept appointment on the Task Force. This, and your assignment, await your favorable reply.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
ROOM 209, 426 WEST 58TH STREET. NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • JU 6-0782

20 February 1961

To: All members of the Board
From: George W. Culberson, President
Subject: NAIRO Task Force: The U.S. Government and Intergroup Relations

I am asking permission of the Board to appoint a special NAIRO Task Force to consider the role of the U.S. Government in Intergroup Relations and make recommendations on the needed services throughout the Federal establishment.

Beginning with the January Board meeting there has been a growing feeling among several of our Board members and others that NAIRO has a responsibility, and should accept it, for pooling our experience and setting forth a statement with recommendations to the new administration. Lloyd Davis, Fred Routh, John Feild, John Lassoe, Robert Greene and I have exchanged correspondence and held lengthy telephone conversations on the subject. In addition, the Washington Chapter and the Department of Federal Services have had a Study Group come up with an inventory of Intergroup Services in the Federal Government, as of the end of 1960. There is unanimous opinion on the part of those mentioned and many others on the Washington scene that some action of this nature is needed and that NAIRO is the proper organization to present such proposals.

Time is of the essence. The task force would have no more than 45 days from this date to complete its work. I shall therefore anticipate your favorable reaction and ask seventeen persons to serve. The task force members will be assigned specific areas for advance preparation and then come together for two days of work, March 25 and 26, 1961, in Washington, immediately following the annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House. I shall ask the following to serve with me on this committee:

Lloyd Davis	Booker McGraw	John Feild
Fred Routh	Robert Greene	Alex Miller
Harold Fleming	John Lassoe	John Morsell
Arnold Aronson	David Danzig	John Yoshino
Ed Rutledge	Will Maslow	George Culberson
George Nesbitt	Reginald Johnson

I am asking you to give this group the power to act in the name of NAIRO.

Will you vote on the enclosed card and return immediately?

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 Forsyth Street, NW

MEMORANDUM March 17, 1961

TO: Robert Greene

FROM: Harold C. Fleming

RE: NAIRO TASK FORCE.

Having been out of town for the past week, I was past the deadline of March 15 before I saw George Culberson's memorandum. This is no doubt of minor importance, since much of my thinking on the questions propounded was incorporated in the Southern Regional Council's report The Federal Executive and Civil Rights.

All I will attempt here, therefore, are a few random and obvious points about intergroup relations specialists and services.

(1) The Executive Branch should draw on intergroup relations skills for both the internal and external functions of the major Federal agencies. Internally, training programs should be carried on, especially in the field of personnel recruitment and practices involving minority groups. Externally, experienced IROs can contribute to effective techniques for reducing discrimination in all situations which are influenced by Federal funds or services.

(2) Criteria for the selection of intergroup relations personnel should, it seems to me, be heavily weighted on the side of experience. The private anti-discrimination agencies should serve as the training ground for IROs who enter Federal service, and these should be professionals of established and demonstrated competence. I see little virtue in recruiting persons, however impressive their academic or other qualifications, if they have not actually had working experience in the field.

(3) Full-time IROs are not the sole answer to the Federal Government's needs. Many situations will be better served by consultants from non-Federal agencies. More skill can be brought to bear more quickly through the generous use of such consultants, and they will have more independence than full-time Federal employees.

(4) Feed-back within the various Federal agencies is poor. Administrators at the top have no systematic way of evaluating intergroup relations practices down the line. This is partly a problem of motivation, but also partly a problem of indifference and bureaucratic habit. There is no agency that would not benefit from an informed examination of this aspect of its internal reporting and communications.

(5) The needs of the agencies that are specifically charged with civil rights responsibilities -- the Civil Rights Commission, Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice, the new Committee on Employment, and so on -- are obvious. But what about the Office of Education, the Civil Service Commission, the hospital and welfare programs of HEW, and others that have major civil rights byproducts? (The Housing agencies currently present less of a problem in this respect.) In many ways, these agencies influence intergroup relations far more profoundly than the civil rights agencies, yet professional attention to this aspect of their programs is virtually non-existent.

(6) Through the various exchange programs, the Federal Government is bringing thousands of foreign visitors into the country yearly, many of them from sensitive non-white nations. The briefing, scheduling, and hosting of these visitors is too often perfunctory and haphazard. At stake is the reputation of the United States in decisive areas of the world. Intergroup relations specialists have an obvious role to play in shaping conscious, carefully planned approaches to the servicing of foreign visitors. A similar need exists in the foreign service, the USIA, and other programs which interpret America abroad.

(7) Research is needed in a variety of areas -- notably on the question of devising better ways to measure the potential (as contrasted with achievement) of minority-group applicants for Federal positions. Without favoring incompetence, the Federal agencies need to give disadvantaged minorities a chance to "catch up," which means allowing for differences created by the psychological environment. Many Negroes, for example, have not had a chance in private employment to demonstrate the full potential of which they are capable; given fuller opportunity and incentive to advance in Federal service, their achievement might be expected to rise rapidly. The problem is to measure this potential as a factor to be considered along with the conventional criteria of academic and employment records, civil service examinations, etc.

Dear Irv:

Each year NAIRO's President names Regional Chairmen to advance our program in each of the country's various geographic areas (and, incidentally, to serve as ex officio members of the Board of Directors). I am writing at this time to ask you to serve in that capacity in the Northeast Region, covering the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. I do hope that I can prevail upon you to accept this responsibility.

The Board of Directors sees the Regional Chairman as the link between the local NAIRO groups and the Board of Directors, and the local groups' reports and the Board's decisions should flow through him. The Regional Chairman also recommends local membership representatives in his region but, once these have been coopted by the Membership Chairman, they relate directly to the Membership Committee (not through the Regional Chairman, as in previous years). The duties of the Regional Chairman thus relate primarily to program, rather than to membership recruitment.

In addition to stimulating and working with local NAIRO groups, the Regional Chairmen are asked in 1959 to organize or foster regional conferences in their respective areas. These conferences are seen as regional gatherings of our members (and other intergroup relations workers) around topics of common concern: substantive matters suggested by the NAIRO Commissions, professional questions stemming from the Board or NAIRO Committees, even items referred by the Annual Conference. A list of these - by no means binding or exhaustive - will be sent to you by the National Office; local NAIRO groups in your region may well have additional suggestions.

In setting up any such regional NAIRO meeting, you will have my full cooperation and that of your fellow Board members; you may also count on all the help that the National Office can provide, and, wherever possible, John Lassoe will make a point of attending each of these conferences. You do have at your disposal a modest regional allowance of $100, even more under special circumstances, to help cover initial outlay (postage, announcements, meeting space, etc.) -- although conference registration fees collected from non-NAIRO members and other contributions should help defray some of the costs. It is, incidentally, the Board's feeling that NAIRO members should not be asked to pay registration fees for these regional meetings.

All of this can be discussed in greater detail when you are ready to plan such a meeting. In the meantime, I hope that you will give special attention to the needs of existing local groups in your area -- and to the possibility of encouraging new ones. Please do not hesitate to communicate as frequently as you wish and need with me or with John Lassoe. Shortly after the first of the year, he will be sending you a list of members in your region, a supply of stationery, and other NAIRO material to aid you in your regional activities.

I hope very much that you will accept this invitation to serve NAIRO in yet another capacity. We hope that the regional chairmanships (now eight in number) will this year reach full development, providing a better channel between regional and national NAIRO and fostering greater activity on the local scene -- to the special benefit, I might add, of those members who find it impossible to attend our national meetings. Your active service is our best hope of accomplishing this in your region, and I look forward to working with you this year.

Each year NAIRO's President names Regional Chairmen to advance our program in each of the country's various geographic areas (and, incidentally, to serve as ex officio members of the Board of Directors). I am writing at this time to ask you to serve in that capacity in the Middle South Region, covering the states of Delaware, Maryland, Washington, D.C., West Virginia, Virginia Kentucky and Tennessee. I do hope that I can prevail upon you to accept this responsibility.

The Board of Directors sees the Regional Chairman as the link between the local NAIRO groups and the Board of Directors, and the local groups' reports and the Board's decisions should flow through him. The Regional Chairman also recommends local membership representatives in his region but, once these have been coopted by the Membership Chairman, they relate directly to the Membership Committee (not through the Regional Chairman, as in previous years). The duties of the Regional Chairman thus relate primarily to program, rather than to membership recruitment.

In addition to stimulating and working with local NAIRO groups, the Regional Chairmen are asked in 1959 to organize or foster regional conferences in their respective areas. These conferences are seen as regional gatherings of our members (and other intergroup relations workers) around topics of common concern: substantive matters suggested by the NAIRO Commissions, professional questions stemming from the Board or NAIRO Committees, even items referred by the Annual Conference. A list of these - by no means binding or exhaustive - will be sent you by the National Office; local NAIRO groups in your region may well have additional suggestions.

In setting up any such regional NAIRO meeting, you will have my full cooperation and that of your fellow Board members; you may also count on all the help that the National Office can provide, and, wherever possible, John Lassoe will make a point of attending each of these conferences. You do have at your disposal a modest regional allowance of $100, even more under special circumstances, to help cover initial outlay (postage, announcements, meeting space, etc.) -- although conference registration fees collected from non-NAIRO members and other contributions should help defray some of the costs. It is, incidentally, the Board's feeling that NAIRO members should not be asked to pay registration fees for these regional meetings.

All of this can be discussed in greater detail when you are ready to plan such a meeting. In the meantime, I hope that you will give special attention to the needs of existing local groups in your area -- and to the possibility of encouraging new ones. Please do not hesitate to communicate as frequently as you wish and need with me or with John Lassoe. Shortly after the first of the year, he will be sending you a list of members in your region, a supply of stationery, and other NAIRO material to aid you in your regional activities.

I hope very much that you will accept this invitation to serve NAIRO in yet another capacity. We hope that the regional chairmanships (now eight in number) will this year reach full development, providing a better channel between regional and national NAIRO and fostering greater activity on the local scene -- to the special benefit, I might add, of those members who find it impossible to attend our national meetings. Your active service is our best hope of accomplishing this in your region, and I look forward to working with you this year.

Sincerely yours,

Margaret Garrity

It was a pleasure to talk to you in California recently, and to ask you to serve as Regional Chairman of the Southwest area for NAIRO for the coming year. Dear Elmo:

We are now in the process of organizing the various Commissions, Departments, and Committees of NAIRO for the year 1959, and I write with the earnest hope that I can prevail upon you to accept the chairmanship of the Department of Local Private. I do hope that you will be willing to serve NAIRO and the field of intergroup relations in this capacity, since I am especially anxious to have you head that Department and to continue the good work of your predecessors.

The function of the Department, with which you are already familiar, can be re-stated simply: to provide a forum for the exchange of information and ideas among professionals working in the same type of agency -- in this case, local private services. It is our feeling that the Departments' constant focus should be on methods and techniques, and operational questions, leaving substantive and conceptual matters to the respective Commissions. In terms of continuing activity, we hope that each Department will be able to issue a modest newsletter for its members and that each Department will take primary responsibility for planning its session at the Annual Conference. Over and above those specific assignments, we would leave additional program to your discretion and imagination.

Your membership is pre-determined: every member of NAIRO is assigned automatically to a Department according to the type of agency in which he works. These names will be sent to you by the NAIRO office; you may then want to organize a small steering committee, using those members in your own area and/or selected other members contacted by mail. In this, you are free to follow your own thinking; you might also want to get suggestions from your immediate predecessor, Lloyd Davis.

Dear Joe:

I am very pleased that you have agreed to serve as chairman of the 1959 Conference Committee; I hardly need add that all of us are looking forward to meeting in San Juan next October. After our conversations, I talked at length with Lloyd Davis, who will chair the Conference Program Committee, and I am convinced that your two committees will be able to coordinate their respective plans without difficulty.

Your Committee is of course responsible for all physical arrangements, Conference registration, Conference publicity, local hospitality, and all other Conference details not relating directly to program content. In addition, the Conference Committee has traditionally selected the speaker for the Annual Banquet (clearing this choice, of course, with the Conference Program Committee); the Annual Banquet is considered to be NAIRO's major show piece in the local community, and we want the program for it to be such that local leaders will want to attend.

I am asking Lloyd to name you and Tony Vega as members of his committee, and I hope that you will name Lloyd and Tony as members of yours. I think that we can in this way secure maximum coordination between the two bodies.

I do appreciate your willingness to undertake such a major job for NAIRO and I want to assure you of my cooperation throughout the year ahead. Please feel free to coopt any members of NAIRO that you want on your committee and to call on John Lassoe for any help that he can provide. You may also want to communicate with Lou Mason and Sidney Lawrence, to draw on their experiences managing previous NAIRO Conferences. I know that they would be pleased to help.

Dear Lloyd:

I am delighted that you have agreed to serve as chairman of the 1959 Conference Program Committee. I think that our past few Conferences have set a very good pattern and I am sure that the meeting next October will be even better. It offers us two new challenges since it is our first four-day meeting and our first outside the mainland. Puerto Rico, of course, offers us many interesting program possibilities.

Your Committee is charged with developing the entire program for that session - schedule, theme, subjects, speakers, discussants, etc. The Conference Arrangements Committee has traditionally had the major voice in the selection of the speaker for the Annual Banquet, subject to the approval of your committee; in addition, I have assured Joseph Monserrat that you would work closely with him this year in developing that vital program. He has obviously a special interest in having our program reflect some of the uniqueness of our meeting site; this is highly desirable but I feel that we must also insure that our program continues to reflect NAIRO's other concerns.

I have asked Joe to name Tony Vega and you as members of his committee; I hope that you will reciprocate by naming Joe and Tony as members of yours. As for the rest of your committee, you will remember that the Board authorized you to select them in consultation with me. Our choices are subject to Board approval at the March meeting, but obviously the committee will have to begin its work before then.

Let me assure you of my cooperation throughout the year. Please feel free to draw whatever help you need from John Lassoe and from previous Conference Program Committee chairmen. All of us will do all within our power to help you in your important task.

Dear Marsh:

I am delighted that you have agreed to accept chairmanship of the Resolutions Committee and the responsibility for drafting a tentative statement of concern for consideration by the membership. I use the word "committee" very loosely; previous chairmen have seen fit to operate as a committee of one, and you may feel free to follow suit or to coopt others.

I shall ask the Board - at its meeting on March 6-7, 1959 to consider the possibility of securing approval of this statement of concern by mail referendum. As I see it, this would involve the following steps: (1) soliciting suggestions and recommendations from Commission chairmen and other key people in NAIRO, (2) drafting a statement and sending it to the membership for their comments and suggestions, (3) redrafting the statement on the basis of comments received from the membership at large, and (4) submitting the final draft to the membership for approval as our official statement. I would guess that the first draft should go in July and the final draft early in September. This would permit us to issue the statement during or just before the Conference.

Should the Board decide to continue our present practice, fewer steps are involved. You will solicit suggestions or recommendations from the same people and prepare a draft statement for submission to the members at or just before the Conference. The final draft would we worked out in business meetings, as was the case this year. In this event, I assure you that someone else - perhaps Arnie Aronson - would be asked to head the floor discussion, as you requested.

Except for the correspondence, this job is primarily one of thinking and writing. I feel that you are eminently qualified to do both and I reiterate my pleasure at your willingness to serve NAIRO in this capacity. Please be assured of my cooperation during the year ahead.

Dear Burt:

This letter will serve to congratulate you on officially taking over the duties of Treasurer; perhaps it should also include some expression of commiseration. You have taken on a vital but arduous task, and NAIRO owes you a great deal for your willingness to serve in this way. I do hope that you will call on me and on the national office - or indeed on any of your fellow Board members - for such help as we can provide.

As Treasurer, you also become automatically Chairman of NAIRO's Finance Committee, the major task of which is to prepare our budget for the following year (1960). Since this is not considered until the November meeting, the budget responsibility will not press upon you for several months. The Board may from time to time assign other responsibilities to your committee but none are outstanding at this moment. Members of the committee are chosen by you at your discretion; they may or may not be Board members.

Looking over the Board minutes and the budget that we adopted, I see a few financial items that might require additional consideration by a committee, e.g., the decision to cut the Reporter from ten to six issues annually, the decision to publish the Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Staff, and the decision to allow regional chairmen to spend more than their former share ($100) of the money allocated to regional promotion, under special circumstances. On the other hand, these may be matters that you and I can work out in consultation with John Lassoe. I am sending a carbon of this letter to George Culberson for his comments and suggestions.

I don't know anything about the Board decision of raising $100 from Board members of intergroup relations agencies but think it a fine idea. Why don't you write both George and John for their reaction.

I look forward to working with you during the year ahead.

Dear George:

I am delighted that you have consented to serve as chairman of NAIRO's Professional Standards Committee during the coming year; this seems especially appropriate in the light of the discussion of standards and accreditation at the most recent meetings of the Resources and Planning Committee. I feel that the Committee must pull together the strands left by its predecessors and move firmly toward some clearer definition of standards and/or some working proposal for accreditation.

I am aware of the ideas on accreditation expressed by your subcommittee in the Resources and Planning Committee discussions, but I feel that we cannot even ask for the money that would make possible employment of such a staff person until someone has sketched the outlines of an inquiry into standards, some basic working definitions, and the goals of the process - to wit, the purpose and methods of accreditation. I do not want to define your committee's assignment too narrowly because I am confident that you see these needs even more clearly than I do. I merely express my earnest hope that we can move much closer to consensus within our profession during this year, and I do realize what a big task this imposes on you.

You are, of course, free to coopt any NAIRO members that you wish to have on your committee. I assume that your working core will be in Philadelphia, but you may want to have corresponding members - perhaps in subcommittees - elsewhere. Please be assured of my cooperation throughout the year and please feel free to call on the National Office for any help that it can provide.

I am indeed grateful for your willingness to serve NAIRO in yet another capacity. You have both my personal and official thanks for this.

Sincerely yours,

Margaret Garrity

Dear Bill:

I am very grateful to you for agreeing to undertake a job of such vital importance to NAIRO and its future development. Your chairmanship of the Resources and Planning Committee comes at a critical time in our development when we look to the committee for the short-term plans that will keep us alive and the long-range plans that will permit our fulfillment as a professional association of first rank. After our luncheon talk, I do not think that I need to repeat here the details of the committee's assignment. I will simply reiterate the fact that it has both a short-term and long-term responsibility, the former for projects that will bring financial support in the immediate future and the latter for projects and plans that will permit us to serve our field better in years to come. Fortunately, as I indicated, some members of the Committee are especially interested in one phase, while others would prefer to concentrate on the other. You may decide that one or both should be subcommittee assignments. I leave this to your discretion.

The membership of your committee consists automatically of all past presidents and present officers. In addition, you may coopt any member of NAIRO that you wish, but I do recommend that you delay any such expansion until you have had an opportunity to meet and work with the present members, most of whom have served on the committee since its inception.

I assure you of my cooperation during the year ahead and I urge you to feel free to call on me, John Lassoe or Lou Radelet for any special help that you might want. Again, please accept my thanks for your willingness to serve NAIRO in this capacity.

Sincerely yours,

Margaret Garrity

Dear Ted:

I am very grateful to you for agreeing to accept the chairmanship of NAIRO's Legal Committee during the coming year and I am especially pleased that we have at last recognized formally your many advisory services to us in the past.

I hope that I may refer to you and your Committee any questions relating to our corporate status, our tax exemption as an educational organization, and the legal propriety of any projects or programs that we might consider in seeking areas of future development. In addition, I hope that you will feel free to offer any suggestions or recommendations that you or your committee might deem appropriate whether or not an advisory opinion has been solicited. Since this is a new committee, we will need your help in developing its function. You are, of course, free to coopt any members of NAIRO that you wish.

Please accept my thanks for agreeing to serve NAIRO in yet another capacity and please be assured of my cooperation during the coming year.

Dear Sam:

I am very pleased that the Board elected you to serve as our Membership Chairman during the coming year and that you were willing to accept this responsibility. Continued growth of NAIRO's membership is extremely important for our future and, since I learned the latest estimate of 1,400 professionals in our field, I have realized how small our number still is.

I understand that John Lassoe has outlined to you the duties and functions of the Membership Committee and has asked Thelma Babbitt to share with you the benefit of her good service as your predecessor. I will not add to that except to express my own personal hope that your committee may be able to devise ways of recruiting new members in some of the professions allied to in-group relations. I think, for example, of some of the personnel people in industry with whom I have been in contact over the past few years. Many of them are interested in our work, are engaged in intergroup relations in some fashion, and are equipped to offer as much as they gain from continuing association with us. There must be many such people in other cities and other fields, and I hope that we can both reach and recruit them increasingly. Perhaps you will want to name a few members of your committee to concentrate on this phase alone. This is, of course, entirely up to you.

You are free to coopt any NAIRO members that you would like to have on your committee. You will probably want to ask the regional chairmen for their suggestions of key people around the country but you will undoubtedly want to enlist others as well. I hope that your committee has a fruitful year. It can count on my fullest cooperation. Please do not hesitate to call on me or on John Lassoe for any help that we can provide.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Maggie:

Thanks for your letter of December 29. I appreciate your plans to send me carbons of all correspondence that you have this year on NAIRO affairs. It will keep me abreast of what is being done and what is being planned.

As I said at the NAIRO Conference I will be happy to assume the chairmanship of the Commission on Nature, Scope, and Theory for 1959. As I understand it, the chief function of the commission is the preparation of the issue of the Journal dealing with the particular area of interest which each commission has.

Bill Williams or Haskell Lazere are both able guys. Either one would do a creditable job, I believe, as Southeastern Regional Chairman. Another possibility, if he is currently a member of NAIRO, is Seymour Samet with the American Jewish Committee in Miami.

All best regards.

Seasons greetings, and again congratulations on being President-Elect of NAIRO.

I plan to send you carbons of all the correspondence that I have this year on NAIRO affairs so that you will be abreast of what's being done. I think it might be a little easier for you when you take over if you are kept in very close contact with the present year's work. Also I am in hopes that keeping you so closely informed, I will elicit all your private ideas and thus ride to glory on your hard work.

A little later on I will send you a very formal letter asking you to be Chairman of the Nature, Scope and Theory Commission. At the present time I would like to ask your advice as to whom we should approach as southeast regional chairman. The only ideas John Lassoe and I had were William Williams or Haskell Lazere. Would you be kind enough to let me know what you think of either or both of them and offer other suggestions?

With all best wishes.

Dear Ed:

I am delighted that you have agreed to chair NAIRO's Committee on Interprofessional Relations especially since I feel that you can do so much for it here in the Chicago area. The Committee has been inactive for the past few years, but I hope that our present project and your leadership will give it new life.

It's purpose is to develop working interrelationships between NAIRO and each of the other allied professions, directly or through their professional associations. I refer to a wide range of disciplines: police, education, social work, nursing, law sociology, psychology, public administration, housing and redevelopment, personnel, etc. We have contemplated such contact on the national level but we have succeeded in developing it in only one instance - a conference of police chiefs and intergroup relations professionals some five years ago. This year I hope that we can accomplish it on a smaller scale in just one city - Chicago.

As I see it, a NAIRO Committee in Chicago - its members chosen by you - would establish some working relationship with local committees of as many of the other professions as can be interested in this exchange of ideas. It is possible that some sort of interprofessional consultation might be organized, or even that some modest project might be inaugurated. In any event, we would hope at some later date to transfer to the national scene whatever working arrangement you might develop experimentally in Chicago this year.

I think that this is a challenging assignment, and one that holds great hope for future development of NAIRO. I am grateful to you for undertaking it and I assure you of my help and that of our national office.

With all best wishes and looking forward to seeing you soon.

Sincerely yours,

file - NAIRO

December 10, 1959

Mr. Frederick B. Routh
P. O. Box 2292
Detroit 31, Michigan

Dear Freddy:

I am taking the liberty of writing you directly, instead of the national office of NAIRO, about the question posed in your memorandum of December 2, for two reasons: (1) So I can chalk up a letter to my credit; and (2) because I can air more freely my feelings as a very new board member.

As to the substantive question of authorizing $3,000 out of general funds for the Big Think program, I will go along -- mainly because I feel it is important to take advantage of the AJC's contribution. But the plans for the program disturb me on two counts. First, it seems to me that the budget is unnecessarily inflated; for example, why should NAIRO pay an honorarium to its members for preparing background papers? This is our professional association -- isn't it? -- and we have no business charging a fee for this kind of occasional chore. That's all I will say about the budget, since Paul Rilling has even greater reservations, about which he plans to write you.

Secondly, in looking over the names of those who are to prepare papers, I see nobody at all from the South. Granted that some of the participants invited may be from the South, this still strikes me as unfortunate. The pattern reinforces the stereotype that this is the Northern Association of Intergroup Relations Officials. I would hesitate to make this point in a meeting or in a formal communication to the national office -- particularly as a brand-new member -- lest it seem to provincial, Confederate sensitivity. But I know you will understand, since you share my view that NAIRO needs to be better oriented toward the South, where presumably the future of intergroup relations will be heavily concentrated.

In this case, I am not even thinking about SRC staffers, but about some of the other agency people. In some of the categories, I think it is proper to solicit the papers from the leading theoreticians, like Feild and Danzig and Schermer, who are mostly if not entirely in the North. But for "The Changing Status of the Negro in American Life" and "The Changing Relationships Among Religious Groups" surely the Southern aspects should be pointed up. In the first case, Herman Long, John Hope, Whitney Young, and others would be naturals. In the second case, who could be better than old Daddy Will Campbell, or even Jack Marion or Neil Tarplee, to name only a few? (True, I'm not sure everyone appropriate is a NAIROite, but at least some of them are.)

Enough said. Having aired my gripe, I would much prefer to leave the question in your cotton-pickin' presidential hands.

On another subject, but still NAIRO, I talked by telephone with Lassoe when I was briefly in New York last week. He felt that support of these conferences should be the pitch to Taconic. I expressed my doubt, which I strongly feel, that Taconic will give money for conferences or trade-association process, however meritorious it may be. However, I did encourage Lassoe to get an appointment with Mrs. Eddy and put all of NAIRO's hopes and plans frankly before her, with a view to ascertaining the foundation's possible interests. In my private conversations there, I have plugged the intern program, but later learned from Lassoe that there will be only seven interns next year. This would hardly justify much money for supervisory personnel.

In any case, I asked Lassoe to let me know the outcome of his interview, so that I may be guided accordingly in my future dealings with the philanthropoids. I do think that Eagle, Freeman, and other old friends ought to be continuously informed and cultivated.

Well, this is hardly a personal billet doux -- but, by golly, it's a letter. Word for word, it probably makes me about even.

The very best from all of us here.

Yours,

Harold C. Fleming

NAIRO

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

2 December 1959

TO: NAIRO Board of Directors

FROM: Frederick B. Routh, President

SUBJECT: Need for an immediate decision on this question:

Shall the Board authorize the expenditure of up to $3,000 from existing NAIRO funds to launch immediately the 1960 program of consultations and discussion ("Intergroup Relations in the Decade Ahead") proposed by the Resources and Planning Committee?

Recently, I asked John Feild to serve as chairman of a special committee of our Commission on Nature, Scope and Theory, to work with the American Jewish Committee and our Resources and Planning Committee in developing a program plan that grew out of informal discussions held at the San Juan Conference. These talks indicated the possibility of combining a major NAIRO interest, or part of it, with the scheduled Dedication Week program then being developed by AJC for its Institute of Human Relations. A series of meetings have followed since October, and a formal proposal is now presented for Board approval.

BACKGROUND

The proposal is based essentially upon the project considered by the Resources and Planning Committee for over a year. As you may recall, the Board reviewed and approved the project, authorizing George Culberson, new R & P chairman, to initiate detailed planning and the search for necessary funds as soon as possible.

The overall objective remains the same: to advance the professionalization of the field through a concentrated one-year program of consultation, study and discussion that would do three things:

(a) Contribute to a better definition of the field, with special reference to the knowledge, skills and training needed.

(b) Contribute to a better appraisal of those factors in our international, national and community life which now affect and which are likely in the next ten years to affect the nature of intergroup relationships.

(c) Contribute to a better understanding of the inter-agency relationships, roles and responsibilities that now exist in the field, and of the adjustments that will be necessary in the years ahead.

Procedurally, the plan still envisages two intensive consultations or seminars, one in January and one at mid-year. Each would involve a relatively small (and different) group of representative intergroup relations practitioners and leading specialists from such fields as demography, planning, law, economics, etc. The first meeting would develop and release an analytical report for study and discussion by NAIRO Chapters, Commissions, Departments and Committees. The second meeting (May or June) would appraise the report and the subsequent nationwide discussion, developing new materials for study and discussion by the same NAIRO bodies. Finally, the Annual Conference in Cincinnati (November) -- structured somewhat differently than in previous years -- would discuss the implications of these several "decade ahead" reports for our field, its professionals, and its agencies.

SPECIAL PROPOSAL FOR THE FIRST MEETING

It is proposed that the first meeting be held in January, at the time of the dedication of the AJC's Institute of Human Relations. For this, the American Jewish Committee has generously offered to bear half of the cost, if NAIRO will provide or find matching funds. Since the proposed budget totals $6,000, NAIRO must find or provide $3,000.

The Resources and Planning Committee will continue to seek foundation support for the entire program, including NAIRO's share of the first meeting as well as the cost of the second, a full-time staff coordinator, etc. This follows the original plan.

HOWEVER, in order to launch the program now and to take advantage of AJC's generous offer, the Board is asked to approve an immediate commitment of up to $3,000. It is understood that the R & P Committee will continue to seek these funds elsewhere but naturally its success cannot be guaranteed.

ACTION NEEDED

You are asked to vote by mail on this question. Although a simple YES or NO will suffice, I hope that you will also send your comments and reactions, suggestions of personnel, etc.

May we hear from you as soon as possible? (Please reply to the National Office -- by postcard, letter, telephone, etc.)

ATTACHMENTS

(1) Plan for the first meeting: January 20, 21, 22, 1960.

(2) Budget for the first meeting.

PLAN FOR THE FIRST MEETING: JANUARY 20, 21, 22.

Wednesday, January 20: "The Nature, Scope and Theory of Intergroup Relations"

Arranged by the Special Committee of the Commission on Nature, Scope & Theory, in cooperation with the American Jewish Committee and the NAIRO Committee on Resources and Planning. PLACE: Institute of Human Relations, New York City. PERSONNEL: 25-30 intergroup relations practitioners, to be invited. SCHEDULE: Three 3-hour sessions -- morning, afternoon, evening.

* MORNING: "The Nature of Intergroup Relations Practice"

We seek to define intergroup relations practice through an analysis of the types of problems dealt with in intergroup relations, including some historical reference to the origin of these problems and to the changing temporal context in which they have been viewed; through a survey of the development of the body of knowledge and methods of intergroup relations; and through some prediction of future problems and the knowledge and methods that must be developed or adapted to meet them.

Papers to be solicited from: John G. Feild
David Danzig

*AFTERNOON: "The Organization of the Intergroup Relations Field"

We seek to survey the scope of intergroup relations practice through an analysis of public and private responsibility, including the goals of the wide range of agencies active in the intergroup relations field; through an analysis of factors hampering or spurring public acceptance of intergroup relations practice and goals; and through analysis of the financing of public and private agency work. Our survey of the scope of intergroup relations practice will necessarily include consideration of the limits of the field, our relationship to peripheral disciplines, and some prediction of future changes in scope.

Papers to be solicited from: Arnold Aronson
Charles Livermore

*EVENING: "The Professionalization of Intergroup Relations Work and Workers"

We seek to analyze factors bearing upon the advancement of the field through professionalization of intergroup relations work: By what standards of performance do we operate as professionals, and by what process will these standards gain general acceptance? What is the body of knowledge and techniques that must be transmitted to new workers, and what is or will be our field's procedure for transmitting this? Since professional standards are so sketchily defined, and professional training still so experimental, in our field, this analysis must include some prediction of future directions and needs.

Papers to be solicited from: Alexander J. Allen
George Schermer

Thursday, January 21: "Identification of Selected Intergroup Relations Problems of the Next Decade"

Arranged by the NAIRO Committee on Resources and Planning, in co-operation with the American Jewish Committee. PLACE: Institute of Human Relations, New York City. PERSONNEL: First-day participants, plus leading specialists. SCHEDULE: Two 3-hour sessions -- morning and afternoon.

*MORNING: "The Changing Status of the Negro in American Life"

We seek to analyze the changing status of the Negro, his preparation for and participation in this change; the evidence of a changing self-image; the socio-economic handicap and its relation to the problem of integration and/or desegregation; the development of leadership; the growth of the middle class; participation and effect on political parties; holding elective office; meeting competition for post-high school education; probable role in business and industry during technological change; trends toward or away from own culture; some analysis of the meaning of these facts for intergroup relations workers.

Paper by one specialist, e.g., Arnold Rose, Franklin Frazier, Robin Williams, etc. (Suggestions welcomed)
Person to serve as discussant, to evaluate critically the paper presented and sharpen the issues. (Suggestions welcomed)

*AFTERNOON: "The Changing Relationships Among Religious Groups"

We seek to examine the nature, extent and future course of religious tensions that appear to be developing over matters of public policy, such as Sunday Blue Laws, religious observance in the public schools, use of public funds for school transportation, dissemination of birth control information, adoption policies; to analyze the problems inherent in separation of Church and State; to explore the limitations and limits of co-operation between religious institutions, the use of "representative" selection in political appointments and elections, the religious ghetto in suburban areas, the identification and exploration of "hate" groups, evidence of recognition by religious leadership of changing relationships.

Paper by one specialist, e.g. Thomas O'Day (Fordham), John Kane (Notre Dame), F. Ernest Johnson, etc. (Suggestions welcomed)
Person to serve as discussant, to evaluate critically the paper presented and to sharpen the issues. (Suggestions welcomed)

Arranged by the NAIRO Committee on Resources and Planning. PLACE: (To be determined), New York City. PERSONNEL: First-day participants, plus leading specialists. SCHEDULE: Two 3-hour sessions -- morning and afternoon.

*MORNING: "The International Dimension of Human Rights"

We seek to determine the focal developments in international politics relating to shifts of national interest within the U.N.; the emergence of new, independent nations from the colonial and dependent peoples; foreign policy implications of issues relating to the new nationalism of our neighbors to the south; the effect of these world changes on intergroup relations in the United States.

Paper by one specialist, e.g. Ralph Bunche, Chester Bowles, Frank Graham, etc. (Suggestions welcomed).
Person to serve as discussant, to evaluate critically the paper presented and to sharpen the issues. (Suggestions welcomed).

*AFTERNOON: "Population Growth and Shifts within the United States"

We seek to survey the current population trends with special reference to mobility and migration; the projection of demographic data; the political, social and economic consequences of the movement to metropolitan areas; the population changes in the center city and the movement to suburbia; the particular effect of these changes on racial, religious and nationality groups.

Paper by one specialist, e.g. Clarence Senior, Philip Hauser, etc. (Suggestions welcomed).
Person to serve as discussant, to evaluate critically the paper presented and to sharpen the issues. (Suggestions welcomed)

FROM: JOHN V.P. LASSOE, JR.

SUBJECTS: An announcement
A policy decision

(1) JANUARY BOARD MEETING

President Routh has set dates for the January meeting of the Executive Committee and of the Board. Both will be held in Detroit, probably at the Michigan FEPC.

*Executive Committee: Wednesday evening, all Thursday -- January 6-7, 1960
*Board of Directors: All Friday, Saturday morning -- January 8-9, 1960

Agenda and further information will follow in December.

(2) DIRECTORY OF AGENCIES: A POLICY(RE-)DECISION

The Directory of Intergroup Relations Agencies With Paid Professional Personnel is being printed at this moment. We are now faced with a final and somewhat complicated decision on the distribution to NAIRO members.

In San Juan, the Board voted that the Directory would not be given free of charge to members. This was the Board's first policy ruling on this; in Pittsburgh last November, there was considerable discussion but no decision.

Major arguments:

PRO, free distribution to members; We owe them this service, especially since the suspension of the Reporter and Journal during the year reduced the number of NAIRO publications that they have been receiving annually. Free distribution will build goodwill.

CON, no free distribution to members; The Directory is a working tool that agencies should buy for their staff members. Free distribution will cut drastically into our sales and, therefore, our potential revenue.

However, based on the recommendation of the Publications Committee and a ruling by the President (with both of which I concurred), we had earlier informed the membership - - in the October Newsletter - - that each would receive one free copy. In addition (even as we were meeting in San Juan), a letter went to all agencies, accompanying galley proof clips, in which we again noted this fact.

* QUESTION: In view of our twice-printed commitment, and whether or not it was wrong or at least premature, shall the October Board decision stand? In short, shall each NAIRO member receive a free Directory, or must members buy them?

(The Directory will sell for $2.00 ($1.50 in quantity of 10 or more); cost to NAIRO of each copy is just over $1.)

NOTE: A reply card is enclosed for your convenience.

TO: All NAIRO Members

FROM: Frederick B. Routh, PRESIDENT

Our recent Annual Conference in San Juan was a stimulating, even unique experience. Those of you who were there can testify to the Island's natural beauty and gracious hospitality; those of you who were not able to make it will be pleased to see (from the enclosed) that we managed to work, too!

1) STATEMENT OF CONCERNS AND COMMITMENTS: This represents our annual and official survey of the intergroup relations scene. It may be quoted and, hopefully, publicized. Additional copies are available, in modest quantities, from the National Office.

2) NAIRO BY-LAWS (Revised, 1959): This edition of our By-Laws incorporates two amendments adopted in San Juan. The most important provides for the chartering of official NAIRO Chapters, and we will be soliciting applications from local NAIRO groups just as soon as the Board determines procedure. The second amendment simply removes the requirement that the Membership Chairman be a member of the Board before his selection.

3) DIRECTORY OF CONFERENCE PARTICIPANTS: NAIRO's Office Secretary, Frankye Brown, has performed a real labor of love -- pulling together (by regions) the names and addresses of those who attended the Conference. We thought that all of you might want to have this.

4) CONFERENCE EVALUATION SHEET: We want to know what participants thought about this Conference. Please complete and return the enclosed questionnaire -- adding as many comments and suggestions as you wish.

5) Through the kindness of Dr. S. Andhil Fineberg and the Association of Jewish Community Relations Workers, we are also sending you a copy of their recent statement on "The Skills of the Jewish Community Relations Worker."

* * * *

TO FOLLOW: Our Executive Secretary promises us a NAIRO Newsletter in early December.

Conference Proceedings, including all speeches delivered at General Sessions, are being prepared now and should be available by year's end.

IMPORTANT: To save time and labor, and therefore money, we are sending this questionnaire in a general membership mailing -- without sorting those who attended the Conference and those who did not. If you did not get to San Juan, forgive us -- and throw this away!!

PLEASE RETURN TO: NAIRO, Room 209, 426 West 58 Street, New York 19, New York

A STATEMENT OF CONCERNS AND COMMITMENTS adopted by THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE of the
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS
October 16, 1959
San Juan, Puerto Rico

In convention at San Juan, we, the members of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, salute the Puerto Rican people and Government, not only as gracious hosts of this occasion but especially as our continuing partners in the building of a society which shall deny no man or group full dignity and fulfillment. We share with them, on island and mainland, the hard tasks and tough hopes of this enterprise.

We rejoice to see in Congress its first members of Oriental ancestry, from Hawaii. We hope to see Alaska's statehood marked in time by qualified Indian, Aleut and Eskimo voices in our counsels -- just as we wish an early end to the denial of voting rights to residents of the District of Columbia. More than symbols, all such advances strengthen our nation at home and abroad, as Senator Fong's visits to Asian countries are likely to demonstrate.

Without evaluating the beginning of the Eisenhower-Krushchev talks, we join all peoples' deep desire for some way out of the nuclear nightmare, in order that mankind may yet have time to work out the "ordinary" -- but difficult -- problems of living together in cities, countries and continents.

For dealing with such problems, our nation's development in 1959 of skills and tools for intergroup adjustment includes both advances and lags. However, if American leadership and public opinion utilize the existing resources, public and private, our people can progress toward "unity amid differences."

Civil Rights Developments

One year ago, NAIRO in convention surveyed the state of civil rights in the U.S.A. Perceiving that a turning point had been reached in the struggle for desegregation of the public schools, it urged complementary use, by government and private organizations, of law and education toward an eventual solution. It called for effective national executive leadership, creatively utilizing the powers and the moral influence of our nation's highest office to strengthen compliance with law. Protection of the right to vote was emphasized. Outside the South, equal access to housing was seen as the major issue, requiring both legislation and voluntary action at the state and local level, and a "single, consistent, definitive" federal housing policy.

In terms of the foregoing prescriptions, one development at the federal and one at the state level are especially notable. The Report of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission was a comprehensive and vigorous scrutiny of voting, education and housing problems, accompanied by specific and imaginative recommendations for action by Congress and the President. Beside supporting bills to require preservation of voting records, it proposed that the federal authority take over the registration of voters when local officials practice racial discrimination. This is a trenchant reminder of all citizens' basic right, that of participation in their government.

The housing recommendation re-emphasized the 1958 findings of the independent Commission on Race and Housing, by calling for an Executive Order to erase discrimination in all housing built with federal assistance. Both Commissions recognized the damage done by discrimination in housing to the lives of millions of Americans of all groups, and to government as a party to injustice.

It is at least to the credit of Congress that it extended the Civil Rights Commission's life, though it failed to pass any other notable civil rights bills.

At the state level, 1959 saw passage of the first state anti-discrimination laws covering private housing, in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Colorado and Oregon. They will be administered by commissions already experienced with employment and other civil rights laws.

Thus experimentation proceeds in one or another of our 50 "laboratories." Also in 1959 Ohio and California enacted enforceable fair employment practices laws, the 15th and 16th since 1945. (Illinois is now the exception, among major industrial states, to the trend.)

Unity Amid Diversity

Representing all parts of the U.S. network of intergroup relations agencies, we remind ourselves and all citizens who support this work that unity in diversity must be practiced among us most of all. Each of us should recognize and understand the "other" group problems which are not one's own immediate specialty. No "balkanization" of awareness and sympathy should divide concerned Americans.

Therefore our concern touches many sorts of people: the Spanish-speaking folk from Puerto Rico, facing a mixed welcome in the urban Northeast (as did most of our ancestors before them); migrants from Mexico to Southwest farms and cities; rural Negroes northbound to industrial cities; the Ozark and Appalachian migrants, hungry in the hills, lost in the big town; the American Indian, whose condition on the reservation and whose relocation to our cities equally merit re-examination; the migratory farm laborers, of varied ethnic origin, who have no voting address or lobbyist; and finally the refugees and immigrants from Europe, who sometimes mistake the bigot's view for that of America itself.

All these are objects of our concern, not merely the victims of the more widely recognized discriminations. Nor do we forget such situational victims as: the "unprejudiced discriminator" who feels pressured to acquiesce in practices of inequality; the majority member who potential for accepting diverse people is stunted by his one-group environment; the minority member marked by equivalent ghetto limitations of acquaintance, plus real discrimination.

We think of the innumerable decent, kindly families, now experiencing neighborhood-change ordeals, who could accept new neighbors, if somehow the panic factors of change were controlled. Equally we feel for the incoming minority families, whose efforts to better themselves in the American way have evoked hostility, not praise. All these problems of people are the unfinished business of democracy.

Major Concerns of 1959 - '60

The question of political candidates' religious affiliations, raised in some 1958 state elections, has become prominent in the preliminaries to the 1960 presidential nominations. The news media and opinion polls reflect a mounting discussion and debate which will test our pluralistic unity. We hold it salutary to examine differences, rationally. The asset-liability balance of this open debate will depend upon the manner in which it is conducted. Intergroup relations workers will share with religious spokesmen and other leaders a difficult responsibility: to encourage a fair debate which avoids irresponsible assertions, name-calling and impugning of motives; to conduct a dialogue with constant regard for the public interest.

The process of defining the relations of government and religion, especially in edication, continued this year in the courts and public forums. This challenges the attention of agencies beyond those immediately involved. We all have a duty to support in this area the rule of fair debate mentioned above.

While progress in race relations continued in 1959, tensions and blocks were visible at certain points in American life. Causal factors included: the carryover of southern tensions into other regions; population movements; unmet housing needs; the minority's impatience where basic rights were still withheld; the majority's fear of the seeming swiftness of change; and so on. Part of these anxieties evidenced the progress made in recent years, for they reflected individuals' anxious adjustment to new status relationships.

To intergroup and community leaders, such blocks and tensions are a challenge to contrive additional -- and frank -- interchanges between group spokesmen. Not all impediments to communication are in the South.

Relevant here is the so-called "race and crime problem." Many of us have long been stating the realistic factors, in stressing needed job opportunity, decent housing, and more education for and motivation of minority youth. Now, when "minority crime" is headlined widely, we are surprised and disturbed to see so much of the nation's news network failing professionally to interpret what the raw facts mean.

We honor those men, services and publications which present a balanced and perceptive account. We know the difficulties of reporting events which can trigger emotions. But the fact remains that 1959 has been marked by an increase of group-labelling in crime news and in "community problems" reporting, including juvenile delinquency stories. Local incidents which were left to the local press two years ago are being picked up by wire services; the distorting effect, if not the intent, is to convince many citizens that a racial crime wave has broken out. It is a public disservice at this time to depart from the premise that crime is personal; or, where group membership is a factor in social problems, to inflame without informing citizens of the causes. The excellent but occasional interpretations to be found in all news media illustrate what should be the standards of reporting.

Conferences are needed, from the local to national level, to bring news executives into touch with community leaders, intergroup workers and minority spokesmen; to get past the stage of protest and retort, and into true consultation. This approach is urgently needed.

Police-citizen frictions have marred the year in a number of cities. Experience suggests three remedies: (1) Human relations training has been tried and tested by many police departments (aided by intergroup agencies), so that any city can borrow what is working elsewhere. (2) The same is true of complaint procedures, which must not only be fair but appear so. (3) Most vital is the promotion and maintenance of "conference" relations involving police, minority, civic and intergroup leaders.

Finally, we join many leaders and observers in recognizing as a major problem -- or cluster of problems -- the whole state of our larger cities and metropolitan areas. In its myraid elements it is a technical, an economic and a political conundrum. But it is no less a problem of human relationships. How can the metropolitan area be shaped in all its parts to meet the needs of people?

The problem elements are familiar: exodus of upper and middle-income families to the suburbs, leaving lower-income families, usually swelled by non-white in-migrants; efforts to rebuild streets and slums for traffic and blight control; consequent relocation efforts encountering segregated housing patterns, causing overcrowding and still more "white flight" from the city; overtaxing of educational and social services; juvenile delinquency; city budget crises; a confusion of demands upon political leaders; a growing, felt conflict of interest between different parts of the metropolitan population.

Truly the American ideal of "E Pluribus Unum," of unity amid diversity, is being tested today in our cities and suburbs.

We intergroup workers of the nation have no package of answers. But we do suggest some general principles of approach: (1) The planner will fail if he does not keep contact with, and get the reactions of the people his plans affect. (2) During implementation there must be two-way communication. (3) The news media and public officials must continually attempt to interpret the often unpopular but inescapable fact of interdependence, of give and take, to all population elements. (4) Finally, every technique and effort must reflect the foundation values of our nation -- a balance of rights and responsibilities, equal treatment and opportunity for all, respect for differences, and a moral obligation to consider our neighbor's needs.

We discern in 1959 some heartening signs, amid the visible frictions, that more citizens are rethinking the American creed in terms of the many problems we have sketched here.

What all men share, all men will cherish and defend.

ASSOCIATION OF JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS WORKERS

THE SKILLS OF THE JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS WORKER

PREFACE

In May, 1956, the Association of Jewish Community Relations Workers adopted a "Statement of Qualifications for Jewish Community Relations Workers" which had been submitted by the Committee on Professional Standards. That Committee was then instructed to prepare a statement on "The Skills of the Jewish Community Relations Worker." This subject has been discussed since May, 1956, at many meetings of the Committee on Professional Standards, as well as at two previous annual meetings of the Association.

Recognizing that no formulation is to be unalterable and that unanimity is not obtainable, the Association hopes that the adoption and publication of this statement will intensify study of the skills that are unique to the profession it serves. The statement is designed to provide some guide lines on the vital question of what skills qualify a worker for practice in the field of Jewish community relations. It is to serve as a platform from which to proceed hereafter to a more adequate formulation. Thus, in time it will be possible to develop a body of information adapted specifically to the needs of the profession and to evolve a system of training.

I. DEFINING JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS

Jewish community relations is an arm of Jewish communal service. It is based upon community organization processes:

(1) to defend the Jewish community and individual Jews, as Jews, from physical and propaganda attacks;

(2) to prevent the imposition of discrimination and disabilities upon the Jewish community and upon Jews, as Jews, and to assure for them equal treatment and all civil rights; and

(3) to assure the continuation and further development in the United States of the kind of social and political order in which all racial and religious groups will have the maximum freedom and opportunity for their development, and for their intellectual, religious, spiritual, and cultural self-expression.

The special concern of the Jewish community relations worker for and with the Jewish group is in keeping with his commitment to the broad goals of all intergroup relations work. Any denial or threat of denial on account of race, religion or nationality of the rights of any citizen is a concern of the Jewish community relations worker. He deals with the general community but has a special role in working with Jews. He must be able to inspire and unify a Jewish group for action or, when preferable, persuade it to take no action.

II. HARMONIZING OBJECTIVES

The professional Jewish community relations worker exercises his skills, not as an individual, but according to the policies and resources of an agency, whose program he interprets, supports and executes. He gives professional direction and services to the constituency of his own organization and assistance to other agencies. Even though his various commitments are ultimately compatible, situations arise at times where contradictions appear to exist. To harmonize conflicting claims based on differences of short-range interest, the Jewish community relations worker needs diplomatic skills, as well as profound understanding of the values that are involved.

III. AN ECLECTIC PROFESSION

In the area of his concern the professional Jewish community relations worker strives to guide and to facilitate both the process of decision making of responsible lay leadership and the implementation of decisions. Each community relations worker needs special skills to meet the requirements of his own particular job but there are some transmittible skills which all Jewish community relations workers share.

The unique ability that distinguishes a professional community relations worker from members of other professions is the adeptness with which, in the pursuit of community relations objectives, he employs knowledge and skills that have been developed in many disciplines and especially in the social sciences. He draws upon tested principles of public relations, mediation, social work, education and other areas of professional activity in ways that help to attain community relations goals. The community relations worker has a wide range of knowledge and of interests which make him aware of useful resources in other professions. The Jewish community relations worker is able to draw additionally upon Jewish sources.

IV. KNOWLEDGE ESSENTIAL TO EFFECTIVE USE OF SKILLS

In every profession there is a body of information in books, periodicals, memoranda and the like, without which a practitioner would be greatly handicapped. The literature which has been written specifically for community relations workers has developed rapidly during the past two decades and is already extensive. Familiarity with the published materials of his own field is a requisite for the Jewish community relations worker.

Reflecting his interest in his chosen field of endeavor and his desire to improve human relations techniques, the professional Jewish community relations worker familiarizes himself with the basic source materials, documents, and developments affecting human rights. Realizing that he needs to understand individual and group dynamics and to apply knowledge and skills developed in allied fields, he refers to works of history, psychology, anthropology, sociology and of other disciplines for information that can enhance his own skills and those of his colleagues. Within these broad disciplines he focuses on the forces and techniques that increase or stifle group fulfillment and expression.

In regard to the Jewish community relations worker's skills for serving the group which employs him, a paragraph from AJCRW's "Statement on the Qualifications of the Jewish Community Relations Worker" follows:

> No specific program of formal Jewish education has been defined for Jewish community relations work. However, knowledge of Jewish history and Jewish ethics, of the structure of the Jewish community, the functions of the most significant Jewish organizations, and other basic information about the group in whose service he is engaged is valuable equipment for every Jewish community relations worker.

V. SKILLS IN ACTION

The professional Jewish community relations worker demonstrates his greatest proficiency and usefulness in situations wherein constructive social change is achieved or destructive conflict is prevented. These situations most often relate to some real or potential clash among members of different racial, religious, ethnic or other groups. Although no rigid pattern of operation can be formulated for securing the desired results, the Jewish community relations worker must be skillful in three main aspects of action: Analysis, Treatment and Prevention.

Analysis:

This may require only an assessment, or an intensive survey of the situation may be needed.

For analysis appropriate skills are employed to determine:

a) the existence, nature and sources of the problem, its dimensions and its seriousness;

b) the positions of significant individuals and groups, the bases of these positions, their flexibility or rigidity, and their likely changes or development under various conditions;

c) the available structures and resources, public and voluntary, which might be brought to bear on the situation; and

d) the probable future course of the situation, including the way it may be affected by a variety of possible corrective actions.

Treatment:

Having achieved satisfactory analysis of the problem with which he is dealing and of the resources for dealing with it, the professional Jewish community relations worker uses the skills necessary

a) to interpret the situation to lay and professional co-workers;

b) to achieve agreement on a plan of action which may involve one or several such procedures as exposure, quarantine, negotiation, persuasion, legal and legislative action or other forms of social actions; and

c) to follow through with the application of the plan, making adaptations as needed.

Prevention:

The highest skills of the professional Jewish community relations worker are applied in the area of prevention. Prevention may range from handling incipient crises in such a way as to obviate the occurrence of more serious overt problems, to farsighted measures for cementing sound community relations. Where there is no visible conflict it is difficult to obtain the active support for community relations programs which dramatic situations elicit. Yet the greatest good can often be achieved in the areas of preventing harmful conflict before it develops by improving the relationships that otherwise cause friction.

VI. IN GENERAL

Whether the Jewish community relations worker specializes in serving a Jewish community on the local level, or in research, in law, in mass communication, in administrative work, or in any other capacity, his objectives cannot be accomplished without cooperating with other Jewish community relations workers. He must therefore be fully aware of the skills possessed by various categories of Jewish community relations workers and of the multiple roles of his colleagues, in addition to the resources of his own and other agencies. Regardless of his own particular role, he seeks to increase his own mastery of the skills which all professional Jewish community relations workers share and to achieve insight into all phases of Jewish community relations activity.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS OFFICIALS

26 September 1960

Dear NAIRO Member:

I am happy to report real progress in our fight for survival. The financial crisis continues, but operation of our national office through 1960 is virtually assured, given your continuing cooperation.

We owe our improved position to three factors, each of which I acknowledge with deep gratitude: (1) Your recruitment of 69 new members since June, (2) A generous grant of $1,000 from the American Jewish Committee, and (3) Your help in securing 207 JOURNAL subscriptions over the summer months. Together, these meant the difference between life and death!

At last week's Board meeting in Philadelphia, we took certain steps to insure survival and to move us closer to self-sufficiency. We now ask your help with each of these:

NEW MEMBERS

The Board voted to continue the "Each One Get One" membership campaign through 1960. Our 11% growth over the summer was wonderful, but almost 90% of us have yet to recruit our new member for the year. Won't you sign up your today?

Important! Effective immediately, by Board decision, all new members will be enrolled on an anniversary renewal basis, i.e. their memberships will expire one year from the date of enrollment. This should eliminate many of the recruitment problems connected with the old calendar year memberships.

DEVELOPMENT FUND

The Board has established a Development Fund to finance NAIRO growth and expansion, and now solicits contributions from the membership. It may prove necessary to tap this fund for survival in time of crisis, but we shall make every effort to preserve it for new projects and services. We shall be grateful for any amount that you can give or raise for this purpose.

LIFE MEMBERSHIPS

The Board has instituted Life Memberships in NAIRO, at a $300 fee (payable in one sum or in three annual installments of $100 each). Not all of us can afford to help in this fashion, but I am sure that many will enter into this permanent affiliation with NAIRO. We hope that several will be recorded on the plaque in our office by year's end; again, I solicit your help in recruitment.

CONFERENCE FEE

Following the example of almost every national organization in the country, the Board has set a registration fee for members as well as non-members attending the Annual Conference in Cincinnati this year. It will be a modest $5, but represents an important budget item. You will soon receive full Conference information and necessary forms, and I hope that as many as possible will register and pay this fee -- in advance.

JOURNAL SUBSCRIPTIONS

Summer efforts have almost doubled non-member subscriptions to the JOURNAL, but we are still less than halfway to the 1960 goal of 1,100. (These figures do not include members, who receive the JOURNAL as part of their dues payment.) In soliciting your help in securing new subscriptions, the Board has urged agencies to consider the purchase of subscriptions for (a) their own library, (b) college, public and special libraries in their community and (c) their Board or Commission members. Hopefully, many of these recipients will want to subscribe at their own expense after a year's trial.

If the remarkable cooperation offered by members this summer can be continued through the fall, we should soon be able to turn our full attention back to program matters. Let me assure you, however, that our program has not been neglected during the crisis: the fourth issue of the JOURNAL is at the printer's; Conference plans are all but complete and soon to be announced; four new NAIRO Chapters have just been chartered (these now total six); a South Central regional conference is planned for December, in Little Rock; and new projects have been developed, including one that will take NAIRO into the area of international activity.

Sincerely,

Frederick B. Routh

Dear Fellow NAIROite:

I write you now as the former president of our Association. I have two things in mind. FIRST, is my gratitude to each of you who gave thoughtful support to the Association during this past crucial year. SECOND, is a matter of unfinished business, left-over from my term of office.

At the Annual Conference we set up a NAIRO Development Fund. Because of our financial situation the Board specified that for this coming year it might be used for general expenses. We set as our goal for this first year, $1,500; at the Conference we reached the half-way mark in donations and pledges.

What I now ask of you is a donation or a pledge to NAIRO's Development Fund, at this time. Donations have run from $10 to $100; I won't ask you for any specified amount. . .that is up to you, alone.

In approaching Foundations for support for our Association, our hand would be strengthened if we could say that in addition to paying regular membership dues, our members had created a Development Fund for the Association.

My thanks for the year that is past; my best wishes for the year ahead; and my best regards, always.

As ever,

Fred Routh

TA - for MJ file

June 6, 1963

Dear Leslie:

On May 22, 1963 we sent the enclosed letter and pamphlet, "Executive Responsibility in Intergroup Relations" to President Kennedy outlining NAIRO's point of view in regard to the U.S.A.'s crisis in race relations. Since then we have held several discussions with Lee White, Special Assistant to the President.

To date, even on the Executive level, the Administration's program has been inadequate. Its program has been mainly one of response and reaction to crisis situations. It is our belief that the President needs to develop a special White House Civil Rights Office that will give sustained consideration to civil rights problems in terms of developing a master plan and an overall strategy rather than a trouble shooting, fire fighting operation without any program or followup.

For the first time in NAIRO's 16-year history we have decided to convene the National NAIRO Board in the South -- in Atlanta, Georgia. We shall meet from 6:30 p.m. the evening of June 14 through Saturday June 15 at the Hotel Peachtree Manor, 826 Peachtree Street, N.E., Atlanta, Georgia. (Telephone: Area Code 404 - TRinity 4-2791).

This emergency meeting will be devoted to a discussion of the national crisis and the formulation of a program for NAIRO consistent with the aims and purposes of a professional body such as NAIRO. To this end we would like the benefit of your views and the thinking of other civil rights leaders before we make a public announcement.

Therefore, we would like to invite you to be NAIRO's guest at a luncheon to be held at the Hotel Peachtree Manor from 12:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Saturday June 15. Of course, if it is at all possible for you to sit with us throughout the entire Board session, we would deem it a privilege to have you with us.

We hope you will make every effort to attend since we hold your views in high esteem.

Sincerely,

Ed

May 22, 1963

The Honorable John F. Kennedy
The White House
Washington 25, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

As you may recall from our meeting with you on August 23, 1961 (please refer to the enclosed pamphlet), we are a professional body concerned with intergroup relations. In our opinion many urban centers in the North, as well as the South, are confronted with the prospect of racial tensions and problems of crisis proportions. Your bold leadership is needed now more than ever before to avert disaster.

We hail your recent courageous statements in the South and your salute to the Negro drive for civil rights as in the "highest traditions of American freedom." It is our conviction that your call to the educated men and women of the South to speak up for law, freedom, and human decency has given heart to your fellow countrymen everywhere.

Likewise, we are in complete accord with your decision to station troops in Alabama. We appreciate your reluctance, as President of all the people, to employ troops in any section of the country. Yet this decision cannot be avoided where local or state officials are incapable of or unwilling to maintain law and order and protect the constitutional rights of all citizens. Nor can it be avoided where they incite to violence and where lawlessness and a state of anarchy prevail. Such decisive action by you at the right time, in this and other situations, will in our judgment prevent violence. There is a need for the appropriate local and state officials to be put on notice that you will take such action whenever necessary.

In addition we respectfully suggest that the following steps should be taken to cope with this crisis:

1. Small groups of religious, business, labor, community and political leaders should be called together to make known the President's determination to correct inequities and to enlist their cooperation in this endeavor.

2. Similarly, conferences should be convened with:

   (a) state governors, to discuss mutual responsibilities in upholding Federal court decisions and maintaining law and order.

   (b) state attorneys general, to assure the right of all qualified citizens to free access to the ballot box.

   (c) school officials, to accelerate the desegregation of schools.

   (d) business and labor leaders, to insure equal employment opportunity and to deal realistically with the problem of the growing unemployment among Negroes.

   (e) representatives of the housing industry, to end enforced residential segregation and seek the achievement of open occupancy practices.

3. We urge also that all Federal programs be reexamined and redirected to assure the Negro his full rights as an American.

4. The Federal government should take a more active official role in identifying organizations and individuals engaged in subverting Federal court decisions and violating the constitutional rights of Negro citizens.

In preparation for the implementation of these recommendations we respectfully request that you consider convening a meeting of experts in intergroup relations and civil rights to secure their views as to how the steps we have urged you to take may yield the maximum results.

We stand ready to assist you in this time of national emergency.

Respectfully yours,

Edward Rutledge, President,
National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE NAIRO DELEGATION (Left to right, Senator Philip A. Hart, Michigan; Robert J. Greene; George W. Culberson; President John F. Kennedy; Booker T. McGraw; John G. Feild), THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON, D.C., AUGUST 23, 1961.

The following message from President John F. Kennedy to the NAIRO Annual Conference was delivered in San Francisco on November 9, 1961, by Harris Wofford, Jr., Special Assistant to the President:

Please convey my warm greetings to the participants in the Fifteenth Annual Conference of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials. The problem of securing the full Constitutional rights of all Americans and of achieving equal opportunity in all parts of our public life in all sections of our country requires the cooperation and constructive leadership of public officials at all levels of government and in voluntary citizens' organizations throughout the nation. In promoting such cooperation and constructive leadership NAIRO is serving the needs of the nation.

An example of the vital service which NAIRO can render on an increasing scale is the valuable study on Executive Responsibility in Intergroup Relations presented to me by the officers of NAIRO. Your helpful suggestions are now being considered by the appropriate departments and agencies.

Cordially,

JOHN F. KENNEDY

August 21, 1961

The Honorable John F. Kennedy
The White House
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President:

I have the honor to submit to you certain recommendations for executive action in intergroup relations, developed by a task force of experienced professionals appointed by our Board of Directors, and including many of its members.

Because ours is a professional body, concerned primarily with advancing intergroup relations knowledge and skills, we have concentrated in this paper on the means and methods by which we believe the Administration's equal opportunity goals can best be achieved. We have left to the membership organizations in our field the development of recommendations for substantive action.

In like manner, we have attempted to suggest policy directives, procedural steps, and an organization of intergroup relations resources that might be appropriate in any and all government operations. We have thus resisted the temptation to single out for special analysis such compelling problem areas as school desegregation and open occupancy in housing.

As we indicated in a resolution transmitted to you earlier this year, this Association pledges you its wholehearted support in your efforts to secure full equality of opportunity for all Americans. We place at your disposal our collective expertise and experience in intergroup relations.

Respectfully yours,

George W. Culberson

GEORGE W. CULBERSON
President

EXECUTIVE RESPONSIBILITY IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

The Federal Government, besides being the nation's largest employer, administers many programs affected by, and influencing, intergroup relations. Constitutional authority, legislative action, judicial decision, and executive fiat have given it substantial responsibility for guaranteeing broad areas of civil rights, for promoting the welfare of specific ethnic groups, and for bringing into the mainstream of American life the many racial, religious, and nationality groups that comprise its people. Unfortunately, the exercise of this responsibility has not heretofore kept pace with social need or world events.

At the outset of a new Administration, pledged by its party platform and by the new Chief Executive to advance equal rights and opportunity for all Americans, the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials offers certain recommendations for action in the area of intergroup relations to help achieve these goals. These areas are covered:

- Intergroup relations in government practices and services
- Utilization of intergroup relations consultants
- Role and recruitment of intergroup relations personnel
- Community consultative services in intergroup relations
- Intergroup relations in the State Department and Peace Corps
- Training of intergroup relations personnel
- Government role in intergroup relations research
- Government reference services in intergroup relations
- Leadership role of the President in intergroup relations

Intergroup relations may be defined in various ways. In its broadest sense, it is the generic term covering interracial relations, interreligious relations, and interethnic relations. It encompasses civil rights problems of Negroes, Jews, Orientals, Puerto Ricans, Mexican Americans, and others experiencing discrimination or segregation; cultural problems faced by American Indians, Southern mountain whites, and others transplanted abruptly from rural to urban living; and interreligious tensions arising out of Church-State issues. At least peripherally, it includes the problems of the foreign-born and of migrant farm laborers, the problems springing from denial of civil liberties, and the problems of the aged in the area of employment discrimination.

Intergroup relations is also the unique blend of skills and knowledge possessed by its practitioners. From a variety of disciplines they have drawn and adapted techniques of community organization, social action, public education, investigation and enforcement, and conciliation and mediation. Around these has developed a body of knowledge that incorporates both the research findings of the social sciences and the rich experience of this emerging field.

Intergroup relations is, finally, a field of work for more than 1,500 full-time workers employed by governmental and private intergroup relations agencies throughout the United States. These agencies maintain a total of 600 offices, in at least 150 cities in 43 states.

The National Association of Integroup Relations Officials, founded in 1947, is an organization of individuals concerned with advancing intergroup relations knowledge and skills, improving the standards of intergroup relations practice, and stimulating intergroup relations research. It is the field's professional body and attempts conscientiously to represent the collective opinion of practitioners, researchers, and lay leaders in intergroup relations. Its program and concerns focus essentially on the means and methods by which civil rights advances and better intergroup relations may be achieved. Its recommendations are offered in the light of that professional interest and activity.

RECOMMENDATIONS

A. INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN GOVERNMENT PRACTICES AND SERVICES

There is urgent need for a review by every department and agency of its staff practices and program services, to insure that intergroup relations concerns are recognized at every level of operation.

Forceful steps have already been taken by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to implement the recent executive order, but staff practices and internal operation are more than a matter of job opportunity. They extend to such problems as segregated restrooms in a government facility, the appointment of inexperienced personnel to intergroup relations posts, the lack of Spanish-speaking workers in a Southwestern field office, and Civil Service examinations given only on a Saturday. They include intergroup relations training and orientation for government personnel, government research in intergroup relations, the use of intergroup relations specialists and consultants in key areas, and the development of adequate reference resources for the use of those charged with intergroup relations responsibilities.

Similarly, intergroup relations concerns need to be introduced in all program services where government action impinges on the life of the citizen — and where government spends his tax money. This is more than a matter of government contracts with private industry, already the subject of an executive order. It extends to such problems as the paucity of nonwhite cadets in the Coast Guard Academy, the inadequacy of religious affiliation symbols on armed forces identification tags, the refusal of a local Veterans Administration office to release to Negro realtors its list of repossessed homes, and the discrimination experienced by an Asian diplomat seeking an apartment in New York City. It includes the area of direct services to individuals (e.g., Soil Conservation Service), the area of federal loans or loan insurance (e.g., Federal Housing Administration), the area of citizen mobilization (e.g., the U.S. Navy), and the area of federal stewardship (e.g., Bureau of Indian Affairs).

We recommend that the President direct all executive departments and agencies to conduct full-scale surveys of internal operations and external program services, in order to determine how intergroup relations goals may be achieved, and discrimination and segregation eliminated.

B. UTILIZATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS CONSULTANTS

In the proposed review of department and agency staff practices and program services, and in the continuing activity of the Federal establishment in the area of intergroup relations, there is urgent need to marshal and utilize the best available knowledge and expertise.

Today, in a vastly complex society, the Executive Branch has added to its many other functions that of broker in the exchange of knowledge and information. Through the Executive Office and through the appropriate departments, insights and information are received and transmitted to other parts of the Federal establishment, to lesser units of government, and to citizens groups throughout the country. In this past half-century, which has witnessed an acquisition of knowledge unparalleled in any earlier era, this brokerage function has become standard operating procedure in the physical sciences, in medical research, in business planning, in a myriad of activities tinted with a public interest. This has not been true in intergroup relations nor even, to a comparable degree, in the social sciences.

Despite man's limited understanding of how to build constructive relationships with his fellow men, there is a growing body of knowledge about the crucial elements of intergroup relations. It is possessed by practitioners who have helped to develop it in the struggle for civil rights advances during the past few decades, and their advice should be utilized by the Executive Branch as it guides the Federal establishment into the New Frontier of intergroup relations in government.

Such counsel should be sought before the fact of crisis so that, as in other areas of governmental responsibility, a thorough-going rationale of operation can be developed, to avoid the hasty and reactive efforts which marked and hindered Federal actions during the previous administration.

We recommend that the Executive Branch and all departments and agencies be encouraged by the President to make continuing use of qualified intergroup relations consultants outside the Federal establishment:

— to advise on the proposed survey, to help develop procedures for implementation, to suggest strategic placement of intergroup relations specialists, and to assist in reviewing and assessing initial progress reports.

— to supplement the advisory services of intergroup relations personnel within the Federal establishment, in interpreting the significance of intergroup relations developments for Federal functions, in further sensitizing departments and agencies to intergroup relations concerns, and in helping shape governmental response to the changing character of intergroup relations.

C. ROLE AND RECRUITMENT OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS PERSONNEL

There is urgent need to expand the role of intergroup relations specialists within the departments and agencies in which they now serve, and to introduce them into those areas of the Federal establishment in which their services are needed but not now utilized. Recruitment of these specialists should be governed solely by qualifications of competence and experience.

Intergroup relations is a factor in the internal and external operations of virtually every department and agency in government. The proposed survey of internal staff practices and external program activities will indicate the many areas in which intergroup relations specialists need to be utilized and, to some degree, the specific nature of their functions. Where the need for intergroup relations specialists is sufficient, and where formalization of their function is appropriate, an intergroup relations service within that department or agency is a logical step. More than two decades of experience suggest that certain cardinal principles are vital to effective operation of such a service:

1) An unequivocal statement by the department or agency head must set forth the policy objective and indicate that the intergroup relations service has the highest administrative support in the implementation of that policy.

2) The service must be amply staffed with competent and experienced intergroup relations specialists, under one with the rating of assistant department or agency head.

3) The service must have clear responsibility for these duties, among others:

   — Assisting the department or agency head and his staff, in the formulation, implementation, and evaluation of all aspects of policy, procedure, and program, to insure to minority group members equal opportunity and maximum participation in department or agency employment and in all phases of external program services.

   — Providing technical or advisory assistance to those responsible for recruitment, employment, and training of staff, to insure equal opportunity at all job levels.

— Providing technical or advisory assistance to those responsible for external program services at all levels, to insure that local action programs embrace the needs, viewpoints, and rights of minority groups.

— Interpreting to the department or agency the needs and viewpoints of minority groups, and interpreting to minority groups the policy and programs of the department or agency.

— Representing the department or agency head in the supervision and coordination of intergroup relations operations and policy throughout the department or agency.

Such a service would function in close liaison with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. In addition, backed by the coordinating role of the President's administrative assistants on civil rights, the collective services would provide a vitally needed catalyst in accelerating the advance of equality of opportunity in the Federal establishment.

Intergroup relations specialists employed in departments or agencies must be allowed to function as professionals. Too often have they languished as mere symbols of governmental tolerance, brought forth just occasionally to counteract pressures from civil rights forces. Only the authority of the Chief Executive can correct the situation that prevailed in past administrations.

The search for competent intergroup relations specialists must recognize the need for persons who possess a high degree of commitment to equal opportunity and basic democratic values, a deep sensitivity to intergroup relations concerns and minority group aspirations, and a background of intergroup relations knowledge and skills.

It is sad but true that in no other area of government have experience and professional qualifications been ignored so consistently. Department and agency heads have not seemed to recognize that intergroup relations is a tangible field and that given individuals have acquired its knowledge and skills through long years of experience. There is, for example, no U.S. Civil Service register of qualifications for intergroup relations specialists, and there are no intergroup relations classifications as such. Many cities and states are far in advance of the Federal Government in establishing classifications, qualifications, and even examinations for intergroup relations specialists.

By dint of stereotype and for political reasons, buttressed by the lack of job opportunity elsewhere in the Federal Government, it has also been common practice to name only minority group members to many intergroup relations positions, possibly on the mistaken assumption that all minority group members possess automatically the requisite intergroup relations knowledge and skills. Such assignment by stereotype is as discriminatory as it is erroneous. Patently, there are many minority group members qualified for such posts, but as long as appointing authorities think of minority group identification first, and professional capabilities second, there is the danger of political pressure to overlook the latter.

We recommend issuance of a firm directive to all departments and agencies, defining the role and function of intergroup relations services and personnel as integral to all appropriate government operations.

We further recommend appropriate action by the Executive Office to establish intergroup relations experience and cognate training as the primary qualifications for appointment to intergroup relations posts.

D. COMMUNITY CONSULTATIVE SERVICES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

Local communities faced with major intergroup relations problems, especially those that lack their own governmental intergroup relations agencies, have acute need for consultative services not presently available from any other source.

Throughout the United States, there are countless communities totally devoid of intergroup relations resources and financially unable to secure them. Some of these communities now face or will soon face monumental intergroup relations problems resulting from such developments as school desegregation, heavy in-migration of minority group families or extensive urban renewal. Other cities and towns only slightly more fortunate have intergroup relations resources that are inadequate to cope with local problems. They need a variety of services going beyond the reference clearinghouse noted later; they need the counsel and guidance of competent consultants, matching grants-in-aid to help support local intergroup relations efforts, and, in some instances, demonstration projects or action research programs.

This Administration has asserted a federal obligation to help communities deal with the physical and human problems of urbanization; it has given evidence of its firm resolve to develop dynamic approaches to pressing social problems. It is possible to render significant assistance to beleaguered communities by creating, within the framework of existing departments or agencies, the consultative services that they need in the area of intergroup relations.

We recommend the establishment of an intergroup relations service, appropriately situated within the Executive Branch, which would offer general intergroup relations counsel and technical assistance to local communities and to their intergroup relations agencies and which would include the use of demonstration projects and the provision of matching grants-in-aid to communities presently unable to support local intergroup relations efforts.

We further recommend the establishment of a community education service, appropriately situated within the Executive Branch, which would offer consultative services and, where warranted, financial aid to those school boards engaged in earnest efforts to desegregate public schools, and which would aid in establishing equal opportunity in vocational education and in training related to formal apprenticeship programs.

E. INTERGROUP RELATIONS IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT AND THE PEACE CORPS

There is acute need to introduce into the State Department, and into such specialized foreign aid agencies as the Peace Corps, intergroup relations concerns relating especially to the orientation and training of overseas personnel, and to the reception of foreign diplomats, visitors, and students.

The vital importance of our national image abroad, and the acute need to demonstrate with vigor and dedication America's deep commitment to the democratic ideal of equal treatment for all persons, demands early and special attention to intergroup relations concerns in activities bearing on foreign relations.

State Department personnel are not now being prepared adequately to interpret abroad America's civil rights problems and intergroup relations efforts and progress. Personnel at all levels are in need of orientation before overseas assignment, and continuing informational services thereafter. These might well be extended to include government personnel sent abroad by other departments and agencies.

Exchange visitors from other lands, and particularly those from Africa and Asia, are not receiving an adequate exposure to the positive intergroup relations efforts of public and private agencies in communities across the country. Orientation provided for some visitors in Washington is not a satisfactory answer, especially for those who have indicated a deeper interest in civil rights problems. The six hundred intergroup relations agencies throughout the United States offer a resource that should not be overlooked in planning itineraries and in coping with problems of discrimination that some visitors will face.

The establishment of a New Nations Division in the Office of Protocol is a heartening approach to the problems of discrimination encountered by foreign diplomats and students in this country. This effort merits continuing support and resources.

The Peace Corps is an exciting idea that has captured the imagination of thousands of young people in this country and has gained wide support abroad. There are dangers relevant to intergroup relations in this transplantation abroad of relatively inexperienced if totally dedicated young people, however. As in the case of State Department personnel, Peace Corps volunteers must be in a position to interpret accurately and clearly American civil rights problems and intergroup relations efforts. That they will be asked about civil rights matters is a foregone conclusion; that they possess adequate information is the only reasonable answer. The difference between objective information and all that would fall in the category of propaganda or apologia is clear, and only the former should be the subject of Peace Corps orientation. Finally, the process of selection and training must be geared to deal with those psychologically unsuited to intimate contact with persons of other races, creeds or national origin whether they be fellow volunteers or foreign nationals.

We recommend that the Foreign Service Institute be directed to incorporate in its program and structure intergroup relations orientation for personnel assigned to overseas posts.

We recommend further that the governmental and contract agencies responsible for Exchange Program visitors be directed to review orientation procedures and itinerary planning, in order to introduce intergroup relations concerns and to make maximum use of intergroup relations agencies throughout the country.

We recommend that the New Nations Division in the Office of Protocol be adequately and appropriately staffed.

We recommend that the process of selection and training of Peace Corps volunteers include appropriate concern for the effects of prejudicial attitudes and behavior on the interpersonal relationships that must be developed abroad, and that the orientation of volunteers include objective information on American intergroup relations.

F. TRAINING OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS PERSONNEL

Given the acute shortage of experienced intergroup relations workers, inside and outside government, there is an urgent need for the development of governmental training programs in intergroup relations, including both in-service training for present employees and internship training for recruits to the Federal service. The personnel needs of community intergroup relations agencies across the country cannot be met through existing replacement channels, and Federal Government help is needed in the training of workers to staff these local efforts.

The reservoir of experienced intergroup relations workers is not large — perhaps 1,500 in all. Because the field adds only 50 to 100 persons to its ranks each year as its agencies multiply and expand, and because it is still a relatively new field, there are few formal training opportunities. Most newcomers, recruited from other fields, enter at the bottom of the professional ladder and receive their intergroup relations training on the job. This informal process of recruitment and training is not geared to meet sharp increases in the demand for qualified specialists.

The mushrooming growth of state and municipal agencies, a phenomenon of the past two decades in the North and of the past two years in the South, has brought personnel requirements that cannot be met through normal replacement channels, and the result has been a heavy drain on private agency staffs. The field is marked by sudden and far-reaching personnel shifts, not unlike the game of musical chairs.

To fill existing intergroup relations posts in the Federal Government is not an easy task; to staff the services and positions likely to grow out of the proposed survey will create serious problems, especially for private and local governmental agencies that can expect to lose personnel. On the other hand, experienced workers must be found for these Federal positions if intergroup relations goals are to be achieved.

In-service training for those already in the Federal employ offers a partial solution. Most departments and agencies could profitably institute intensive on-the-job training programs for those slated to fill intergroup relations posts, and orientation programs for those whose intergroup relations responsibilities will be more peripheral. The Civil Service Commission might assume this function for departments and agencies with more modest intergroup relations personnel needs.

To meet long-range personnel needs, internship training should be instituted for new recruits to government service, again under the auspices of the various departments and agencies or perhaps by the Civil Service Commission. These intergroup relations internships should be of at least one year's duration, should consist of on-the-job training and working experience, and should include duty in a field office at the community level. There are some agencies (e.g., Housing and Home Finance Agency) in which internship programs already exist; these need only to be broadened to include intergroup relations concerns.

The acute needs of local communities must be met in different fashion. Through some existing department or agency, or through one yet to be established, the government should promptly initiate training services for local community workers. These might include a centralized training program, grants-in-aid to private or local governmental agencies, and contractual training agreements with universities or national intergroup relations agencies. Scholarship aid to students considering advanced studies in intergroup relations is yet another form of training assistance, and might be coupled with subsequent internship experience.

We recommend that appropriate departments and agencies be directed to institute in-service and internship training in intergroup relations; that the Civil Service Commission be directed to organize such training programs for departments and agencies that do not find it feasible to institute their own; and that the Federal Government, through an existing department or agency or through one yet to be created, establish a training program and offer financial aid to prepare intergroup relations workers for local community service.

G. GOVERNMENT ROLE IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS RESEARCH

There is an acute need for intergroup relations research in a variety of fields, and this research must be adequately financed and knowingly coordinated. Since private and local governmental research programs and resources are presently inadequate, the Federal Government must take the initiative in stimulating this research.

In a preliminary survey of research needs, conducted in 1960 by the NAIRO Commission on Research Services, an inventory of 107 subjects for study was gathered from professional workers in 25 intergroup relations agencies. This still-expanding inventory shows a need for general knowledge and for action-oriented research in a number of critical areas.

Funds presently available for intergroup relations research are totally inadequate. Most of the foundations have been reluctant to make grants in this highly sensitive field, and most of the intergroup relations agencies are unable to allocate money for research. Even the research being done by those few agencies with research staff and by individuals in university centers suffers for lack of planning and coordination.

Needed research falls into three categories: data-gathering, program-oriented, and basic. Data-gathering is already a function of many departments and agencies of government, but almost all could do more in the area of intergroup relations. In addition, means must be devised for disseminating this material to local communities. There is considerably less program-oriented or action research, while basic research is a significant void. Some agencies should, for example, delve into the sources of prejudice and the relationship of prejudice to personality development.

To carry on the research program that is needed, an approach along the lines of the National Institutes of Health seems desirable. The agency thus created, whether independent or part of a broader institute, must be prepared and qualified to do actual research, to stimulate and coordinate research in government departments and agencies, and to provide funds for research grants-in-aid to colleges and universities, public and private agencies, and individuals. Specialized research projects should be carried out by qualified persons in the appropriate department or agency, but as part of a master plan for government research in intergroup relations. This overall agency could also perform a much-needed service by furthering exchange of information about research being undertaken independently by colleges, universities, and agencies.

We recommend the establishment of an agency, independently or as part of an existing Department, possibly along the lines of the National Institutes of Health, to coordinate, undertake, stimulate, and help finance needed research in the area of intergroup relations.

We further recommend that the departments and agencies, including the National Science Foundation, be directed to initiate or expand research studies, grants-in-aid, and scholarships in the area of intergroup relations.

H. GOVERNMENT REFERENCE SERVICES IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

There is an acute need for expanded reference services in intergroup relations: within departments and agencies for the use of federal intergroup relations personnel, and through selected departments and agencies for the use of local communities.

Intergroup relations is such a recent and dynamic field of specialized knowledge that little systematic collection and classification of its written material have taken place. Many of its most valuable documents have not been published as books and are not, therefore, to be found in the Library of Congress. When intergroup relations materials are found in government libraries, they are seldom organized in such a manner as to be readily accessible for reference use. Within the departments and agencies, the available material of the type needed by intergroup relations personnel in their program duties is wholly inadequate.

Those responsible for intergroup relations programs in local communities around the country have need of a central reference clearinghouse. In such a critical area as school desegregation, for example, there is no single source to which communities can turn for appropriate resource materials. Even in the Library of Congress there is no centralized collection of published and unpublished materials on intergroup relations, and no specialized staff to develop such a collection and work with those engaged in intensive intergroup relations research.

We recommend that the departments and agencies which possess intergroup relations services be directed to make budgetary allowance and other necessary provisions for the assembly and maintenance of informational resources dealing with intergroup relations aspects of the programs they administer.

We further recommend that such departments as Health, Education and Welfare, or possibly that proposed on Housing and Urban Affairs, with areas of competence and jurisdiction bearing directly on major intergroup relations concerns be instructed to establish clearinghouse reference services for the use of local community agencies and workers.

I. LEADERSHIP ROLE OF THE PRESIDENT IN INTERGROUP RELATIONS

As has already been demonstrated, there is clear need for Presidential leadership in the area of intergroup relations, not simply within the Federal establishment, as suggested in earlier recommendations, but in interpreting to the people the moral and legal issues involved, and in serving as the voice of the conscience of the nation.

The President can exert enormous influence by example. He communicates with the public in such informal ways as his choice of aides and associates or his invitations to White House functions. The inclusion of appropriate minority group members does not go unnoticed, and helps to set the overall intergroup relations tone.

There is another area in which the President could exert great influence. He should call together small groups of key individuals — opinion molders and decision makers — to make known his determination to correct inequities, and to enlist their cooperation. This might suggest Presidential discussion with school superintendents of desegregation problems; with state governors of mutual responsibilities to uphold Federal Court decisions and to maintain law and order; with state attorneys general of the right of all qualified citizens to free access to the ballot box; with business and labor leaders of equal employment opportunities; and with representatives of the housing industry of open occupancy practices.

Firm Presidential leadership can help avert many crisis situations, but when they occur, the President must be heard, pointing to desirable solutions and calling for calm and wise local leadership to cooperate in working out these solutions. There should never again be a vacuum of leadership in the White House, enabling wilful men on the local levels to obstruct the will of the nation.

We respectfully observe that the Presidency requires the type of leadership and moral suasion that can only be exercised from the White House, by voice and in action, in crisis situations and in forthright appeals to the best that is in our people.

The President of the United States, in addressing the nation the evening of June 11th, on the current racial situation, said in part:

> "It is not enough to pin the blame on others, to say this is a problem of one section of the country or another, or deplore it. The fact that we face a great change is at hand, and our task, our obligation, is to make that revolution, that change, peaceful and constructive for all.
> "Those who do nothing are inviting shame as well as violence. Those who act boldly are recognizing right as well as reality."

This fine example of responsible Presidential leadership calls for follow-up -- a quickening of the pace of change and of federal efforts to accelerate it. We would speak to the question of structure and function of the White House staff.

This is a petition for the creation of a Civil Rights Office in the White House; it is made at this time because of the grave civil rights crisis in which the nation is engulfed. Birmingham, Jackson, and Philadelphia are only the more dramatic manifestations of this crisis; the Justice Department reported 43 incidents in 15 different states in one week alone! There is every indication that this is only the beginning; that every major and many smaller communities, in the rest of the nation as well as in the South, will experience increasing racial tensions, demonstrations, and strife unless the Federal Government moves now to give constructive direction and the promise of relief to the just demands for redress for grievances of those discriminated against.

The Executive Committee of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, therefore, respectfully petitions the President of the United States to create a well staffed civil rights office in the White House, consisting of a chief adviser and appropriate supporting personnel, professional and clerical. It must be an effort which will command the respect of the Negro and civil rights communities. The function of such a civil rights office, as we see it, would include -- but not be limited to the following:

(1) To perform the staff work for the President in the civil rights area, in identifying problems -- both present and potential, planning governmental responses, coordinating those responses, following-up governmental responsibilities and commitments.

(2) To supplement the civil rights programs of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, the President's Committee on Equal Housing Opportunity, the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in the Armed Forces, and similar efforts of the Administration and to serve as liaison for the President with these agencies.

(3) To assist the sub-Cabinet group on civil rights in planning departmental programs, evaluating program effectiveness, examining problems and progress, and preparing agendas. Feed-back to the White House and follow-up proposals to the President on matters undertaken by the sub-Cabinet group on civil rights is also essential.

(4) To maintain liaison with private agency leadership in the field of civil rights, serving as a place to which problems and grievances may be brought, where discussions may be held, and cooperative efforts planned.

(5) To demonstrate to the general public and the minority community the Administration's determination and commitment to the practical, speedy resolution of problems of discrimination and denials of constitutional rights.

(6) To serve as consultant to the Attorney General on non-legal matters relating to the civil rights functions of the Attorney General's office; and to cooperate with that office in dealing with such matters.

(7) To evaluate the effects and implications of incidents and problems in the area of civil rights and the Administration's approaches thereto; and to advise the President and other Administration Officers accordingly.

During the national crisis of World War II, the federal government obtained the services of highly skilled production experts as "dollar-a-year" men. In the current national crisis the federal government should call upon the private agencies to lend some of their most experienced and best skilled professionals to assist in overcoming the nation's problems in this area. Many of the national private agencies would consider lending key staff (perhaps one from each major agency) a contribution to the national effort in time of crisis.

Much of the burden of the Administration's civil rights thrust rests with the Attorney General and his aides. This is as it must be, particularly for litigation. But there is need for more than court action if we are to see our way through the current racial crisis without seriously damaging the image of the United States with our own citizens and with other nations. It is not humanly possible for the Attorney General's office to carry the heavy burdens demanded in litigation and engage in community relations efforts on the scale now needed. As a White House aide recently said, "We need 5,000 Burke Marshalls."

Professional persons, skilled and experienced in community relations and intergroup relations, are needed if the federal government is going to do the creative programming the current crisis demands. They would have at their finger tips the names of persons associated with their own organizations and with other civil rights groups in each of the key communities where trouble may be anticipated this summer. They could provide the President and his key aides with a sharply focused evaluation of each of these communities before difficulties develop. They could also provide the necessary follow-up contacts with key leaders following the conferences the President has held and will hold concerning voluntary desegregation and merit employment. They would provide the administration with suggestions for affirmative action of a non-legal nature.

The Special Assistant to the President, now concerned with civil rights matters, has responsibilities and assignments in other areas, as well, and cannot give full time attention to civil rights questions. Even if he could, skilled as he is, one man cannot do the job now called for. Nor can the United States Commission on Civil Rights, with its excellent staff, perform the function now required. As a bi-partisan independent agency, it cannot directly speak for or represent the Administration, nor has it been charged with the responsibilities nor given the authority to carry out the broad and sustained function on a systematic basis as envisioned for a Civil Rights Office in the White House.

The agencies mentioned in item 2 of this petition have limited and specialized functions and responsibilities and lack the mobility and flexibility to serve the purpose herein defined.

It may be argued, as Professor Richard Neustadt has, that specialized offices make an Administration unwieldy.

It has been found useful, however, to create such offices -- as in the case of McGeorge Bundy's special assignment in defense matters, the Council of Economic Advisers, and the Office of Science and Technology. The urgency and complexity of civil rights problems call for no less attention. They call for similar direct assistance to the President in guiding and monitoring the Executive Department's diverse programs that affect the nature and progress of equal opportunity throughout the nation.

Thus far, because of the reasons previously cited, the Administration's efforts to meet the civil rights crisis have been -- almost by necessity -- largely on an ad hoc basis and, therefore, its program has been mainly one of response and reaction to crisis situations.

The Civil Rights Office for which we herein petition can be created by the enlargement of the authority, resources and staff of Mr. Lee White, Special Assistant to the President, who must then be relieved of other responsibilities in order that he may devote full time to the direction of a highly mobile, experienced and skilled staff in a program of affirmative and preventative action.

The objective now must be for the Administration to assume the initiative. The time has come -- indeed, it is late -- for more pre-planned, thorough, sustained efforts. The creation of a fully-backed, well staffed Civil Rights Office in the White House would constitute an essential first step in moving ahead on this, America's most crucial domestic problem -- one with staggering international implications.

Dear ~~Dr. Dunbar:~~ Les

Thank you for your continuing support of NAIRO and for sending in your membership dues. We are enclosing you membership card, which is good until June 30, 1964.

We now have over 1,000 members in NAIRO and have chapters in ten cities. Your Association has helped a number of your fellow members in finding better job opportunities this past year. We make a regular practice of listing professional openings in our Newsletter.

Our 1962 Conference in Washington, D.C. was the largest and one of the best we have ever held. The 1963 Annual Conference, scheduled in Cleveland, Ohio, November 20-23, promises to be another outstanding event. Better enter these dates on your calendar now !

NAIRO has been called upon in several capacities by various Departments and agencies of the Federal Government -- in program development, professional recruitment, training programs, and information services. Similar assistance has been given to state and local governmental agencies and to private agencies. The outreach of your Association is greater than ever.

The interests and concerns of our members is very important to us; we hope that you will always feel free to let us know how we may serve you best.

Dear Mr. Swenson:

I have your interesting letter of August 16; good luck to you in eliminating the snarl of "Conflict of Interest."

Frederick Routh was born in Michigan, and is 38 or 39 years old. Very early his family moved to Florida, and he was educated in the public schools of Coral Gables. He has an AB and a MA from the University of Miami where, I believe, he did one year of law. He completed all his course work at New York University's Center for Human Relations Studies toward a Ph.D; he has never written his dissertation.

He served in the Navy during World War II, and was discharged as a Lieutenant, jg. From 1951-1953 he was an instructor in human relations at the University of Miami, and taught summer school at both the University of Michigan and New York University. He resigned from Miami to run, unsuccessfully, for the U. S. House of Representatives from your district, and then joined our staff in 1953 as Assistant Director for Field Activities. Fred left us in 1959 to become Executive Director at the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission. He served in this job until 1962 when he became Executive Director for the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, with his office in Washington. He was President of NAIRO from 1959 - 1960.

Although I have discussed this with none of them, I believe you could obtain objective evaluations of Fred from the following: Dr. H. Franklin Williams, Vice President, University of Miami; Professor Dan Dodson, Center for Human Relations Studies, New York University; the Hon. G. Mennen Williams, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.; and Mr. Harold C. Fleming, Executive Vice President, The Potomac Institute, 1501 - 18th Street, N. W., Washington, D.C.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

Thanks very much for your letter of August 12 recommending the employment by our Community Relations Board of Mr. Frederick B. Routh. We would like very much to take you up on your offer to provide additional information about him, as he might well fill the ticket.

We are off to a pretty good start here, although we ran into a temporary snag in the form of a "Conflict of Interest" ruling by the County Attorney as would regard membership on the Board by individuals whose business organizations do business with the County. It looks at present as if this hurdle will be eliminated by having the professional staff employed by the County but having the members of the Community Relations Board itself disassociated from the County and formed into a private non-profit corporation.

Looking forward to hearing from you again,

Sincerely,

Edward F. Swenson, Jr.

Les -

I'm not certain whether I sent you a copy of this report on Washington -- it is the one I am doing under the Meyer Foundation grant to NAIRO.

It was supposed to be completed last Fall but Jane's six weeks in the hospital and subsequent death delayed everything around here. It is being up-dated to take into account the Housing Order issued by the DC Commissioners.

Any comments -- substantive or editorial -- you might care to make would be welcomed. Paul Rilling feels it will be a very useful piece when it is released. I hope to push it through to completion in the next few weeks.

Hope you hear from Ehrmann for he has potential. I will keep my eyes and ears open for other possible candidates. A young lawyer, Nate Greene, with an LlM from NYU's School of Law with a major in Civil Liberties and Rights will also be contacting you. He would be good in Jack Menace's slot. Paul Anthony knows him slightly from when he was stationed at Ft. Benning. Both he and Ehrmann warrant a close look -- they are good men.

Best regards all around.

Ambling Into Confusion

If the Republican Party capitulates to the Goldwater faction, a large share of the responsibility will fall upon former President Eisenhower. From the beginning of the present ordeal for the Republicans, Mr. Eisenhower has blown mildly warm and then mildly cool. During the months when Senator Goldwater was building up his impressive showing of delegate strength, the General was silent and noncommittal.

Then, shortly before the California primaries, he issued a statement of Republican principles susceptible of no other interpretation than that he found Senator Goldwater unacceptable as the GOP nominee. The statement was so interpreted by everyone—including even Senator Goldwater, posing with an arrow in his back—until a few days later when Mr. Eisenhower apparently received a sharply monitory telephone call from Goldwater booster George M. Humphrey, and thereupon repudiated the anti-Goldwater interpretation.

After the California primary, the General again went into action in an effort to save the Party. He summoned Governor Scranton to Gettysburg on Saturday and seemed to have persuaded him to abandon his nonactive stance and become instead an avowed candidate. In that way only, the two men agreed, could the disaster that a Goldwater nomination would inflict upon so many other Republican candidates be prevented. But next morning phones rang again at Gettysburg from friends in the Goldwater camp, and Saturday's resolution soon drained away. As if to complete the picture of bungling, former Vice President Nixon yesterday gave Gov. George Romney of Michigan a shove toward the nomination and then in almost the same breath expressed belief that Senator Goldwater will have the prize securely won by this weekend. It is a sorry spectacle to see men whom the GOP has highly honored in the past thus permitting the policies and principles for which they stood to go down the drain without a real struggle.

General Eisenhower's shilly-shallying is especially damaging to his reputation coming, as it does, just after the celebration of D-Day plus 20. His performance in the 1964 political arena seems utterly out of keeping with his direction of the offensive against Hitler. Indeed, it is completely out of key with his vigorous fight for a set of political principles in 1952 when the danger of a factional GOP nomination was insignificant compared to that of today. A voice that might have rung with conviction and courage has merely sputtered confusion to the disservice of his party and country alike.

Dear Fred:

Long ago you sent me a copy of your draft report on Washington. I have finally read it, and I think it is very good. I want to see now the finished version, because I think it will be very valuable for me to have.

I have only the smallest of comments. On page 2, modern-day political scientists are not going to like your statement; they consider themselves, and they are, as realistic about these things as any other social scientists. On page 13, I cannot, myself, get excited by the fact that 18 schools are virtually all-Negro, and 13 virtually all-white. This seems to me practically unavoidable given the more disturbing fact, which is that 85% of the school enrollment is Negro, whereas only about 55% of the population is Negro. In other words, as I see it, the basic problem is to make the public schools good enough to hold the kids. Private schools are always going to attract some number of these who have social reasons of a snobbish sort, will prefer them; also for a religious reason. But we can expect Negroes also to be social snobs, and to desire some religious education. The real problem is to get back into public schools those kids who are leaving them not for either of these reasons, but because of the superior education offered.

One book I missed from your various references is Constance McLaughlin Greene's two-volume history of Washington. I have not read volume 1, but volume 2 I found very instructive.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie W. Dunbar

ADVANCE NOTICE

TO: NAIRO Leadership

FROM: Fred Routh

The next meeting of the NAIRO Board is scheduled for April 10th, in New Haven, Connecticut. Lloyd Davis, past NAIRO President and now Chairman of the Connecticut State Chapter of NAIRO, writes:

> The Connecticut State Chapter of NAIRO will sponsor one BIG reception for visiting NAIRO Board members and leadership on Friday evening, April 9th, at the Don Kirk's in Gilford. Bus transportation to get the group out and back. Mayor Richard C. Lee will host a luncheon meeting for the group at Yale's famous Mory's on Saturday, April 10th. Other good things are in the offing.

So please mark your calendars accordingly. There are many important things for us to discuss. We will review preliminary word from the Annual Conference Committee; we will have a progress report from the Editorial Board on the JOURNAL; there will be a progress report on the major professional training proposal the Board adopted at its January meeting -- to mention but a few.

All good regards -- see you in New Haven!

Dear Fred:

I don't see how I possibly could make the New Haven meeting. I gather, however, that some messy issues may come up. K. C. Jones talked to me about this briefly when he was here, and I have read your memorandum of March 16. Would it be of any help for me to write to Casey, or to you, my views? I am not sure they would agree altogether with yours, but then I am not altogether clear what your views are.

I liked the sentence in John McKnight's report of October 1961, "But he should freely initiate policy proposals, give his professional view of policies proposed by others, and have considerable latitude in developing the best means of implementing policy once adopted." I think if I were at the meeting I would be in favor of reaffirming this sentence and then testing any specific activities by it.

Let me know what you wish me to do.

MEMORANDUM

16 March 65

TO: NAIRO Leadership

It has been the feeling of NAIRO's President, K. C. Jones, that some of the current members of the NAIRO Leadership are not fully aware of the role assigned the Executive Director by previous actions of the NAIRO Board of Directors. In order to make this knowledge available to current leadership, the following excerpts from Board Minutes are presented.

"Edward Rutledge presented a job description re-defining the role and function of the executive director (attached).  The description was approved with one change, deletion of the second half of section (g) beginning: '... including such duties...' (Rutledge-Jones, carried). The Legal Counsel recommended that the Board suggest a By-Laws change at the next Annual Meeting, to take cognizance of the new staff title, 'executive director.'"

"Job Description I: NAIRO Executive Director
Context. As the professional association of intergroup relations workers, NAIRO presents a relatively new and unformed profession. It must function as a creative force in the definition and development of a field still shrouded in confusion and subject to strong negative biases. Much of the needed creativity, 'image-making,' and innovation must originate with the chief executive officer, who is presently the only full-time exponent of the field, and one who has no conflicting allegiances. He should function as a 'strong executive,' taking care that he does not usurp the broad policy-making functions of the Board or the membership -- and that he does not inhibit or discourage the sort of dedicated and active participation by officers, directors, and members that has kept NAIRO alive for fourteen staffless or short-staffed years.

* * * *

Function. Within the limits of broad governing policy adopted by the Board or membership, and subject to direction or approval by the Board or officers, the Executive Director shall be responsible for:

(a) implementing policy decisions of the Board and membership, participating (without vote) in their formulation and with freedom to initiate policy proposals;
(b) initiating and directing program activities that are not the assigned responsibility of committees or other NAIRO bodies, and coordinating those activities that are;

(c) SERVING AS PUBLIC SPOKESMAN FOR, AND INTERPRETER OF, NAIRO AND THE PROFESSION, BOTH INSIDE AND OUTSIDE THE INTERGROUP RELATIONS FIELD;
(d) COORDINATING OR INITIATING APPROACHES TO FOUNDATIONS AND OTHER ACTIVITIES DESIGNED TO SECURE FUNDS FOR BASIC OPERATION OF THE ASSOCIATION AND FOR SUCH PROGRAM OR STAFF EXPANSION AS SHALL BE APPROVED BY THE BOARD;
(e) ESTABLISHING AND MAINTAINING LIAISON WITH INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS AND OTHER PROFESSIONAL WORKERS, INTERGROUP RELATIONS AGENCIES, EDUCATION INSTITUTIONS, PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATIONS AND OTHER ORGANIZATIONS IN ALLIED FIELDS, FOUNDATIONS, AND ARMS OF GOVERNMENT AT ALL LEVELS;
(f) SUPERVISING AND COORDINATING THE ACTIVITIES OF NAIRO STAFF WORKERS, WITH PRIMARY RESPONSIBILITY FOR THEIR SELECTION;
(g) ADMINISTERING THE AFFAIRS OF THE ASSOCIATION, INCLUDING SUCH DUTIES OF TREASURER AND SECRETARY AS SHALL BE DELEGATED TO HIM BY THE BOARD; AND
(h) SERVING THE MEMBERS, COMMITTEES, COMMISSIONS, CHAPTERS, AND REGIONS OF NAIRO, WITH FREEDOM TO INITIATE PROPOSALS FOR THEIR STUDY OR ACTION."

THE ACTION TAKEN AT THE FEBRUARY 1962, NAIRO BOARD MEETING IN PITTSBURGH, WAS BASED ON ACTIONS TAKEN AT THE PREVIOUS BOARD MEETING OF NOVEMBER 10-11, 1961, HELD IN SAN FRANCISCO. IT FOLLOWS.

"DISCUSSION OF THE REPORT ON THE ROLE AND FUNCTION OF THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY, DEVELOPED BY JOHN MCKNIGHT AT THE REQUEST OF THE PRESIDENT, BROUGHT EARLY CONSENSUS ON A SHIFT IN EMPHASIS FROM INTERNAL TO EXTERNAL INTERPRETATION OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS NEEDS AND DIRECTIONS, FROM THE ROLE OF 'CREATIVE IMPLEMENTATION' TO THAT OF INCREASING INITIATION OF PROGRAM (WITHOUT USURPING THE POLICY-MAKING FUNCTIONS OF THE BOARD). A STATEMENT ON THE ROLE AND FUNCTION OF A 'STRONG EXECUTIVE' CONTAINED IN THE MCKNIGHT REPORT (APPENDIX IV) WAS ADOPTED AS A GUIDELINE, AROUND WHICH THE EXECUTIVE SECRETARY AND BOARD MEMBERS TO BE APPOINTED BY THE PRESIDENT WOULD DEVELOP A SPECIFIC JOB DESCRIPTION. (RUTLEDGE-SHINERT, CARRIED).
SINCE THE TITLE OF EXECUTIVE SECRETARY HAD BEEN CHOSEN ORIGINALLY TO FIT THE ROLE OF ONE WHO WOULD SERVE AS A POLICY IMPLEMENTER OR 'SERVANT OF THE BOARD' ONLY, THE BOARD AUTHORIZED CREATION OF A NEW TITLE TO FIT THE NEW RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE POSITION. (RUTLEDGE-SHINERT, CARRIED). AMONG TITLES SUGGESTED WERE: EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, AND EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT.
JOHN MORSELL NOTED THAT IT WAS THE MAN, NOT THE TITLE, THAT DETERMINED THE ROLE, AND SUGGESTED THAT RETENTION OF 'EXECUTIVE SECRETARY' BE NOT OVERLOOKED AS A POSSIBILITY.
JOHN LASSOE NOTED THAT PRIORITY HAD BEEN GIVEN IN THE PAST TO INTERNAL ORGANIZATION, SERVICE TO MEMBERS, RECRUITMENT OF NEW MEMBERS, AND ADMINISTRATIVE DUTIES; THE SAME AMOUNT OF TIME MUST NOW INCLUDE SUCH NEW EMPHASES AS EXTERNAL INTERPRETATION AND PROGRAM INITIATION. THIS WILL HAVE ITS EFFECT ON THE FORMER DUTIES, ESPECIALLY IN TERMS OF TRAVEL AROUND THE COUNTRY."
FROM PAGES 4 AND 5, BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING, NOVEMBER 10-11, 1961; SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

"FROM TASK FORCE REPORT PREPARED BY JOHN MCKNIGHT, OCTOBER 1961: ROLE AND FUNCTION OF THE NAIRO EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

'WHAT IS NEEDED IS A COMPOSITE OF ALL THREE TYPES. NAIRO'S CHIEF PROFESSIONAL SHOULD FUNCTION AS A 'STRONG EXECUTIVE.' HE SHOULD NOT USURP THE BROAD POLICY-MAKING FUNCTIONS OF THE BOARD OF THE MEMBERSHIP. BUT HE SHOULD FREELY INITIATE POLICY PROPOSALS, GIVE HIS PROFESSIONAL VIEW OF POLICIES PROPOSED BY OTHERS, AND HAVE CONSIDERABLE LATITUDE IN DEVELOPING THE BEST MEANS OF IMPLEMENTING POLICY ONCE ADOPTED.

'HE SHOULD CONTINUOUSLY ASSESS THE NEEDS AND OPPORTUNITIES OF NAIRO AND THE FIELD, AND HE SHOULD ACT READILY ON THE BASIS OF HIS ASSESSMENTS AND HIS BEST JUDGMENT, WITHIN THE LIMITS OF BROAD GOVERNING POLICY. THE BOARD SHOULD ESTABLISH MECHANISMS FOR PROVIDING SWIFT POLICY GUIDANCE AND DECISIONS WHEN THESE ARE NECESSARY; HE SHOULD NOT BE SO LIMITED BY COMBERSOME ORGANIZATIONS MACHINERY THAT HE CANNOT RESPOND TO NEW SITUATIONS UNTIL MONTHS HAVE ELAPSED. THE EXECUTIVE SHOULD ALSO BE A PUBLIC SPOKESMAN FOR, AND INTERPRETER OF, NAIRO AND THE PROFESSION. HE SHOULD DO THIS AS THE ONLY FULL-TIME EXPONENT OF THE FIELD, AND ONE WHO HAS NO CONFLICTING ALLEGIANCES. HE SHOULD ESTABLISH AND MAINTAIN LIAISON NOT ONLY WITH MEMBERS OF NAIRO, BUT WITH AGENCIES AND INDIVIDUALS, PUBLIC AND PRIVATE, THAT WANT OR NEED BETTER UNDERSTANDING OF NAIRO'S CONCERNS.

'MY REASONS FOR ADVOCATING SO STRONG AND COMPREHENSIVE A ROLE ARE THESE:

'THE VERY FACT THAT NAIRO IS AN ORGANIZATION OF PROFESSIONALS CREATES A NEED FOR A STRONG EXECUTIVE. NAIRO'S POLICY-MAKERS ALL HAVE THEIR OWN ORGANIZATIONAL CONCERNS;THEY CANNOT ACT AND SPEAK CONSISTENTLY FOR THE WHOLE FIELD. BECAUSE THEY ARE MEMBERS OF THE SAME PROFESSION, THEIR DISAGREEMENTS ARE LIKELY TO BE FREQUENT. ONLY A STRONG EXECUTIVE CAN OFFSET THESE LIABILITIES.

'NAIRO NEEDS NO CARETAKER ADMINISTRATION; IT NEEDS TO DEVELOP MORE WORTH TAKING CARE OF. IT REPRESENTS A RELATIVELY NEW AND UNFORMED PROFESSION. IT IS NOT A HOLDING OPERATION FOR AN ESTABLISHED AND POWERFUL GROUP, BUT A CREATIVE FORCE IN THE DEFINITION AND DEVELOPMENT OF A FIELD STILL SHROUDED IN CONFUSION AND SUBJECT TO STRONG NEGATIVE BIASES. MUCH OF THE NEEDED CREATIVITY, 'IMAGE-MAKING,' AND INNOVATION MUST ORIGINATE WITH THE EXECUTIVE.

'FINALLY, LET ME MAKE IT CLEAR THAT I AM NOT ADVOCATING A ONE-MAN ORGANIZATION. OFFICERS, BOARD, AND MEMBERS OF NAIRO SHOULD BE ACTIVE IN ITS AFFAIRS. BUT IT IS UNLIKELY THAT THEY WILL BE PRODUCTIVELY ACTIVE UNLESS THEY ARE WISELY ACTIVATED, AND THAT IS VERY LARGELY A FUNCTION OF THE EXECUTIVE. TO PUT IT ANOTHER WAY, HE SHOULD USE, AS WELL AS BEING USED BY, THE MEMBERS AND THE BOARD.'

Your "Brains" letter head is so painfully true I doubt you should use it.

The Annual Meeting begins Sunday, November 14, at 2:00 P.M. -- ends Tuesday lunch. I hope NAIRO can afford a hotel room at the Biltmore where everybody will be staying. If so, let Mildred know immediately to make reservations. If not you're welcome to the use of the living room couch and my car -- daylight hours only on car!

Look forward to seeing you.

Dear Paul:

Sorry you couldn't make the meeting of NAIRO's Commission on Intergroup Relations Problems in International Affairs. We all missed you but have kept your name in the "pot" for the trip. Actually, the meeting was quite small for quite a number had to bow out at the last moment. However, Danzig, Fleming, Feild, Bill Taylor and I had quite a session and are moving ahead.

Sounds like SRC is really hiting the heights when the Attorney General comes down to speak; good work ! Harold said he had quite a trip on the A-G's plane. I have sent you a clipping from the Washington Post on it; Bobby Baker's (the other Bobby Baker).

Speaking of the Attorney General, I testified today right after he did before the Sub-Committee on Executive Reorganization of the Senate Committee on Governemt Operations. We took opposite sides of the question of the transfer of CRS to Justice. You will be receiving a copy of my testimony in the next few days as part of the NAIRO Board membership. It was well received by Ribicoff and Javits and also by the people in the audience.

That's all for now; warm regards all around.

IT WAS DECIDED TO REQUEST THE RESEARCH COMMISSION OF NAIRO, HEADED BY ARTHUR JOHNSON OF DETROIT, TO IMPLEMENT THE RESOLUTION ON THIS SUBJECT PASSED AT THE 1965 CONFERENCE.

THE RESEARCH COMMISSION IS TO UNDERTAKE A PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION OF WHAT ORGANIZATIONS ARE WORKING ON THIS SUBJECT, WHAT PROJECTS ARE PERTINENT TO OUR INTERESTS, AND HOW NAIRO MIGHT BEST LEND AID AND SUPPORT TOWARD FURTHERING OUR PARTICULAR INTERESTS IN WORK CARRIED OUT BY OTHER AGENCIES. THE AMERICAN CONGRESS OF CORRECTION, THE NATIONAL COUNCIL ON CRIME AND DELINQUENCY, THE NATIONAL CRIME COMMISSION, THE POVERTY PROGRAM, WERE MENTIONED AS WAS THE GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL, HOWARD UNIVERSITY LAW SCHOOL, AS SOME SOURCES. IT WAS RECOMMENDED THAT MERLIN MEYERS, WHOSE AGENCY IS INVOLVED IN THIS QUESTION, BE PLACED ON THE RESEARCH COMMISSION.

FRED ROUTH IS TO WRITE TO ART JOHNSON EXPLAINING CLEARLY WHAT THE BOARD IS REQUESTING AS A REPORT.

V EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR'S REPORT

(SEE DIRECTOR'S BOX - NOVEMBER-DECEMBER NEWSLETTER)

REPORT ON MEMBERSHIP & DUES

IN REACTION TO THE REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR THAT WE NOW HAVE 1400 MEMBERS, JOE ROBISON, PETE ROBERTSON AND OTHERS ASKED FOR A REPORT FROM FRED AT NEXT BOARD MEETING SHOWING:

A. NUMBER OF REGULAR MEMBERS IN GOOD STANDING
B. NUMBER IN ARREARS AND BY HOW MUCH TIME
C. NUMBER OF STUDENT MEMBERS
D. LIFE MEMBERS
E. DUES RECEIVED FROM CATEGORIES A, C, D (EACH) IN 1965

- PETE ROBERTSON SUGGESTED RE-CONSIDERATION OF FISCAL YEAR CORRESPONDING WITH DATES OF OUR ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

REPORT ON CERTIFICATES AND PLAQUES

CASEY JONES ASKED ABOUT PROGRESS OF MEMBERSHIP CERTIFICATES, WALL PLAQUES FOR LIFE MEMBERS; AND CODE OF ETHICS.

FRED REPORTED THAT ALL REGULAR MEMBERS FOR 1966 WERE GETTING CERTIFICATES WHICH WOULD SOON BE PRINTED. WALL PLAQUES FOR LIFE MEMBERS ARE BEING PLANNED HOPEFULLY TO COST NO MORE THAN TEN TO TWENTY DOLLARS EACH.

REPORT ON CODE OF ETHICS

THE CODE OF ETHICS UNDER GALEN MARTIN'S CHAIRMANSHIP HAS BEEN SENT TO ALL CHAPTERS FOR THEIR DISCUSSION AND CONSIDERATION. THERE SHOULD BE A REPORT ON THEIR REACTIONS AT THE JULY MEETING - IT WAS ALSO PRINTED IN THE NOVEMBER-DECEMBER NAIRO NEWSLETTER.

STAFF PRIORITIES

CASEY JONES SUGGESTED THAT THERE SHOULD BE A REGULAR REVIEW BY THE BOARD OF THE ACTIVITIES, WORK LOAD, AND PRIORITIES OF THE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.

IT WAS THE CONSENSUS OF THE BOARD THAT THIS IS THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PRESIDENT, WITH THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

JOHN SAID THAT HE WOULD TAKE UNDER ADVISEMENT THE DISCUSSION AND WOULD ACT TO MEET THE NEEDS EXPRESSED. HE STATED THAT TOO OFTEN BOARD MEMBERS THINK UP THINGS TO DO AT MEETINGS AND THEN LEAVE FOR HOME AND THE PRESIDENT AND EXECUTIVE ARE LEFT TO IMPLEMENT THE DECISIONS.

INTERLOCKING SESSIONS: WITH 1966 CONFERENCE OF NATIONAL COMMITTEE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION IN HOUSING

ED RUTLEDGE ASKED FOR AN EXPRESSION OF OPINION ON INTERLOCKING CONFERENCE DATES IN LOS ANGELES AS HAD BEEN ARRANGED IN CHICAGO IN 1965. THIS WAS FAVORABLY RECEIVED; IT BEING FELT THAT CAREFUL PLANNING WAS NECESSARY TO MAXIMIZE BENEFITS. IT WAS FELT THAT THE HOUSING CONFERENCE PRECEDING THE NAIRO CONFERENCE WOULD BE AN EXCELLENT ARRANGEMENT. THE NAIRO CONFER-ENCE IS SCHEDULED FOR OCTOBER 15-18, 1966.

JOHN BUGGS WILL ACT AS LIAISON WITH THE BOARD ON PLANS FOR THE 1966 CONFERENCE.

VI BUDGET REPORT

DETAILED SHEETS ON OPERATIONS, FUNDED PROGRAMS, NAIRO INCOME AND DISBURSEMENTS, BUDGET PROPOSAL, ARE ATTACHED.

IT WAS NOTED THAT WE SHOW A CONSIDERABLE PROFIT FROM SALE OF PUBLICATIONS, AND RECOMMENDED THAT THIS BE CONSIDERED SERIOUSLY AS SOURCE OF ADDED INCOME IN 1966.

IT WAS ALSO NOTED THAT WE BEGAN 1965 WITH A SURPLUS OF $4,000.00, AND WE BEGIN 1966 WITH A SURPLUS OF $2,000.00.

CASEY JONES NOTED THAT THE BUDGET SHOWS THAT TO MAINTAIN THE JOURNAL WE NEED TO OBTAIN $10,000, WHICH WE DO NOT HAVE NOW IN SIGHT. IT WAS FELT THAT WE OUGHT TO HAVE A REPORT ON POSSIBLE SOURCES FOR THIS AND WHAT THE SITUATION INDICATES AT THE NEXT BOARD MEETING.

ED MARCINIAK NOTED THAT TWO GRANTS FURNISHING CONSIDERABLE INCOME TERMINATE IN 1967. WE OUGHT TO BE PLANNING NOW FOR REPLACEMENT.

PAUL RILLING'S PROPOSED BUDGET OF $41,000 FOR 1966 WAS ACCEPTED.

MARCINIAK AND FEILD

VII RESOLUTIONS PROCEDURE FOR ANNUAL CONFERENCE

JOE ROBISON READ SUGGESTED PROVISIONS WHICH HE HAD WORKED OUT (WITH ASSISTANCE OF ART LEVIN AND FRED ROUTH) DEFINING THIS PROCEDURE. NO CONSENSUS COULD BE REACHED; IT WAS AGREED THAT JOE WILL RE-WORK THESE SUGGESTIONS, CIRCULATE THE PROPOSALS TO THE BOARD IN ADVANCE OF THE NEXT MEETING, WHERE THEY WILL AGAIN BE DISCUSSED.

VIII PROGRAM DEVELOPMENT: REPORT OF ART LEVIN

WASHINGTON MEMBERS OF THIS COMMITTEE HAVE BEEN BROUGHT TOGETHER AND ARE WORKING ON SUGGESTIONS FOR CHAPTER MEETINGS AND ACTIVITIES. THEY PRODUCED SUGGESTIONS USED IN LLOYD DAVIS' MEMO OF 17 JANUARY TO CHAPTER CHAIRMEN. OUT-OF-TOWN MEMBERS WILL BE INVOLVED.

HOWEVER, HIS BASIC CONCERN IS TO FOCUS THE THOUGHT OF HIS COMMITTEE ON: WHAT IS THE FIELD OF NAIRO?

IN GOING OVER THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE 1965 CONFERENCE, FOR EXAMPLE, ONE CAN FIND A VARIETY OF CONCERNS, LEADING TO WIDELY DIVERGENT CONCEPTIONS OF WHAT IT IS THAT WE SHOULD BE DOING. HE HOPES HIS COMMITTEE CAN MAKE A CONTRIBUTION TO THE QUESTION: WHAT IS THE BUSINESS OF NAIRO?

IX CHAPTER DEVELOPMENT: REPORT OF LLOYD DAVIS

THE TASK OF THIS SPECIAL COMMITTEE, NOW CONSISTING OF 23 REPRESENTATIVE MEMBERS, IS TO:

(A) AID CHAPTERS
(B) BUILD NEW CHAPTERS
(C) ESTABLISH SOME STANDARDS AND UNIFORMITY IN CHAPTER RESPONSIBILITY AND PROCEDURE

A FOUR-PAGE QUESTIONNAIRE WAS SENT OUT TO ALL 17 CHAPTERS. TEN CHAPTERS, SO FAR, HAVE REPLIED. ALL WERE STIMULATED BY THE QUESTIONNAIRE. LLOYD HAD DISTRIBUTED TO THE BOARD A SUMMARY OF THE REPLIES. HE STRESSED THAT:

(A) CHAPTERS NEED GUIDANCE TO MAKE THEIR PROGRAMS CONTRIBUTE TO PROFESSIONAL GROWTH OF THE MEMBERS
(B) THEY ARE NOT WORKING ON LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT
(C) THEY SEEM DESPERATE FOR PROMOTIONAL MATERIALS
(D) IN GENERAL, THE CHAPTERS INDICATE THAT THERE IS MUCH FLOUNDERING AND INDECISION ON PROGRAMMING.
(E) THEY HAVE NOT DISCUSSED THE STATEMENT ON PUBLIC POLICY
(F) THEY DO NOT HAVE AN ON-GOING PUBLIC RELATIONS PROGRAM
(G) THERE IS A NEED FOR AN UP-DATED "GUIDELINES FOR CHAPTER ACTIVITY"

LLOYD STATED THAT THERE APPEARED TO BE POSSIBILITIES FOR THE FORMATION OF ABOUT EIGHT NEW CHAPTERS.

HE RECOMMEDNED THAT FRED MAKE A BARNSTORMING TRIP TO REACH CHAPTERS IN TROUBLES AND CENTERS OF NEW CHAPTER ORGANIZATION. MANY MEMBERS OF THE NEW YORK CHAPTER ARE DISAPPOINTED BECAUSE THERE ARE NO MEETINGS AND NO ACTIVITY.

HE STATED THAT THERE IS A DEFINITE NEED TO INSURE THAT THE NATIONAL ORGANIZATION WILL HAVE AUTHORITY TO MAINTAIN MINIMUM STANDARDS FOR CHAPTER RESPONSIBILITY, AND TO TAKE A CHAPTER INTO RECEIVERSHIP TO REORGANIZE IT IF NECESSARY.

HE HAS ARRANGED WITH THE U.S. CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION, THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT AND THE HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY TO LET LOCAL NAIRO LEADERSHIP KNOW WHEN TOP OFFICIALS OF THESE AGENCIES WILL BE IN THEIR AREAS SO THAT THEY MIGHT MEET WITH THE CHAPTERS. ADDITIONAL AGENCIES WILL BE REQUESTED TO JOIN IN THIS COOPERATION.

LLOYD PROPOSED SEVEN CHANGES IN THE BY-LAWS UNDER ARTICLE 18 TO COVER POINTS NEEDED IN THE NATIONAL-CHAPTER RELATIONSHIP:

"TITLE 5 (AMEND TO READ) EVERY LOCAL CHAPTER SHALL ELECT A PRESIDENT, A VICE-PRESIDENT, A SECRETARY, AND A TREASURER. IT MAY ELECT OR APPOINT SUCH OTHER OFFICERS AS IT DEEMS NECESSARY."

"TITLE 6: EVERY LOCAL CHAPTER SHALL HOLD AT LEAST 8 MEMBERSHIP MEETINGS PER YEAR AND SUCH OTHER BUSINESS AND SOCIAL EVENTS AS IT DEEMS ADVISABLE."

IT WAS FELT THAT THE TITLE OF THE CHIEF OFFICER OF A CHAPTER SHOULD BE THAT OF CHAIRMAN AND THE SECOND OFFICER SHOULD BE VICE-CHAIRMAN. THESE CHANGES WERE MADE. (CONSENSUS)

TURNING TO TITLE 6, IT WAS AGREED THAT THE REQUIREMENT OF EIGHT MEETINGS WAS TOO HIGH AND THIS WAS REDUCED TO SIX. (CONSENSUS)

"TITLE 7 (NEW TITLE) EVERY LOCAL CHAPTER SHALL ISSUE A PERIODIC NEWSLETTER OR SOME OTHER PUBLICATION AS A MEANS OF KEEPING ITS MEMBERSHIP INFORMED OF CHAPTER ACTIVITIES AND MATTERS OF INTEREST."

"TITLE 8 (NEW TITLE) EVERY LOCAL CHAPTER SHALL ESTABLISH A PUBLIC RELATIONS COMMITTEE OR ITS EQUIVALENT AS A MEANS OF MAINTAINING AN ON-GOING PROGRAM OF PUBLIC INFORMATION ABOUT NATIONAL NAIRO AND CHAPTER CONCERNS."

"TITLE 9 (NEW TITLE) EVERY LOCAL CHAPTER SHALL SPONSOR AT LEAST ONE MEETING DEVOTED TO A REPORT ON THE NAIRO ANNUAL CONFERENCE."

OLD TITLE 6,7,8 AND 9 SHALL REMAIN AS THEY ARE WORDED BUT SHALL BECOME TITLES 10, 11, 12, AND 13 RESPECTIVELY.

"TITLE 14 (NEW TITLE) THE NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS SHALL HAVE THE AUTHORITY TO PLACE IN RECEIVERSHIP (INTO THE HANDS OF A RECEIVER OR OTHERS APPOINTED TO ADMINISTER CHAPTER AFFAIRS DURING A PERIOD OF REORGANIZATION) ANY CHAPTER WHICH HAS BEEN INACTIVE OVER SUCH A PERIOD OF TIME AS TO BE DETRIMENTAL TO THE BEST INTERESTS OF ITS MEMBERSHIP AND THE ASSOCIATION. THE NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS SHALL ALSO HAVE THE RIGHT TO SUSPEND OR REMOVE FROM OFFICE ANY CHAPTER OFFICER WHOSE CONDUCT OR INACTIVITY IS SUCH AS TO DO HARM TO HIS CONSTITUENCY AND TO THE ASSOCIATION. THE NAIRO BOARD OF DIRECTORS WILL GIVE CONSIDERATION TO A PETITION, SIGNED BY 20% (BUT NOT LESS THAN FIVE MEMBERS) OF A CHAPTER'S MEMBERSHIP IN GOOD STANDING WITH NAIRO, FOR THE REMOVAL OF OFFICERS AND THE PLACING INTO RECEIVERSHIP THEIR CHAPTER."

THERE WAS DISCUSSION AS TO WHETHER TITLES 7, 8, 9 SHOULD BE IN THE BYLAWS OR WHETHER THEY SHOULD BE, IN A GUIDE FOR STANDARD CHAPTER PROCEDURE.

THE SUGGESTION WAS MADE ON TITLE 14 THAT WE NEED SOME KNOWLEDGE OF COMPARABLE PROCEDURE IN ORGANIZATIONS SIMILAR TO NAIRO.

BOOKER MCGRAW SUGGESTED THAT A GUIDE FOR CHAPTER ACTIVITIES BE DRAWN UP WHICH WOULD NOTE TWO LEVELS OF PROCEDURES AND PROGRAM:

(A) MANDATORY PROCEDURE AND ACTIVITIES
(B) DESIRABLE PROCEDURE AND ACTIVITIES

IT WAS DECIDED THAT THIS MATTER BE TURNED BACK TO LLOYD DAVIS AND HIS COMMITTEE WITH THE REQUEST THAT THEY RE-WORK IT ALONG LINES SUGGESTED BY BOOKER AND IN CONSIDERATION OF THE DISCUSSION. (CONSENSUS)

X AD HOC TRAINING COMMITTEE: REPORT OF GEORGE SCHERMER

THERE ARE INFORMAL CONFERENCES GOING ON WITH THE STAFF OF THE FORD FOUNDATION. THEY INDICATE QUITE POSITIVE INTEREST. THERE HAVE BEEN TWO CONFERENCES WITH THE LEADERSHIP OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT. ALL IS STILL IN THE NEOGOTIATION STAGE. A PROJECT PROPOSAL INVOLVING TRAINING B

INVOLVING TRAINING FOR BOTH GROUPS (NAIRO AND NACD) IS BEING WRITTEN.

THERE IS ONE KIND OF TRAINING NEEDED FOR THOSE COMING INTO THE FIELD ANYWAY VIA THE POVERTY PROGRAM, AND ANOTHER KIND, WITH MUCH MORE ACADEMIC CONTENT, FOR THOSE WHO CHOOSE TO ENTER THE FIELD OF INTERGROUP RELATIONS AS A CAREER.

JOHN FEILD, WHO IS A MEMBER OF THE NACD BOARD, REPORTED THAT THE PROGRAM OF TRAINING WOULD PROBABLY INCLUDE INTERNSHIPS, ON-THE-JOB TRAINING, SEMINARS, INSTITUTES, WORKSHOPS -- WITH A HIGH OVERLAP IN CONTENT NEEDED FOR NAIRO AND THAT NEEDED FOR NACD. HE REPORTED FURTHER ON THE FORMIDABLE FINANCES NACD WILL HAVE, SINCE DUES OF MEMBERS CAN BE CHARGED TO THE FEDE AL SHARE OF THE POVERTY PROGRAMS.

HE ADVISED THAT WE SHOULD EXPLORE COOPERATIVE PROJECTS WITH NACD.

XI DEAN SHORT DELIVERED TO THE BOARD THE OFFICIAL INVITATION OF THE PHILADELPHIA CHAPTER FOR THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF 1968 TO BE HELD IN THAT CITY.

XII JOHN HOPE ANNOUNCED THAT THE APRIL MEETING OF THE BOARD WOULD BE HELD IN ATLANTA. THE DATE WILL BE SENT OUT SHORTLY.

THE MEETING WAS ADJOURNED AT 4:35 P.M.

RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED,

ABRAHAM F. CITRON

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM

Revelle Pergament, NAIRO Intern assigned to the National Urban League's Southern Regional Office in Atlanta called this afternoon at 3:30. She was calling on behalf of Heman (Bill) Sweatt, also of that office, because he had received a phone call at 10:30 a.m. from a man who identified himself as Robert Karnesky of Houston, Texas. Karnesky told Sweatt (of Sweatt vs Texas fame) that NAIRO was rounding up all Negroes who had desegregated Southern colleges and universities to join James Meredith in concluding the march on Jackson, Mississippi and that the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., should withdraw along with other civil rights leaders. After a careful check of our files, I assured Revelle that we knew of no Robert Karnesky and that he was not a member of NAIRO.

I then called Robert E. Alexander, director of the Houston Council on Human Relations and a member of NAIRO, to ascertain if he knew anything of Karnesky; he did not but he checked the Houston, Galveston, and Clearlake phone books and found no trace of him.

Sweatt called this office at 4:20 and I reported to him what I had learned and assured him that Karnesky didnot speak for NAIRO and that I personally regarded the proposal as naive and asked that he relay this to Rev. King and Whitney Young, whom he is to see on Thursday (tomorrow).

I called Paul Anthony, who said that Sweatt had been in touch with him and that Karnesky had called him (Sweatt) back and said he had called SRC and they were cooperating fully. Paul said that Karnesky had not called SRC, that they knew nothing of this, and would be no party to it.

I called Harold Fleming and asked him to pass this information along to Burke Marshall, with whom he is to talk this afternoon and to raise the question with him of passing this on to the Justice Department.

Just a note to express again my most sincere regret that I will be unable to attend the NAIRO Conference this year.

Dear Fred:

Please consider this letter an expression of $10.00 worth of gratitude and no more than that!

If you think sending a piddling contribution, dated July 4th, obscures the fact that you only think our great south-wide never-ending struggle against injustice is only worth $10.00 then we have no choice but to note that!

From the desk of

FRED ROUTH

Dear Paul

Imagine my surprise when I saw that my check No. 1776 came up on the 4th of July ! It was quite a coincidence ! I felt that it should not be spent on any routine bill but should go to an outfit which is fighting for freedom.

After considerable thought I have settled on SRC; the donation is small but the wishes for continuing success are large.

Warm regards to all !

Dear Paul:

I enjoyed very much the opportunity to visit with you at the University of Texas and the chance to catch up on past activities.

In spite of your ambivalence about what approach to use in your speech, I feel that you ended up with a first-rate product. From the warmth of the reception it received from the crowd, I judge that the participants felt the same way. Joe Witherspoon also told me how good he felt it was.

Sorry that you had to run Friday afternoon for you would have enjoyed Whitney Young at the Friday evening banquet and Charles Morgan on Saturday morning. Morgan did a courtroom presentation that was laced with wit and wisdom.

I look forward to seeing you at the meeting of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, March 21-22. Let me know your arrival plans and I will meet you.

Warm regards.

Dear Frederick B.:

Thanks for your note and your comments about Washington. I arrive Wednesday afternoon at National Airport, Delta #350, 5:15 p.m. I have a reservation at the Washington Hilton.

While it is good of you to offer to meet me, I see little sense in your battling that five o'clock traffic. If you show up, more power to you. Otherwise, what about me getting myself to the hotel and planning to meet you there around 6:00 p.m. for dinner?

I must return promptly on Friday evening, since I leave Saturday morning for Nassau. That's called doing the Routh!

Dear Fred:

Thanks for all your commendations. They have not been over looked. Quite the contrary, they have been very much appreciated. In fact, I was sorry I was unable to take part in that religious bit which you suggested. However, the invitation clashed with very heavy demands on my dealing with the Ford Foundation about new money. In fact, this has been my major occupation for the past month. They may make us rich for the next three years, though I almost hope they won't.

My problem on travel for the next two months is serious. I am on the Grand Jury for September and October, which means meeting every Tuesday and Thursday for those two months. Therefore, unless something unusual turns up it will be after October before I come to Washington.

You know, of course, there is nothing to keep you from coming to Atlanta, and we would be delighted if you found this possible.

Best.

Dear Paul,

I thought your thing in the "Going to College Handbook" was particularly well done. I have written Aubrey Brown to find out what tear-sheets would cost; I would like to send one to each NAIRO member....also it would be a useful item to send out to students who want to come into the field. Is SRC going to order some, too ? The three pages shouldn't be too expensive.

HCF is back from Kitty Hawk and we were together for 5zies last eve; Feild and Levin were also there and the discussion sparkled. If I ever leave Washington, 5zies are among the things that I would miss the most.

Nothin' else is new.....

as ever,

Fred

Dear Aubrey:

Many thanks for the five copies of the "Going to College Handbook." The five articles on intergroup relations make a very fine packet of information. I particularly liked the one by Paul Anthony.

What would 1,500 tear-sheets of these three pages cost ? My guess is that the other agencies represented would also want to buy some copies for their use.

Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Julian:

On behalf of NAIRO's national Annual Conference Planning Committee, I write to invite you to be one of our main speakers at 10:00 a.m. or at luncheon on Tuesday, November 12th. This year's Conference -- our 22nd -- is being held at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia.

If you are not thoroughly familiar with NAIRO, Paul Anthony of SRC can fill in the details; he is one of our Board Members.

We hope that you might speak on "Today's Scene" for special emphasis is being given this year to assessing the field of intergroup relations. Your knowledge of what goes on and your ability to telliit like it is, would be of great help to the five hundred intergroup relations leaders we expect at the Conference.

NAIRO is a non-profit organization and operates on a tight budget but we will, of course, pay travel expenses and offer a modest honorarium of $200.00

Finally, on a personal basis, I was tremendously impressed with the dignity and style you displayed at the Democratic National Convention -- Georgia was never so well represented.

All good regards.

MEMORANDUM

To: Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation

From: National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials
Alexander J. Allen, President
Dr. Frederick B. Routh, Executive Director

Subject: Report on Status of NAIRO-ERMF Internship in Human Rights Program, as of June 18, 1964, to ERMF Trustees (Meeting: June 22, 1964, N.Y.C., 2 P.M.)

Internship Group #1

There are now 24 Interns in the field; 7 in New York City; 5 in Washington, D. C.; 2 each in Philadelphia, Atlanta; Chicago; one each in: New Haven; Rochester; Albany, N. Y.; St. Louis; Jefferson City, Missouri; and Louisville.

Sixteen Interns are working with private agencies of a national, regional or local scope; the other 8 are with governmental agencies at county, city, state and federal levels.

Their activities range from research, writing pamphlets on various phases of intergroup work to speaking with and before community groups of all sizes. In short, their experiences encompass the spectrum running from theory and conceptualization to the everyday concerns of the people whose conflicts and anxieties created the need for this new talent in the field. Also, along the way, they have learned of the exigencies of agency life.

The Interns are now in their fourth month of work-training. We are presently receiving reports both from them and from their supervisors. From what we have read thus far, we are encouraged by two common features of these reports:

1. The experiences of each Intern have, for the most part, been quite varied without becoming superficial.

2. Interns and supervisors alike have prepared careful and thoughtful reports, feeling free to speak forthrightly. Without this attitude, our attempts to maintain a continuing evaluation and re-appraisal of the program would be seriously hampered

One Evaluation Committee of the NAIRO Career Service Board will be meeting next week, after its members have had an opportunity to study these reports. Their role will be to respond to developments in the individual agencies and to assess the overall conduct of the program from solicitation of applicants through the pairing of Interns and agencies.

Internship Group #2

To handle the administrative processing of the second group of Internships - as well as to conduct the on-going development of the first group - NAIRO has added to its staff Nathan Greene. Mr. Greene is an attorney whose background includes service as a Legislative Assistant to Congressman Donald Fraser and as a Robert Marshall Fellow in Civil Liberties at New York University's School of Law.

The Interim Report attached herewith will provide you with the statistical data on the progress of second round processing, thus far. Applications and inquiries are continuing to come in. Interviews will be held early in July.

The proposal training plans of agencies will also be reviewed during that time. Thereafter agencies and interns certified for participation will spend about one month making their mutual selections.

In late August, the Training Institute for this group will begin with 10 days of intensive preparation. It is tentatively scheduled for Tarrytown, New York, and we would be hopeful of and honored by - visits from some of you. Each member of the Board of the ERMF will receive full details as soon as plans are completed.

Immediately after the Institute, the Interns will commence their one year of work and training. We expect that a good many of the agencies in this second group will be new to the program.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

Since you have contributed to our public welfare project, I thought you might be interested in one of the local activities having to do with telling the public about the gaps and services of the state department of public welfare.

Therefore, I am enclosing a copy of the program of a meeting held in Chattanooga January 5, and the mimeographed sheet which was distributed at the meeting.

As a result of the interest generated by the meeting, we are planning several follow-up activities, including a question-and-answer session on public welfare for March 22.

We are also working on a mimeographed report and a printed brochure which will be distributed state-wide late this month or next month.

Sincerely yours,

* * * * * * * * * *

18. Father disabled by heart condition. Mother 20, and three children under four years.

AFDC 2 years. Present grant $120. Man approved for AD $85, total $205 month.

Parents find it difficult to provide adequate housing, fuel for family. Many frustrations with three young children and sick husband.

More realistic allowance for shelter and fuel would help since all families cannot live in Housing Projects.

* * * * * * * * * *

19. Mother 42, and 7 children. Share home with sister and her 6 children.

Grant received many years. Present AFDC $150, and Social Security $66. Sister's AFDC $150. Total number of persons 15 - total income $366.

Long time dependency pattern and many problems for mother to cope with in providing adequate housing and child care. Recent rent increase + ($115 mo.) and food stamps increase may foster return to poor child care, housing hardships, etc.

Adequate grants necessary to provide families, and it would help if standard housing available for large families at reasonable costs.

In 1955 named Sunday editor of the newly-created Jackson (Miss.) State-Times, came to The Atlanta (Ga.) Journal in 1956 as its first TV-radio editor. In 1960, was promoted to Sunday editor of The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

He resigned that post in 1962 on invitation to become the first TV-radio director of the Peace Corps. In 1963, he launched a new editorial page column for The Atlanta Constitution. He assumed his new position with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in March, 1967.

Mr. Shavin has free-lanced for magazines, newspapers, TV and radio. Has written and performed in documentaries for both broadcast media. Helped originate WSB-TV's "Two Bits" weekday series, on which he was a regular guest. Wrote "Confederate Diary," a WSB-TV series, and authored "Our Noble Heritage," a radio series of vignettes about Negroes prominent in American history.

In 1960, he created "The Atlanta Century," a Civil War series which appeared as a page in the Journal-Constitution each Sunday for more than five years, and was reproduced in part in other Southern newspapers. The series won the praise of historians such as Carl Sandburg and Dr. Bruce Catton, professors and students, as well as awards from the National Civil War Centennial Commission and other professional organizations as the Georgia Press Association. "The Atlanta Century" was then reproduced as a book and is widely used in school systems, universities and libraries. Apart from articles in various magazines, Mr. Shavin also authored a second book, "The Day Rich's Opened," has projected one on the Peace Corps, and has written various state productions for the Georgia Press Association, the Georgia Education Association and others. He has often appeared on the lecture platform before groups ranging in location from Miami to Richmond, Va.

Mr. Shavin is a graduate of Indiana University and has taught courses in journalism at Emory University, Millsaps College, and Georgia State College. He is married to a native New Yorker and is the father of three children.

Dear Paul:

Enclosed is a copy of the brochure which your contribution to the Tennessee Council of NASW made possible. It cost us $433, has been widely distributed, and will continue to be distributed as NASW members go before groups in Tennessee to tell them of the gaps in public welfare.

This fall, prior to the Legislature's meeting in January, we will concentrate on the miserably low AFDC grants, and be prepared to talk about the possibility of income maintenance if public welfare continues to leave many deprived children without basic help.

As of today the new president of the Tennessee Council of NASW is Mr. Hibbard Thatcher, 1012 Battery Lane, Nashville, Tennessee 37220.

Sincerely,

Claire

Tennessee Council of Chapters of a few facts

about public welfare in Tennessee services of Tennessee public welfare

gaps in these services

1	Money grants to about 90,000 recipients each month.	Only one in four needy persons receive money grants in Tennessee.
2	Money grants to needy people in four catagories: Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, Aid to the Disabled, and Aid to dependent children through Aid to Families with Dependent Children.	Maximum monthly grants are $90 for a single adult, or for a mother and child. An additional $15 a month is allowed each additional child, with $150 the maximum for a family, regardless of number of children, or needs of family.
3	Money grants to about 70,000 children each month through Aid to Families with Dependent Children.	Only five children in the family can be included in the grant.
4	Training grants to some unemployed, able-bodied fathers whose children receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children grants. Program known as AFDC-Unemployed Parent Grant.	Available only in 30 counties. In the other counties dependent children receive help only when their fathers are totally disabled, or not in the home.
5	Job training, re-educational and rehabilitation services to help welfare clients become self-sufficient.	Many welfare clients are too old or too handicapped physically, mentally, or emotionally ever to become self-sufficient.
6	Counseling services to families, children, and individuals who receive welfare grants.	Too few welfare workers, too much turnover in personnel. Therefore some caseloads include as many as 300-600 client cases.
7	Homemaker services to families needing a temporary "mother" when the mother is ill or unable to care for the family.	Only 30 homemakers in Tennessee, and only in the four major cities. Available only through Aid to Families With Dependent Children.
8	Medical care to the indigent.	Limited to hospitalization, nursing home care. Drugs available in a few instances. Dental services not included.

The NASW recommends that:

Economic need of persons be the sole criterion for money grant eligibility.

Grants be raised to minimum subsistence level set by state Department of Public Welfare standards.

All children in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children receive support.

The AFDC-UP program be extended to all 95 counties in Tennessee.

Money grants be readily available to needy persons, whether or not they will ever be able to become independent.

Trained welfare workers be paid a starting salary of $7,000.

Substantial increases be made in homemaker staff to make service available whenever and wherever needed.

Some Medicaid through Title XIX be adopted by Tennessee Legislature as soon as possible, with eventual medical and dental care for all those requiring treatment and unable to pay for it.

With an annual budget of 87 million dollars a year the Tennessee Department of Public Welfare performs much-needed services in often admirable ways.

Many welfare workers have as many as three to five hundred clients, whom they are able to see only once each year.

Many applicants for service must wait six months to be heard.

Grants are so low that few families can gain a foothold toward independence; for want of sufficient funds, many of these services can only be offered on an experimental and insufficient basis.

How can an over-burdened worker evaluate his client's potential and help him toward independence under these circumstances?

"...COMPATIBLE WITH DECENCY AND HEALTH..."

Welfare Organizations Act of 1937

Tennessee's public welfare laws state that assistance 'compatible with decency and health' be provided to those without income to meet their own needs: the elderly, the blind, the disabled, and the dependent child. YET, THE TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE DOES NOT APPROPRIATE THE NECESSARY FUNDS.

DOES public welfare perpetuate poverty?

DOES public welfare encourage illegitimacy?

WHY are welfare costs rising

Why do many seem to prefer "drawing welfare" to looking for work?

Is public welfare an answer to poverty?

Why do many children of welfare recipients become recipients themselves?

Could you, as a lone person, live on $90 a month?

For a discussion of these and other questions, why not call your local NASW chapter for an interesting program, or for published materials?

Gentlemen:

At the request of its members and the public, the National Better Business Bureau undertakes, as one of its functions, to report on organizations which depend in whole or in part on contributions, donations, or memberships. This service is of primary interest to business executives who, as a general policy, seek facts from the Bureau before acting upon requests for support.

In reporting on your organization, it is our desire to render a report which will accurately reflect your objectives and activities. In order to do this, we request your cooperation in supplying the data and exhibits required for that purpose.

The questions on the following pages have been prepared to indicate the data desired. Much of the requested information no doubt will be found in material which your organization has previously published.

If some of the questions do not apply to your organization will you kindly indicate why they do not? Also, if there are details not covered by our questions, which you think we should have for reporting purposes, we would welcome your submitting them.

In issuing its reports to business firms, requesting our assistance before making donations or subscriptions, the National Better Business Bureau does so in a completely impartial manner. It neither endorses, gives advice nor expresses opinions but confines its reports to the factual information that is available.

Your cooperation will be sincerely appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

As you can well imagine, it was impossible to use all the material collected but we felt that your interview with us was extremely interesting and therefore, we decided to use a considerable portion of it on our introductory program.

We do hope that your local station will carry the series and want to thank you for taking your time and efforts to cooperate with us.

I listened and watched in yesterday afternoon to the Roy Wilkins interview. I am one who never watches TV, but I was asked to see that one, and I did.

Compliments to Mr. Wilkins, who behaved with good temper and good strategy throughout. But the method of making press interviews does not lend itself to the theme Mr. Wilkins must put over; the productive contribution of Negro America to the peace, productivity, and civilization of the country. I would urge that the power of television be used for such positive expositions.

Dear Mr. Blair:

For some time we have admired the thoroughness and accuracy of your morning news report. This is especially true in regard to your coverage of resent disturbances here in the South.

This morning, however, in referring to the suspension of bus service in Montgomery, you commented that, "bus integration has ended in the South." In reference to Montgomery, this is correct. But, throughout the South there is some marked progress in bus desegregation. In this regard, SRC made a spot check last week to determine the extent of this progress, and a news release was prepared from our findings. Since the time of this release, Chattanooga also has desegregated its buses. This release has received considerable attention, including coverage on NBC "Monitor". We are enclosing a copy of the release. Perhaps, as background material, it may be of some value to you in your future coverage of this subject.

Again -- our expression of appreciation for the excellent coverage of confusing subjects at a difficult time.

It occurs to us that Mr. Michaels might be interested in talking with Mrs. Durand Miller, Chipley, Georgia, (Harris County). For many years Mrs. Miller has been active in promoting better understanding among the people of her area and she might be able to direct Mr. Michaels to several persons whom he might not otherwise meet. Mr. Michaels will find her cooperative, we believe, if he mentions that she was suggested to him by Mrs. M. E. Tilly, our director of women's work.

Dear Madam:

Mr. Chet Huntley has read your thoughtful letter and appreciates the interest which prompted your writing. He has asked us to acknowledge it and thank you.

The National Broadcasting Company follows a long-established policy of permitting its news analysts to express personal opinion as long as such opinion falls within a factual framework and if it is clearly identifiable as the analyst's own opinion.

In the case of Mr. Huntley's remarks of February 1, we feel that these requirements were amply met. Up to the point at which Mr. Huntley ventured his closing remarks, the program was a conscientiously even-handed report on the controversy over integration in Atlanta. Thereafter, Mr. Huntley's remarks, which even included the highly personal observation that he could be mistaken, were plainly offered as his own opinion, and not that of the National Broadcasting Company.

Although Mr. Huntley was operating within his franchise as a news analyst, we believe that the intense interest in this controversy justified a further discussion of the issues raised on his February 1st program. Therefore, NBC scheduled a special program from 6:30-7:00 on Sunday, February 8, to give a hearing to those vitally concerned who disagree with any of the views expressed on "The Second Agony of Atlanta". We invited the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to take part in this presentation. We hope that you found the program informative and rewarding.

Sincerely yours,

Kathryn S. Cole

'The Second Agony Of Atlanta'

Southerners who have long bemoaned the fact that the news media of the North has failed to offer a fair presentation of the South's racial plight cannot complain about an hour-long production over NBC-TV Sunday night. Labeled "The Second Agony of Atlanta," the show proved to be a penetrating analysis of the anxiety with which Atlanta citizens of both races view the impending school crisis.

In a rare editorial comment, NBC's Chet Huntley wrapped up the program with the suggestion that the NAACP and the militant Negro leadership withdraw, at this point, from the segregation battle. Contending that the NAACP has become a symbol around which distressing and dangerous tensions have developed throughout the South, Huntley opined that a new group of Negro leaders might be able to achieve greater progress in the drive for integration.

Huntley qualified this appraisal by noting that it would be unfair for the extreme parties of one side to withdraw without those on the other side following suit. This, he evidently reasons, would clear the atmosphere of tension and increase the chances for a gradual and sensible settlement of the region's problem.

That NBC and Huntley will be the target of considerable criticism appears almost certain. Already a spokesman of the NAACP has said that his group will ask for equal time to reply. Some Southerners will probably join critic forces by tagging the suggestion as pure nonsense and extreme idealism.

Be as it may, the important thing—as we see it—is that this national televised show has greatly assisted in opening the eyes of many Americans who sadly are either uninformed or misinformed about the Southern situation. As far as Huntley's commentary, it is important inasmuch as it reveals a thoughtful newsman's concern for a situation which threatens to become one of the country's most costly dilemmas.

NBC-TV Presentation Of The South's School Problem Was Fair

The NBC-TV presentation, "The Second Agony of Atlanta" presented from 6:00 p. m. until 7:00 p. m. Sunday was, surprisingly enough, a fair an impartial, with one notable exception, of the racial situation as it affects the schools of Atlanta and Georgia.

Chet Huntley, who narrates "Outlook", is recognized by the South for his partiality toward the integration view over his regular weekly television news and it came as a shock and surprise that the Outlook presentation did not cast Southerners in an extremely bad light.

Both sides were aired, as they should have been, on the show and while it arrived at no conclusions except the biased opinion of Mr. Huntley in his closing "editorial", it did give the nation an opportunity to see both sides of the coin in the South.

Appearing at the time it did, "Outlook" probably boosted the South's stand against integration. Last week's events further aided our cause touched off with the outstanding address by Senator Talmadge in announcing his plan for a Constitutional Amendment to restore schools to local authorities. The South's cause was further aided in a riff between Chief Justice Earl Warren and President Eisenhower over the Supreme Court decision calling for integration of schools.

We watched "The Second Agony of Atlanta" with intense interest and came to the final conclusion that it was a fair and almost impartial news presentation which probably did the South's cause more good than harm.

Huntley Telecast More Level-Headed

Chet Huntley of NBC-TV Sunday did one of the better "go-South and-do-some-interviews" segregation stories.

Of course, the slant of any nationally produced interpretative news show on this subject could be anticipated, although it should be said of Huntley that he played his stuff fairly straight. He showed excerpts from Gov. Ernest Vandiver's inaugural address, interviewed white and colored high school students, showed some people at the Varsity in Atlanta watching a TV news broadcast and covered a PTA meeting at Northside High there.

If the news commentator is to keep his own ideas and views out of such a report, he exhausts his possibilities quickly in interviews and speech excerpts. After all, you could interview 20 people at random in the South and receive a representative cross section of opinions and once you broadcast an opinion, you wouldn't add much by broadcasting it again from a different person.

Perhaps one of these days the networks will do the thorough background job that has been accomplished by the United Press International and Associated Press. TV should be able to make comprehensible the vast differences in different parts of the South, the background of the Southerner himself and why he thinks as he does. It could be done.

At his hour-long program concluded, Huntley went unabashedly into the editorial realm and told of his own reactions. He apparently understood, for he reflected genuine concern, that there are indeed Southern people who just aren't going to accept any new basis of pupil selection for many, many years to come.

"We hear please that integration be slowed down," Huntley said. "If it were slowed down, there just wouldn't be any at all.

"It's not that we've been integrating too fast, but that we've been integrating too loud."

Considering the source, it was surprising to hear him reprimand the NAACP for pushing too fast in some areas.

While Huntley's report was interesting, it added little new material until he began his own interpretations of the situation. We don't resent editorial opinion when it is frankly identified as such, as his was, and would have preferred to hear his views at more length.

Huntley called the program "The Second Agony of Atlanta." Certainly the current situation will not be allowed to grow as agonizing as the first one.

My Dear Mr. Fleming,

Thanks for sending me a copy of Mr. Huntley's June 23 letter to you and one of your July 1 letter to Dr. Brawley.

Mr. Huntley's letter is a rather remarkable document, for it seems strange that he, in New York, should send to you, in Atlanta and an officer of the Southern Regional Council, a two-page letter of pronouncements about the past, present, and future of race relations in the south, an area which is the special field of observation, study, and analysis by your organization.

But he admits that his viewpoint is debatable, so I am sure that if it is possible to help him achieve a better understanding of the South, you and the Council of Presidents have acted with wisdom and efficiency in order to accomplish this end.

Sincerely yours,

Susan J. Blockson

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Thank you for your letter of July 1 and for the copy of the letter from Chet Huntley which you enclosed.

It is interesting to note how limited Mr. Huntley is in his knowledge and understanding of the Negro and race relations in the south. His letter helps to explain why he has made so many terrible blunders in discussing the race issue. I hope, however, that your letter will be helpful. Let me, again, thank you for what you have done to help enhance Mr. Huntley's knowledge of the racial situation.

Dear Dr. Brawley:

You will be interested in the enclosed letter from Chet Huntley. His understanding of race relations in the South is clearly far from adequate, but perhaps our exchange of correspondence was of some help.

I am also sending a copy of this correspondence to Dr. Clement and Mrs. Blockson, from whom I have had a very kind letter.

My Dear Mr. Fleming:

Thanks for sending me a copy of your June 10 letter to Mr. Chet Huntley.

I, too, have admired Mr. Huntley, and I know many Americans respect his opinions. For America, it could be tragic if a man in his position should lack accurate information and the ability to make sound evaluations.

Your well documented letter furnishes information which if properly used will ultimately benefit all of Mr. Huntley's audience. I admire and appreciate your interest.

Dear Mr. Fleming;

Many thanks for your letter.

Unfortunately, I do not have a copy of my reply to Mrs. Blockson, so I cannot tell you whether I expanded my remarks beyond the quotation contained in your letter. If I did not, I trust you will understand it was because of a busy schedule and a mass of correspondence to answer. To whatever extent I may have expressed myself poorly or insufficiently, I certainly did not intend to leave the impression that there is no adult Negro leadership in Atlanta.....only that in the context of our story there was none. That, too, may be a debateable point, but it was the way in which I interpreted the issue.

The problem was, and it remains, one for the white community of Atlanta. It, and it alone, must determine whether it will abide by the decision of the United States Supreme Court, and what it will do in the face of the threat that the Georgia Legislature may close Atlanta's schools. In this context, it is my opinion that there is no Negro leadership in Atlanta commanding the power, authority, prestige, or constituency which can effectively influence the decision of the white community. I wish it were otherwise, but I cannot see how it can be argued otherwise. Is this not one of the arguments of the Negro.....that he must be given the opportunity to develop his leadership to the end that he can help determine his own fate? This, by the way, is why I am of the opinion that the Southern Negro would have been better advised to win his case for full and complete voting rights before moving full-force into the school segregation issue. But that is another issue.

Thus, the story we did in Atlanta, most certainly concerned the Negro, but the decision will be made by the white community and had we brought a number of Negro spokesmen into it, I am sure we would only have succeeded in inflaming prejudice and passions, and there is far too much of that already.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Huntley:

A friend has passed on to us a copy of a postal card which Mrs. Ellis Blockson of Sewickley, Pennsylvania received from you in reply to her letter concerning "The Second Agony of Atlanta." The text of the card is as follows:

> Dear Mrs. Blockson: Thanks for your letter regarding the Atlanta program. We used only one adult Negro because there is no adult leadership in the city and because we thought the children spoke more eloquently than their parents would have.
> Sincerely, (s) Chet Huntley

Particularly since Bill Hill paid us a visit while he was here preparing the program, I feel that I should write you about this serious misinterpretation of the Atlanta community. As one who has admired your work and is aware of your national reputation as a newsman, I feel certain that you would want the facts - which are wholly at variance with the above statement - called to your attention.

The truth is that there is hardly a city anywhere in the United States that can compete with Atlanta in the quality and quantity of its Negro leadership. The Atlanta University center is a world-renowned aggregation of Negro institutions of higher learning. Their faculty members alone provide a richness of leadership which, apart from race, would be unusual in any city.

As Helen Fuller wrote recently in the New Republic:

> As a university center for more than 50 years, Atlanta has a large pool of high-quality Negro leadership.
> These educated men and women create a different, more acceptable image of the Negro than white people in most other Southern cities see. A Negro professor of history was elected over a white candidate to the Atlanta City Democratic Committee not long ago. Due to the pioneering of men like A. T. Walden, who began the practice of law in the city 40 years ago when Negroes were not even welcome in the courtrooms, strong interracial business contacts exist. Negro executives of the Citizens' Trust Company, working with fellow members of the Federal Reserve System in leading white banks like the Fulton National and First National, have negotiated financing for millions of dollars worth of Negro housing. Atlanta Life and Southeastern Fidelity, two large Negro insurance companies, have helped obtain more such mortgages through their contacts with white companies in the same fields.

Emmet J. Hughes, in his Fortune article of September 1956, also wrote at length of Atlanta Negroes' achievements in the fields of business and finance as witness the following excerpt:

> Auburn Avenue in Atlanta lays claim to being the richest Negro street in the world. It is not a pretentious sight, most of its low buildings housing the familiar, drab Negro taverns, barbershops, groceries. But scattered among them there stand: the Atlanta Life Insurance Co., whose $40 million in assets qualifies it as the largest Negro stock company in the U. S.; the Citizens Trust Co., with assets of $7 million, the Negro bank belonging to the Federal Reserve System; the Atlanta World, the nation's only Negro daily; the Mutual Federal Savings & Loan Association of Atlanta, with assets of $11 million, the largest such institution south of Washington. These institutions (their resources matched by Negroes nowhere in the U. S., (with the possible exception of Durham, N. C.) give the key to the relative well-being of Atlanta's 185,000 Negroes. That key is a credit supply.

When I talked with Mr. Hill, I pointed out to him that Atlanta University's President Rufus E. Clement has twice been elected by city-wide, popular vote to the Atlanta Board of Education. Dr. Clement's ability is nationally -- even internationally -- recognized, and by his fellow members of the Atlanta Board he is thought of not as "the Negro member" but as an outstanding educator and administrator. Comparable achievements could be cited for the other Atlanta Negro college presidents, bankers, business executives, ministers, social workers, lawyers, and other professionals.

Atlanta's relatively progressive record to date in race relations and civic life would not have been possible without superior leadership, Negro as well as white. Mayor Hartsfield, for one, has paid public tribute to this factor many times.

Rather than prolong this letter further, I will forgo more detailed and specific examples. But if you are left in doubt as to the abundance of adult Negro leadership in Atlanta, I hope you will give us an opportunity to furnish more documentation.

Sincerely yours,

Harold C. Fleming

Pursuant to our telephone conversation this morning, I am forwarding to you a copy of the statement sent on a card to Mrs. Ellis Blockson, 355 Centennial Avenue, Sewickley, Pennsylvania, by Chet Huntley. As indicated in my conversation, we of the Negro community are amazed at the dense ignorance of Chet Huntley regarding Negro leadership in Atlanta. I am pleased to know that you are willing to follow through on this matter, and send a statement to Chet Huntley regarding Negro leadership in Atlanta. Dear Mr. Gitlin:

Here are the materials I promised in our telephone conversation this morning. The mimeographed and printed publications are self-explanatory. One word about the roughly reproduced report on Nashville. This is a rough draft by Wallace Westfeldt, a reporter on the Nashville Tennessean, which will shortly be out in printed form. I'm including it, despite its roughness, because I think you will find the Nashville story well worth considering for your program. A good contrast would be the situation in Tuskegee, Ala., which is described in one of the booklets enclosed.

If these two places don't fill the bill for some reason or other, the remaining material will suggest other possibilities.

As for a reporter, Westfeldt would be a good choice, especially if you settled on Nashville -- this, assuming that he could shake loose from his regular job for a long enough period. Another possibility would be Mrs. Margaret Price, who authored one of our reports; she is an experienced newspaper woman and can be reached at 3916 Mackall Avenue, McLean, Va. telephone number; Elwood 6-4516. George McMillan, whom I mentioned on the telephone, can be reached at Box 299, Aiken, South Carolina; telephone: Midway 9-4747.

Let me know how and when we can help further.

On behalf of the National Business League and our Project Outreach staff, we would like to express our sincere appreciation for your participation in our planning meeting of the National Committee for Equal Participation in Business December 5-6, 1967.

To accomplish the mission of the Committee as an Advisory Board of Project Outreach and to achieve our aim of expanding opportunities for the disadvantaged minority business community we need more of the services of truly resourceful persons such as yourself.

To serve as a national clearinghouse for economic development plans and programs that provide opportunity for our minority small businessmen constituency, which is what you thoughtfully agreed upon as a useful service of our Committee, we need effective liaison with many active groups. We ask you to serve, in effect, as our extended staff to involve others.

We welcome your suggestions on program. We solicit your advice on persons whom we should contact for membership on the Committee, as well as your aid in referring people to us whom you feel might make valuable contributions to the Committee.

We particularly need support from corporations both in terms of money support and program cooperation.

Our Steering Committee Meeting is scheduled for January 4, 1968. As we stated at the General Session this meeting is open to your voluntary participation.

Our next regular meeting will be February 21, 1968 in Washington, by which time Outreach will be underway fully in 12 or more cities.

We shall look forward to maintaining close and constant contact with you during the ensuing months.

Again we thank you for your cooperation.

Very truly yours,

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR EQUAL PARTICIPATION IN BUSINESS

December 5, 1967 Washington, D.C.

Mr. Chairman Distinguished Guests and Members of the Committee:

It is heart warming and most encouraging to see you all assembled here for the purpose of seeking solutions to the problem of economic development in our depressed Urban areas. For the National Business League, it has been a long, lonely tedious and painfully difficult and wearying struggle these past 67 years, that brings us now to this moment - when we grasp the reins of leadership to offer our Nation a realistic proposal for solving its woes of social instability.

Let me say that we do not expect any panacea from your deliberations - we do not expect this meeting to produce a religious fervor of excited activity that might raise unrealistically the hopes of immediate and drastic economic change. But we do hope most sincerely that all of you here today will leave this place dedicated to the proposition that you - and each of you - will do all within your power to assure that black men and other minorities will have equal participation in the Nation's profit-making process. That you will leave here with the firm conviction that we can make significant contributions to the Gross National Product, given the support and resources for success in business.

That among the 10,000 members of the NBL, you see the kind of responsible citizens who can - with your help and support - provide the positive leadership that will serve to maintain stability, security and tranquility in our teeming urban ghettos. It is our deep hope that this meeting will produce the kind of interracial cooperation that will make our people better business operators, more meaningful symbols of the kind of material success that the worlds richest society offers the majority of its citizenry and the firm and lasting confidence that business people have for each other that will vastly expand our economic productivity.

Business is the motor force of our society and profits the fuel for its operation. The free and unfettered operation of the profit-making process is the sole source for economic, social and political stature. What we say to you here is: If you join hands with us here and now we can reduce the tremendous liability of public welfarism and high police costs by making the elements contributing to these costs productive units within the society. We will do this not with hat-trick speed but through sustained motivational effort, visible examples of material rewards for diligent performance, and positive images of responsible citizenship. And, we submit that the cost to you, your firms and our society will be substantially less than the cost of military suppression of ill-advised and irrational violence. Violence as we have seen it recently is an emotional response to immediate stimuli, underwritten by deep-seated grievances ignored. To suppress violence is to expend resources; to support the indigent is to expend resources; to transform the non-productive to roles of productivity is to create and add to the Nation's resources. As business people, it is our inherent responsibility to make this transformation - here and now - at this point in our Nation's history. How then, do we achieve this historically significant transformation?

The National Business League proposes 'Project Mainstream' as its formula for evolving domestic tranquility and promoting economic growth. All of you here have seen the outlines of the program, so I won't go into its details here, other than to point out that Mainstream was borne of Project OUTREACH, and can be nurtured to full maturity only by the fulsome cooperation of all of you here today.

Project Outreach starts at the very bottom rung and seeks to prepare our people for successful operation of business enterprises. It is a very limited program in terms of widespread federal funded applicability. You can help it along by searching your local community for additional resources to place an OUTREACH program in each of your individual cities. The federal program finances only twelve cities. Our national staff can handle an unlimited additional number of cities without increase in our personnel. There are few cities in the Nation that cannot raise the approximately $20,000.00 required to establish a local Outreach office. Local government, business organizations, United Givers Fund - any one of any combination of these groups could provide us with funds to place an 'OUTREACH' Program in every one of the Nation's cities. It should be a first order of business, then, that you consider committing yourselves to this task as soon as you return to your respective communities. The need for basic, practical business training is critically apparent. We must start at the basic training. Government recognized the need and has begun the effort. The private business community would appear to be duty-bound to support the effort that government has now seeded.

Moving beyond the basic learning experience, we advance to an intensified tutorial training approach, wherein we almost literally hold the little fellows hand as he learns the disciplines and mores of good business practice. Here again we have asked the government to lead the way. But, in spite of our general feeling as businessmen that government is a wastrel with our tax dollars, we have been negotiating with them for well over a year to get our pilot "UPLIFT" project operational in just one Chapter city. We are now cautiously optimistic that - hopefully - we can get the one UPLIFT operation going. I understand that around the agency they have nick-named the proposal "MAIDEN-FORM", so I'm not sure if that means it's going to be rushed out or hung on to. But, hopefully again, we will be able to become operational shortly. The point is that NBL proposes to do all in its power to assure that any financial support that is provided for our membership will be properly employed in the earning of profits; that it will not be ill-spent on unwarranted material or services that fritter away such financial resources; that the individual operator of a business will receive the maximum benefits from the wisest most prudent use of financial resources.

Of the many problems confronting our membership and the other deprived small business operators, money and the lack thereof - is the most critical. To a large degree, the lack of readily-available capital is the most serious one because of the deeply-depressing psychological effect it has on the operator himself. In all too many instances, the business operator engages in practices that he himself knows are wrong, but he must continue robbing Peter to pay Paul because he does not have the working capital to operate his enterprise properly. This frustrating state of affairs produces an obsession of hopelessness that destroys creativity drive and iniative. It stiffles ambition and suffocates hope. NBL is first to admit that in all too many instances a profusion of funds will not reverse these psychological barriers. But the absence of readily-available capital assures that there will be no material change in either the emotional pattern of the operator or the profit pattern of the business. Capital is normally acquired by family savings accummulated, mutual investment by close friends or the sale of securities to the investing public. None of these sources are available to the small minority entrepreneur.

Few businesses maybe started or developed to meaningful significance today with less than $25,000.00. Few working families can save from their earnings more than $1,000.00 per year. It would thus require a quarter of a century to acquire the requisite capital to properly establish a new enterprise. This restless, fermenting generation is unwilling to wait. If the individual is without accummulated savings in ample supply, so are his friends. An offering of securities to the investing public would be an excercise in futility.

So, given this state of affairs, if the Nation is to convert its economic dependents to productive components of our society, it must provide the capital resources with which to begin the process. Here, too, the most efficient method of accomplishing this end is through a partnership of government and the private business community.

Thus, the establishment of a Small Business Investment Company is our answer to the capital dilemma. I am aware of the fact that SBIC is a dirty word to any of you. We do not share such views. As always, our people are three days late and $2.00 short. We are just getting to the program - after the bad image has been created. But, we favor the SBIC approach because it is the only method that we know of that the business-government partnership can be utilized to provide our people with the capital resources we need so badly with the minimum risk of total loss.

Our original proposal envisioned the establishment of an investment company in each one of our eleven regional offices. It would be a gradual build-up - not a crash program. Immediately, we wanted to establish one SBIC in Los Angeles, California, and one in the District of Columbia. Each of these would have a minimum capitalization of one million dollars in private money. We want the major business establishments in these areas to provide this capital. Some companies may make outright grants, others may purchase debentures, others may acquire stock. But, in order for the company to effectively seed the growth of our small business people, it must be operated by our people. In short, you must entrust these funds to our prudent guidance. With the leverage of matching government funds, we can then seed worthy business enterprises to economic significance. We will not be able to finance any and all businesses. But we will be able to provide capital in sound ventures with good promise of success that cannot now be serviced by normal finance channels.

The core of our plans for the success of our business of our business expansion and growth proposal is urban development.

We propose to develop complexes or clusters of businesses ranging from the ambitious 30 acre Vernon and Central project that our Los Angeles Chapter has planned - to smaller but equally handsome neighborhood convenience centers. Many of these will be developed as condominiums with each shop owning its own parcel. The entire complex would largely be owned as well as operated by the indigenous citzenry. Extensive use of franchises and distributorships will considerably ease the monitoring and guidance of the NBL. Similarly, contiquous small industrial parks are to be created that will house sub assembly and light manufacturing facilities in which complex processes may be broken down into simplified steps that will enable the indigenous population with limited skills and low work capability to earn fair wages.

The technique for developing these new business enviroments is the local development company concept, authorized under section 502 of the Small Business Act. The liberal terms of this kind of financing offer maximum security for private financiers.

But the vehicle that will tie the total package together is the non-profit NBL Urban Development Foundation. This foundation will operate as an "in-house' service facility that will guide indigenous non-profit groups in creating new housing enviroments it will provide seed money for these groups to create the kind of housing deemed best suited to the needs of the sample population to be served. It will assist in advancing such programs to the point that the citzenry in general will be motivated to recreate their cultural enviroment through the processes of redevelopment. The foundation will similarly aid the indigenous ghetto operator of a business to locate, design, and create the shopping centers and industrial parks that are concerned. All of this activity will accrue to the general good of the community and will work best where the industrialists in the majority business community join hands with our people in the constructive pursuit of profits.

Overlooking all these activities, will be an electronic data processing and business reporting system that will monitor the far-flung activities of the burgeoning league chapters around the Nation. The system will be designed to assure maximum efficiency in all of the multiple business functions involved in the NBL program, to keep close watch on the NBL program itself and bring to the small entrepreneur the benefits of modern management and accounting technology.

The National Business League submits to you that if you join hands with us and our government, we can quickly evolve the kind of business leadership in our ghetto communities that will radically reduce the probablilty of civil disorder and the outrage of senseless violence. It should be clearly understood that we are not here talking about "Black Power", or "White Power". We're simply talking about solid economic power. "GREEN POWER", if power we must have. Legitimate power born of initiative, perserverance and ability. Our well intergrated Chicago Chapter is mute evidence of the kind of inter-racial association we seek to build all over our nation.

You who are here today clearly indicate by your presence that you are concerned about our nations futrue. Your charge here today is to help us to evolve the details for putting the design into operation. The times are uncertain and the need most urgent. The nation belongs to all of us - differences in skin pigmentation to the contrary, not withstanding. Its future is in our hands. The bitter deprivation and discrimination dark men have suffered for lo these many hundreds of years are a burden on the consciences of the white people of this country. Black men in turn have the moral obligation to contain and control the violent rebellion of our restless young. This in turn means that the forces of power-economic and political - must provide us with the tools on loans if you will - with which to build the kinds of success images that will influence our posterity.

That is your mission here today, and our nation awaits your decision to meet this challenge. For the members of the National Business League, it is a great joy to have you with us. We hope your stay is a pleasant and productive one. Thank you very much.

Remarks of Congressman John Conyers in response to speech by Berkeley G. Burrell President, National Business League at the National Committee for Equal Participation in Business, Washington, D. C., December 5, 1967

I'm very pleased to be here, to share with you the exciting moment we have arrived at. As you know, for the last three years in Congress I've been trying to find out what doors open what, and where these committees lead to and what these motions to table end up doing with certain resolutions. And I am particularly aware of the role that government must play in any meaningful development of programs that this organization has outlined. I am not sure, however, how many of us here tonight are aware of how little the government is doing in this regard. It's not clear to me how you relate many of the peripheral issues of the day to the business that is at hand this evening. As one who has been trying to re-order the priorities of our Nation, I am constantly surprised at those who apprise me of the fact that they make no distinction between our foreign and domestic policies, and do not ask why we're getting so little in the domestic trough and so much in the area of defense-spending. Some 31 billions of dollars are spent annually toward a war that, if it's making sense to you, makes very little sense to me.

Now, I know I'm going to upset some of you here, and I'm here for just that purpose. To others of you, I may make a little bit of sense. But gentlemen, you can sit here until the year 2000 talking about what you're going to do. I'm very willing to concede that there is a great deal that the Negro entrepreneur can do to improve his own skills, to prepare for the real opportunity that is ahead for all of us. I'm perfectly aware of the fact that there are positions that are being opened every day which we are unable to fill with Negro talent. But I suggest to you that that is not the largest task. The largest task we face here tonight, more importantly than as businessmen, but as citizen statesmen, is to act as Americans who are willing to help bring their force as citizens to bear to re-order our priorities in this country.

You hear very little these days about guns and butter, or guns or butter, because we are very well aware that you can't have both. We are very well aware that once you begin a war anywhere in the world, notwithstanding the fact that you're the most powerful force in all of history, you cannot maintain a war commanding a half-million American troops, 31 billions of dollars a year 'known' expense and then maintain a war against poverty on the home front. It didn't sound practical to begin with and has proven totally impossible.

Now, there's been a great deal of criticism about the Congress in this regard, that the Congress isn't doing what it ought to do; and I'm the first to give testimony by chapter and verse, bill by bill, since January 4, 1965, to the ineffective way that the Congress has risen to the occasion of our domestic crisis. But the Congress reflects the Nation; the Congress reflects generally, more or less, and thank God, not totally, the mood of many people in the country.

Now the reason that there's a disparity between the way that Congress reacts and the real mood of this country is because, for one thing, the 22 million black people in the Nation have never yet started to seriously think about the political role that they play in this crisis. I've talked with civil rights leader after civil rights leader, and they are all concerned almost to a man about the threat of a black-power militance and the rising tendency toward violence in the slums of America. And no one has understood yet that before you resort to violence, you've got to use and find, too, your political resources particularly in a democratic country.

Somehow, we've skipped over a very important aspect of the possibility of bringing black America into the mainstream of American life. And, perhaps, there is good reason for it. We've had, to me, a very unhappy history of Negro political leadership, to be perfectly frank with you. All too often, the Negro elected to public office is the pawn of some local power structure or the tail end of some political machine. And, if he represented anything, the one thing he didn't represent was the aspirations of the black community. If we'll be honest for a minute, we'll recognize it and you can be able to document it, chapter and verse, in every state of the Union where there are Negro-elected officials.

What I'm saying therefore is that we've got to begin to recognize the political importance and significance of black people, being "segregated" if you please, into the urban centers of America. Because, it's in this political power that's accumulating and has accumulated that I see the way out to our freedom, both civic, social, political, and economic. As I see it, and as Frederick Douglas saw it over 75 years ago, in this kind of situation that we find ourselves in, power yields only to power, and even then, not without a struggle And that's what you represent here. You represent the answer to all the people who would throw a Molotov cocktail. You represent the solution to the problem of 50% of the black youngsters in the urban cities and schools who never graduate from high school, who become the human dynamite year after year after year that builds up ready to go off in every major city. You here represent the common forces of reason and sanity and leadership in the Negro community.

But I'll tell you one thing, you're not going to get any more than you deserve if you're going to continue to beg. You're going to get exactly what beggers get. And, that's what's left, if anything. Now you've got a right to demand it. You've got a right to demand immediate participation on the part of the government and on the part of big business in this country if we want to continue our way of life in anything like the way it's been going on before, only a little more integrated.

It's up to us. And it means that you're going to have to think as citizen statesmen and operate politically. In 1964 out of 10 million eligible voters, 4 million of them didn't vote. I think we've got to change that. I think we've got to make ourselves politically aware and then translate all that has gone on in this very fine presentation into some ACTION. I'm very disappointed about the administration that I worked so hard for in 1964, that I supported 95 percent of the time, in what it has done about getting Negroes into business. It's absolutely disgraceful! And anybody who sits here thinking anything else, I think, is being misled or does not appreciate the facts. I'm willing to fight for it -- what are you willing to do?" Applause.

"Equity Capital: How to Operate an SBIC to Provide It"

Notes on a speech by James W. Howard, President, Meister Brau, Inc. former President of NASBIC (1963), the National Association of Small Business Investment Companies and a founder of Growth Capital, Cleveland Ohio. Presented at National Committee for Equal Participation in Business, Project Outreach of the National Business League, Washington, D. C. December 6, 1967

SBIC's Formation and Operation

Small Business Investment Corporations offer the best opportunity for assistance to small business because of their lending operations. SBIC's offer long term loans at low interest rates. A borrower cannot get this type of assistance from any other private lending corporation. In this respect they (SBIC's) are invaluable to small loan borrowers.

Composition of the Corporation

It is advisable to select as your partners and officials businessmen who have a variety of skills. The success of any business depends upon managerial competency. It is advisable therefore to select as SBIC officials a corporate lawyer to interpret Federal regulations and local laws governing the operations of the corporation; also a cost accountant to establish financial controls of the corporation and borrowers records; an investment banker to pass upon the soundness of your corporate investments and the business structure of your borrower's establishments. Above all you need a good manager of the corporation. The essential job of a manager is that of planning, working with and developing people. This is essential to the success of any business.

Set up specific goals for your corporation and follow them carefully. Also try to get executives in your corporation who have a variety of skills and who have some knowledge of various types of business establishments. Such individuals can better judge the soundness of business firms that apply for SBIC loans. Do not try to operate too fast and don't loan out all your money. Always keep a reserve or cushion for emergency purposes.

Lending Operations and Loan Policies

Obtain complete information about the people or firm to whom you loan money; learn their strength and their weaknesses.

In making your loan agreements, maintain certain restrictions and requirements which will permit you to step in and correct any flaws in the operations of your borrowers. Acquaint them with all new information about the kind of business in which they are engaged and advise them to contact or confer with members of SCORE or other experts. Make it mandatory that your borrower submit periodic reports on the status of his business. This is necessary to protect your loan equity in his business. This is also healthy for him.

Types of Borrowers

Corporate borrowers are safer than individual proprietors. In the case of death the delays of estate administration could be costly. With a corporation, it is easier to "reach" their asset reserves in the event they default in their payments.

Notes on speech by James W. Howard (cont'd)

Summary:

1. Select a good manager and other specialist - lawyer, accountant, investment banker as your partners in the loan business.

2. Leave a cushion or reserve fund for protection; don't lend out all your money at one time.

3. Know your borrowers: study their business structures and their operations. Don't lend money to a business with a poor manager. Assist your borrowers in the proper operation of their businesses.

4. During the loan period, place rigid restrictions on your investment money business enterprise.

12/6/67 2:30 p.m. - 4:30 p.m. - Report of the General Sessions - Assembly Room
Reports were made from Workshops C, B, and A by Bruce Llewellyn, Newton Downing and Matthew K. Clarke. Discussion of the reports focused upon the needs for new programs to fill the requirement of the indigenous populations of the ghetto to work and rehabilitate or renew the inner city, to work in, and control the jobs and the businesses involved in such urban renewal.

Discussion was then switched to the work of the General Session in passing upon the recommendations of Workshop A the organization of the local, National Advisory Equal Participation in Business Committee and the National Committee policy influencing work. Discussion of this was diffuse due to the varying interests of those present and the wide spectrum of the problem. Concern was expressed (by Howard Rogerson) that coordination should be established via high level communication with other efforts to relate to the minority entrepreneurs' interests. Garland Guice suggested that a small group meet to work out National Committee plans and program purposes more specifically and decide about committee structure.

A 12 person Steering Committee was selected by President Berkeley G. Burrell from persons present, and volunteers were requested for this Committee. Those selected to be invited to a Steering Committee meeting are as follows:

James Harkless	James Howard	(David E. Rice,
Richard Philbin	Mary Gardiner Jones	Matthew K. Clarke -
Bruce Llewellyn	William Dretzin	Staff coordinators)
Henry Miller	Cyril Tyson
Howard Rogerson	Berkeley G. Burrell
Edward Irons	Cleveland Chandler

RECOMMENDATIONS: A consensus of agreement existed to the following:

1. That the Committee be grouped in Steering Committees and Task-Force Sub-Committees

2. That present liason with the groups such as the Urban Coalition be continued and developed fully.

3. That a meeting of the National Committee be held on February 21, 1968.

4. That the Committee continue to serve as a national clearing-house for plans and discussions of economic development of the ghetto by indigenous businessmen.

5. That additional persons involved be identified and asked to membership and participation.

6. That the staff of Project Outreach serve under the direction of the Project Director as the staff of the National Committee.

POST-SCRIPT: SUBSEQUENT ACTION PLANS

Following the National Committee, the Project Outreach staff met and, after a critique of the meeting, produced a memorandum containing the following specific plans until February 1968.

1. That an all day National Committee meeting be held on February 21, 1968 in Washington.

2. That the National Committee meeting December 5-6 Workshop Reports and Proceedings be sent to all present at the meeting.

3. That the same, plus speeches of Burrell, Howard and Conyers be sent to the National Committee meeting list members who expressed a desire to be informed of the meeting.

4. That new contacts be developed by a mailing to new potential members from lists supplied by James Madison, The Urban Coalition and others. Major corporations will also be re-asked to membership and co-operation with Project Outreach.

5. That a Steering Committee meeting be held Thursday, January 4, 1968, and that staff plans for the February, 1968 meeting be presented at that time for confirmation by the Committee. That plans for an April meeting be projected also.

6. The staff will also:
   a. Identify groups and individuals contributing to ghetto economic development and concern to minority entrepreneurs.
   b. Invite them to use the National Committee meetings as a clearing-house.
   c. Attempt to fund a working staff exclusively for National Committee Programs by calling for large corporation support in terms of dollars.

WORKSHOP REPORTS

Workshop A Report

Topic: The National Committee, its Two-Fold Mission.

Chairman: James Madison, Director, Community Relations Service, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

Recorder: Cleveland Chandler, Assistant Professor, Morgan State College, NBL Economic Consultant.

Reporter: Matthew K. Clarke, Associate Director, Project Outreach, NBL.

Resources: Berkeley G. Burrell, President, NBL; Neal Krucoff, General Counsel, NBL; William Dretzin, Executive Secretary, Business Leadership Advisory Council, Office of Economic Opportunity.

1. Trainees: Discussion focused initially upon methods of achieving the stated goals for the National Committee as set out in the Outreach program specifically in providing Management Trainees to corporations. It was suggested that former military officers be recruited both as potential entrepreneurs for the new business the program is aiming to create, and for management trainee positions. Liason with the Urban League was suggested.

2. Militant Youth: The group advised the Outreach program to provide its services, morever, to all groups, regardless of religious or political affiliation or belief-whether "Black Militants" or "Black Muslims". The suggested emphasis to maintain, the group agreed, was provision of the skills and technical assistance that constitute access to economic opportunity in order to create a real and genuine alternative in an individual's set of career choices.

3. Miscellaneous opportunities existing in the service sector of the economy were recommended as potential sources of business opportunity. Cooperatives and other innovative business structures were suggested as means of seizing these opportunities. The bonding bind for minority contractors was brought up.

4. Effective Committee Members - Selection of Local Committee Members

The group consensus was that for insuring effective programs for Local Committees, the persons selected should be powerful in their communities - or if selected for their national prominence, should provide effective staff who could commit the company, organization, or agency.

5. Additional Tasks for Committees

It was specifically recommended that NBL Board Members, Officers, and Project Directors and National or Local Board Members add to their concern special efforts to achieve, not just representation of the minority on SBA Advisory Committees, which is the minimal goal of Outreach, but stronger representation of the minority entrepreneur on Federal (OEO) State and Mayoral Public Advisory Boards and Committees.

Criticism was voiced against members of such boards who do not report back to their constituencies the advance information that comes to them as Advisors. It was agreed that these members be encouraged to "report back" and aid minority businessmen to plan the future of their businesses and the overall future of their communities.

It was agreed further that the following recommendations be made to the Committee as a whole at the General Session to be held later in the day.

1. Structure: That the Committee be grouped into a Steering Committee and Task Force Subcommittees.

2. Specification of Mission: That a "White House type Conference" was not to be sought at this time but that the Committee aim to serve the function of a National clearinghouse at its meetings for plans and discussions concerning the economic development of the ghetto, just as this very meeting was functioning in Workshops B and C.

3. Further Resources: That additional persons who are performing this work be identified and asked to join the Committee.

4. Staff: That the Project staff, especially the Project Director be responsible for the staff work of the Committee and that a meeting be held on February 21, 1968.

"SBIC Utilization: Aspect of Ghediplan"

Henry Miller, Regional Vice President and National Secretary, NBL:
"NBL as vehicle for Economic Development. Example: NBL - SBIC or "CREED"." Valuable contributions were made by Anthony Stacio, Director of Economic Development, and James W. Howard, President, Meister Brau, Inc.

1. Garland Guice

Mr. Guice's talk centered around a Chicago Development Case Study referred to as "A Local Development Concept". Complete with visual aids, he explained how an active group of twenty-five businessmen and women, decided to do something about the economic plight and rampant unemployment in southside Chicago. After several starts and stops a plan was developed to produce mobile campers and trailers with the assistance of a businessman who was presently manufacturing them at a nearby location outside the city. The accompanying problems became insurmountable and the project was dropped. This took place in early 1966.

They were later informed that urban renewal land was available on the southside. This land, about five acres, adjoins, and has good access to the new Dan Ryan Expressway and is within two to four miles of highly concentrated residential areas. A recent CAP study shows that this area consists of approximately 770,000 people and experiences a staggering rate of unemployment; more than 10%.

A local development company has been organized on the community basis designated Inner City Development Company. In this endeavor they have been ably assisted by the Chicago Economic Development Agency, Small Business Administration and Redevelopment Land Agency. This local development company needs $1,070,000 to package this deal of acquiring land and constructing three light manufacturing factories built to specification. They presently have firm commitments from a box manufacturer and a pool table manufacturer. With reference to the raising of funds - SBA will commit itself to its prescribed maximum ($300,000). The LDC will raise 20% of the total amount required and an insurance company has promised to put up the balance.

SBA representatives present stated that they were very enthused about developments like these. It was pointed out that SBA can assist in more ways than the previous speaker had anticipated. Examples were cited as to ways that SBA can provide more than $300,000 maximum to the Chicago Local Development Company Project. The lease guarantee program will be of great help also the new "long term contingent liability" program which has started with a $7 million revolving fund which, because of its built in leverage, can stretch into over $100 million. The rate is geared to a fifteen year term and carries a 2.8% rate on minimum rental.

SBA's reaction is very favorable to shopping centers for core areas that have LDC participation because this allows for local participation.

2. Cyril D. Tyson

This talk centered around the implementation of the Ghediplan in New York. The key instruments are a) Link-Deposit - ensuring that the large sums of demand deposits of the City of New York are placed only in banks which are prepared to make loans to small minority businessmen, and b) purchasing power of city - ensuring that city's purchases reach a larger base of businessmen and to further try to localize these purchases, that is, direct the purchases of city agencies to suppliers in the communities serviced by these agencies. The above instruments are strengthened by the use of Local Development Companies, Small Business Investment Companies and Small Business Development Centers. The total inter-relationships work as follows: The cooperative banks are given the city deposits, the Small Business Development Centers screen applicants and assist in preparing their loan application and presentation. These applicants will then receive loans directly from the banks or from the SBIC directly or a combination of both. The LDC's working with both will also make funds available for projects that fall under their portfolio.

This program is already underway in that funds have been channeled to a Puerto Rican Bank with branches in NYC and Freedom Bank, a Negro owned and operated bank. These banks are making the kinds of loans conceived above. In the area of city purchases (markets) the following is taking place:

An Economic Development Commission is being set up to in effect police this and other programs. It will a) reorganize poverty programs to make them umbrella agencies so as to minimize the extension of bureaucracy; b) decentralization of school system which would also make the concentration of its purchasing power in the direct communities more feasable.

3. Henry Miller

Mr. Miller spoke of the NBL Building Foundation, Inc. This foundation is conceived as assisting in providing seed money for ghetto redevelopment in prescribed areas. The accent is on the modular core concept. He feels that a new building in the middle of an extremely blighted area will soon take on the appearance of the rest. Therefore he conceives developments that are larger and more complete in scope namely to have residence (lower and middle income), a cross section of businesses, and civic and social ammenities. This concept envisions the participation of the minority groups in total planning and execution of these these projects. This fund will have as its working partners local Development Companies and Small Business Investment Companies. He strongly warned against "fragmentation of purpose and diffusion of efforts".

"The Urban Development Foundation - NBL"

The discussion centered around subcontracting, franchises and the development of independently owned labor intensive manufacturing activities. One problem which is common to all areas, and which has evidenced itself in all efforts to develop these areas, is the unavailability of qualified Negroes. It was the consensus of the group that, while qualified people are not generally available, it is not too difficult to find qualifiable persons.

There are several effective ways to qualify personnel. One is to establish internship programs using in-plant facilities to compensate for the lack of experience necessary for efficient performance of specialist activities. It was also suggested that established companies might lend qualified personnel who would participate as members of an experienced cadre to start the new business and operate it until their understudys develop the skills required to assume full responsibility of their positions. It is evident that continual technical assistance must be available in such specified areas as marketing, product design, quality control, accounting, law, etc., until the new organization is capable of operating independently.

The second problem is insufficient capital. In certain areas, particularly that of subcontracting, every effort should be made to persuade the prime contractor to make progress payments as the work progresses and to have the prime contractor permit purchases of raw materials and supplies against his, the prime contractor's credit. In other areas of business, it may be possible to persuade a more liberal extension of trade credit where it is economically justified.

Joe Jackson, Humble Oil and Refining Company, informed us that EOL loans can be used to finance the purchase of their franchises only when the facility is new. When a station already in existence becomes available, its availability, in the majority of cases, cannot be anticipated and the time required to negotiate a loan is longer than the company can wait to dispose of the station.

I third problem which came to light is the inability of small contractors to get performance bonds. This is an extremely difficult area and immediate solutions are not on the horizon. Many contractors are not able to qualify solely on the basis of size and financial requirements. It was suggested that some effort should be made to guarantee performance in some ways other than going through established procedures for bonding.

There were a number of useful observations, notably, that in the experience of Humble Oil and Refining Company, the rate of turnover among Negro station owners is lower than that for Caucasians. It was noted that many small businesses in ghetto areas are closing bro because of the high incidence of pilferage and vandalism. Some of our large companies such as Kodak and Westinghouse are interested in doing something positive to improve the conditions of the ghetto areas by establishing labor intensive plants in ghetto areas and having them owned and operated by personnel living in the area. The NBL must develop the new concepts necessary to make projects of this type successful and find ways of convincing the interested concerns to incorporate the new ideas into their planning.

Dear Sir:

I ask your leave to intrude upon you for assistance with a research problem.

Mr. Robert Penn Warren has asked me to verify the Faulkner quotation bracketed in the enclosed photograph, and to find the exact page reference in Three Views of the Segregation Decisions. This latter is absolutely not available here at Yale; and Mr. C. Vann Woodward, who is familiar with it but has no copy, has suggested that I write to you.

I am assuming that your organization will have copies of this publication. If so, may I ask you to check the accuracy of the quotation, and to note the page(s) from which it is taken?

I will, of course, be happy to pay any research costs involved; and I have enclosed a stamped, addressed envelope for your convenience.

Thank you for your patience and cooperation.

Peter J. Conn

achievement of the imagination—the transliteration of values from an old context to a new, with a consequent freedom in action. As Gavin put it in Intruder in the Dust, "no man can cause more grief than that one clinging blindly to the views of his ancestors." But even if one should discard those views, he will, if pious, reverence those ancestors, even in their human failures. In other words, in piety itself there may be a deep tension and struggle, a struggle to convert the piety of the past into a piety of the future—a piety projected into the future.

We can read Faulkner's work as the record of such a struggle. This in two senses: it is the objective dramatization, through many situations and characters, of such a struggle; but it is also—as an artistic work always is, despite all the disguises and distortions of creation—a projection of the writer's experience. It is the work that makes Faulkner great, but we have another record of his experience in those statements he made in his role as a citizen of his native state. We know the ferocious love of place that made him hope for a solution of the South's problems by the South, and the ferocious pride of place that made him allegedly say, in an interview (Reporter, March 1956), that he might, in the face of outside interference, have to take a gun and shoot Negroes in the streets of Oxford. But he also wrote:

> We accept insult and contumely and the risk of violence because we will not sit quietly by and see our native land, the South, not just Mississippi, but all the South, wreck and ruin itself twice in less than a hundred years, over the Negro question.
> We speak now against the day when our Southern people who will resist to the last these inevitable changes in social relations, will, when they have been forced to accept what they at one time might have accepted with dignity and good will, will say, "Why didn't someone tell me this before? Tell us this in time?" [15]

We know how much Faulkner detested self-righteousness, glibness, easy solutions, easy virtuousness, abstract formulations. We can know from his work by what a difficult, tangled, and shadowy path he came to such a statement as the one above. The weight of struggle projected into the work gives authority to such a statement. Long ago Edmund Wilson, commenting on Intruder in the Dust, wrote: "I do not sympathize with the line of criticism which deplores Faulkner's obstinate persistence in submerging himself in the mentality of the community where he was born, for his chivalry, which constitutes his morality, is a part of his Southern heritage, and it appears in Faulkner's work as a force more humane and more positive than almost anything one can find in the work of even those writers of our more mechanized society who have set out to defend human rights." [16]

James Joyce went forth from Ireland to forge, as he put it, in the words of his hero Stephen Dedalus, the conscience of his race. Faulkner did a more difficult thing. To forge the conscience of his race, he stayed in his native spot and, in his soul, in vice and in virtue, re-enacted the history of that race.

Enclosed also are two older publications, Federal Programs to Promote Employment and Development in Rural Communities, and A Study

The latter publication contains a rather full bibliography from which you might wish to obtain other source materials.

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I was recently a speaker at an Institute on School Desegregation which Father Albert S. Foley of Spring Hill College sponsored in Birmingham, Alabama. He told me that the Southern Regional Council had been able to establish a library of about 200 paperbacks for either display or on a grant basis (I was not sure which) in the general area of school integration and intergroup understanding.

At the moment I am consultant to the Maryland State Department of Education in the special area of school desegregation. We are building a library of materials in this subject area for circulation throughout our 'reluctant' counties, and for use in at least two summer institutes that are being held in the State, and probably will also circulate it to other institutes as we hear about them. It occurred to me that it would be valuable if we could have either a complete set of your books, or the list of books. As usual, our funds for materials are very limited as we are operating under a Federal grant for which most money has been allocated to salaries, consultant fees, and participant stipends. Therefore, if the library of paperbacks could be donated to add to our resources, it would be a very significant contribution.

We would also be most appreciative if you could send us copies of your publications to be included in our State special resource library. The enclosed form letter explains in greater detail what we are trying to do. I am personally a subscriber to New South, and have found it most helpful in providing me with information and background.

Gentlemen:

The Maryland State Department of Education has received a federal grant to implement Title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, to help in orderly desegregation of schools. One aspect of this grant is to disseminate information about available materials which will aid school personnel in understanding this area. The amount for purchase of material is limited.

We would like to ask your cooperation in helping us establish a special library of outstanding resource material in the general intergroup/human-relations area. This would be a source for all Maryland school systems to utilize in selecting materials for purchase for their own school classrooms and libraries.

In addition, we plan, with the aid of the specialists in the State Department of Education, to select key materials and, using the federal grant as far as it will go, see that these are placed in strategic locations for administrators and teachers, and for in-class use.

We have been impressed by your publications listed on the attached sheet. Would it be possible for you to send us a free copy of each? Also, we would appreciate copies of any other publications on your list which would be related to the general area of our interests. Please send the books to me at the above address.

We would like to have this library in operation within a month, so we would appreciate an immediate response to our request.

Thank you very much for your contribution to a major area of social and educational need.

Dear Mildred:

A belated thank you for the six copies of "In Their Own Words" and a request for an additional twenty. The first six went like hot cakes and understandably so. I hope you are receiving paying orders for these because I have referred several of our readers to SRC with information as to cost. If there is a charge for the additional twenty, please feel free to bill the IUD in my name.

I've looked forward to visiting Atlanta again this summer-- I'll make it a must getting out to your home if I do.

Warmest regards.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

I know I am overdue in writing to you about your excellent pamphlet, "The Schools and the Courts" but I have spent very little time in the office since your letter arrived.

Your booklet is not the kind of pamphlet that we would send out helter skelter but we could use a supply to send to persons who submit an inquiry on this subject. I believe that we could easily use one hundred to one hundred and fifty copies in the next few months.

Just how do we go about getting a supply?

About a month ago you told us that you had a target date for publication of Schools in the South of June 15th, and I understand that you hoped to get a supply of these to us on or about July first. As we have now completed our initial mailing of the pamphlet, "Segregation and the Schools," which was a digest of the Ashmore report, we're now ready to go ahead with the follow-up mailing of your booklet.

We'd appreciate very much knowing when we might expect to have copies of the booklet. We could use 1750.

TUNE IN FOR "DOORWAY TO THE FUTURE"—ABC NETWORK
MONDAYS 9:30-10:00 P.M. (NEW YORK TIME)

DOORWAY
FUTURE!
ABC
A NEW RADIO SERIES

What is it?

"Doorway to the Future" is a 13-week series of radio programs designed to show, in dramatic form, some of the problems of the public schools and to suggest possible ways to solve those problems. Each dramatization centers around some phase of our schools such as textbooks, teachers, school boards, curriculum, goals of education.

When is it?

"Doorway to the Future" emanates from the New York studios of the American Broadcasting Company, which donates public service time for the series. The broadcasts originate 9:30-10:00 (Eastern Daylight Saving Time) every Monday night. Check your newspaper for time of broadcast over your local ABC station.

Who sponsors it?

The series is sponsored by the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools, a non-profit organization for school improvement. A grant from the Fund for the Republic has made the series possible.

How will it help?

- To arouse interest in school problems.
- To bring school problems into proper focus.
- To clarify the issues about our schools.
- To show people where they can get help in solving school problems.

How can you help?

- Urge local ABC stations to carry the series.
- Organize listening groups.
- Inform your local press.
- Get community groups to discuss the problems raised.
- Let the Commission know your comments.

BASIC PURPOSES OF THE COMMISSION

1. To help Americans realize how important our public schools are to our expanding democracy.
2. To arouse in each community the intelligence and will to improve our public schools.

The National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools is a non-profit corporation for the improvement of the public schools. Its formation was announced May, 1949, under a six-year charter. Its members are U.S. citizens not professionally identified with education, religion or politics. They reflect many different kinds of experience, serve as individuals and do not represent any organization or group. The Commission has received financial support from the Carnegie Corporation, the Fund for the Advancement of Education, the General Education Board, the New York Community Trust, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Your letters to Miss White and Mr. Toy arrived while they are out of the office and so they came to my attention.

I'm sure that Miss White will appreciate getting several copies of your pamphlet as soon as it's back from the printer. She will notify you about quantity on her return.

Right at the moment, we cannot lend you a copy of the recording on "The Negro and the Schools." The master tape is with the National Association of Educational Broadcasters, for review and we have only a single copy of the recording on hand. As soon as we get another copy, I'll send it along to you for review.

Thank you for your cooperation and let us know whenever we can be of service.

Frank Loescher, I believe, told me that you knew of a recording of a broadcast for the National Citizens Committee for the Public Schools, which is said to be some good. Loescher said if we needed more pressings of the record, particularly the one on segregation, we could doubtless get some pressings from the National Citizens Committee at cost.

Doesn't sound like our stuff, but I report.

Box 47

Dear Mr. Stapley:

The March issue of Citizens and their Schools says you will be working with local communities on schools problems, for the NSBA and presumably in conjunction with the NCCPS.

Problem in the South: how arrange representation of Negro citizenship at such local or statewide conferences?

I can offer you a new organizational resource, and do so. Our Southern Regional Council, ten years old in its own name and going back to 1919 through the former Commission on Interracial Cooperation, has lately helped bring into being in each of twelve Southern States voluntary race-relations agencies. They contain on their Boards or Executive Committees many of the leading personalities, white and Negro, in their states. Among their other purposes is the peaceful and early implementation of the decision of the Supreme Court on public school segregation.

Experience shows that it takes firmness, knowledge, and some lines of friendship to arrange fair and square representation of go-ahead opinion, white and Negro, on this matter in educational conferences in the South.

We would be happy to give you the addresses of our people in each of the States (Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Kentucky, Georgia, Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Florida, the Carolinas, and Virginia) where we have these new groups; and with your encouragement, I would write out to our people and ask them to be prepared to be helpful to your local representatives.

The Southern Regional Council has reorganized these new State groups mainly with the proceeds of a grant from the Fund for the Republic.

For some personal account of me, I refer you to your fellow Bloomingtonian, Miss Elizabeth Stein, at the High School

Please let me know as to this proposal.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

This is to acknowledge with thanks receipt of the tape, "The Negro and the Public Schools." It's arrival was most timely since we are on the eve of a Southwide conference for human relations personnel in the twelve Southern states. We plan to expose them to the tape, so that they may consider ways of using it in their programs.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

As you may know, our Commission has completed follow-up plans for use of our "Doorway to the Future" radio series. This follow-up includes the distribution of complete sets of tapes to each State Department of Education.

By placing the tapes in each state we have tried to bring them closer to persons on the community level who might use them in a variety of ways. Those ways are outlined in the inclosed brochure.

It occurs to me that one particular show, "The Negro and the Public Schools," might be of much help to you in your work. If you'd like to receive this tape, please let me know and we'll be glad to make it available to you from this office on a loan basis.

THE NATIONAL CITIZENS COMMISSION FOR THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS is a non-profit corporation dedicated to the belief that America's public schools are everyone's responsibility and that their continuing improvement is essential to our social, economic and moral strength. The Commission's formation was announced in May 1949. Its members are United States citizens of broad and varied interests, reflecting many different kinds of experience unrelated professionally to education, religion and politics. They serve as individuals rather than as representatives of any organization or group. The Commission has received financial support from the Carnegie Corporation, the Fund for the Advancement of Education, The Fund for the Republic, the General Education Board, the New York Community Trust, the Rockefeller Brothers Fund and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation.

Its goals are:

To help Americans realize how important their public schools are to our expanding democracy.

To arouse in each community the intelligence and will to improve its public schools.

The "Doorway to the Future" radio series was professionally written, directed and produced by Sherman Dryer Associates. It was made possible through the generous donation of network time by the American Broadcasting Company and a special financial grant to the Commission from The Fund for the Republic.

About "Doorway to the Future"

The doorway to America's future is the nation's public schools. These schools are more than physical structures of brick, wood, mortar and steel. They are buildings housing thousands of skilled and purposeful teachers and millions of growing youngsters who someday will become part of the community's adult life. These key developmental units in our society are administered by professional educators and managed by community citizens serving on boards of education. Therein lies the hope of America in the years to come; the challenge to you and you and you who would help bring that hope to fulfillment.

Late in July 1954, a 13-week radio program, broadcast coast-to-coast every Monday at 9:30 p.m. out of New York over the American Broadcasting Company network, came to a close. It was called "Doorway to the Future." It dramatized the real-life solutions which had been hammered out by citizens interested in the problems of their public schools.

It described overcrowded conditions in some of the schools, and related how groups of citizens banding together solved that problem....It reported the decisions reached by good teachers and good parents when faced with explosive problems of suspicion. . . . It examined the needs and obligations of school board membership . . . and depicted many other day-to-day cooperative activities to build better schools for America's youth. Because the series proved so helpful to citizens' committees in clarifying their school issues, and so interesting and eye-opening to the many community residents who had heretofore taken their public schools for granted, the National Citizens Commission recorded the programs on tapes and distributed them to convenient centers. The 13 tapes, together with the scripts, are available to all citizens or educators who seek practical guidance pointing up school issues facing their communities. They are available to you!

How to use the series

How many times has your school superintendent or school board chairman said: "I wish there was some way we could dramatize the problems our schools face in this town. That's the only way we'll ever get our citizens to listen." Now, some of those problems are dramatized and they are yours for the asking. Perhaps you are wondering just how these 25- to 30-minute real-life portrayals can be used to best advantage. Here are a few suggestions:

Open Public Meetings

Citizens' committees, PTA's and other school-improvement organizations, planning a mass rally for their schools, may find a "Doorway to the Future" show just the ticket for dramatizing what they are attempting to do, or what problems their local schools face.

The tapes can be used on a standard tape recording unit. It's a simple enough operation—just the same as playing any tape. Because the shows are fast-moving and complete with musical breaks, they're good attention-holders. A whole show takes only half an hour.

Committee Meetings

Any group launching a school survey can point up its need and value by introducing the appropriate "Doorway to the Future" tape at the initial committee meeting. It's a sure way of firing the group's interest.

Non-Commercial Radio

The tapes can be aired over any non-commercial radio station in your area to stimulate the interest of your community in its schools.

An Addition to the Speakers' Bureau

If your group provides speaking assistance to other groups, "Doorway to the Future" gives you 13 more strings to your bow. One of your committeemen (he doesn't have to be an experienced or professional speaker) can take along a tape to more than fit the problem and add variety to any meeting. With a carefully planned discussion guide, the show can team up to give the meeting an enthusiastic send-off.

For local or state conferences on education, these tapes are a natural. Recent legislation has provided for a White House Conference on Education, to be held next November and preceded by state-wide conferences. State and local conferences are sure to follow. "Doorway to the Future" can be used effectively to generate interest at the local, state or national level.

Classrooms

Instructors of graduate courses in educational administration, community sociology and related subjects may want to assess the help "Doorway to the Future" programs can extend in classrooms. The tapes can be used, too, on the high school level, especially in classes stressing citizenship and civic responsibility.

Scripts of Shows

In addition to the dramatizations on tapes, just as they were heard by hundreds of thousands of radio listeners, the shows are available in script form from any one of the commission offices. Have you thought of how they could be used? Well, here are a few possibilities:

Local Radio

Your local radio station manager might like to call in some community talent to give freshness and appeal to his programming. The professional scripts are a natural for him. All he has to do is add appropriate end-of-show or middle-of-show comments for his announcer and he has a brand-new local feature. (The recorded tapes themselves cannot be rebroadcast on commercially operated stations, because of union restrictions.) Why not explore this with him?

Local Stage

Your local theatrical group may be interested in producing a public-service show with a professional script like these. The scripts need only directions for stage scenery, exit and entrance cues which the director could easily build into them. Do you know a director who would like to know about these?

Local Television

Adaptable to stage, "Doorway" scripts are equally form-fitting for television. Again, special TV directions need to be inserted. Why not see what the manager of your TV station thinks of them?

Other Possibilities

Nobody knows your community as well as you do. Already you have probably figured out some other possible uses for "Doorway." Perhaps your schools can use the tapes or scripts directly, or perhaps your churches could. As is true with all the Commission's materials, you're welcome to use "Doorway to the Future" in any way you can with the single exception of rebroadcast over commercial stations.

How to obtain the series

Complete sets of the tapes are now on deposit at about 100 centers throughout our 48 states, one of which should be readily accessible to you. These centers include. . . .

What the "Doorway to the Future" Series Contains (order by title)

1. BRIDGE TO TOMORROW

The drama of the growth of America's free public schools is told with narration and short dramatic sequences, from early Colonial days to today.

2. THE OTHER PARENT

A new teacher learns that there are two sides to the career of teaching—the good and the bad. She decides on her future after much head-holding and-heart-searching.

3. MIGHTIER THAN THE SWORD

A grade school textbook explaining the tariff system sets off a family argument. This, in turn, precipitates a community study of the books being used in its public schools.

4. THE HOUSE THAT TALK BUILT

A mother—disturbed because her child, along with others, is suffering from overcrowded schools—decides to do something about it. Her actions lead to the formation of a citizens' committee and finally, with the whole town talking, to the erection of a new school.

5. CHALLENGE TO ACADEMIC FREEDOM

The freedom a teacher needs to teach—and a child to learn—is threatened when one conscientious teacher is attacked for discussing communism in class. At a town meeting the people have to decide whether they want their children taught what or how to think.

6. THE NEGRO AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The long search by Americans for the fair solution to the problem of segregated schools is traced, with the Supreme Court's history-making decision as a backdrop.

7. THE NEW MEMBER

A garage owner is appointed to the school board by a mayor who feels he owes him a political debt. Unwilling to be the mayor's rubber stamp, the new member proves to be a true public servant.

8. BOND ISSUE FOR CROSS RIVER

Seven persons in Cross River are affected by a proposal for a new school building. Some of them help defeat it. Unconvinced, one woman among them sparks a citizens' committee and it is this committee which finds out the "why" behind so many "No's" and submits a more acceptable solution.

9. THE BATTLE OF THE VALLEY

Three towns linked by a highway consolidate their schools, then find there are some serious roadblocks to harmony, particularly local pride. But a local newspaper editorial plants the idea of how this can be resolved for the good of everybody.

10. GOALS OF EDUCATION

A young man, disturbed because his fiancée is set on teaching school, overhears her discuss educational goals with his family. He comes to understand how exciting and challenging a career in education can be.

11. JIMMY VS. THE CURRICULUM

Seven-year-old Jimmy was known as "Dopey." When his family moves to another town, Jimmy and his parents discover that when the curriculum doesn't stand still, neither do the students.

12. SCHOOL FINANCE

George Simmons has his heart set on seeing a night ball game. When his wife vetoes the game and brings him instead to a school finance meeting, George finds school statistics more exciting than batting averages.

13. A COMMITTEE FOR LAKEVILLE

A local lawyer is dubious about the local school board's work. Instead of grousing, he takes the plunge, forms a citizens' committee and helps the board do a better job.

and here's a Plus Value

"The Fight for Better Schools," a 16mm. sound film, is stocked in each of the centers listed on page 7. It portrays the formation of a committee in Arlington, Va., that studies the schools and mobilizes to pass a bond issue.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

For some years now, we have been meeting with the Round Table of National Organizations, a group of some 45 national organizations which meets twice a year to discuss school problems and determine what can be done by each organization operating within the framework of its own bylaws to solve those problems.

One of the subjects for the spring meeting, which is to be held March 25-26 at Arden House, Harriman, New York, is the progress of desegregation. In order to report that progress, the members felt a panel discussion should be arranged for by the National Citizens Council, which serves as secretariat for the Round Table.

We have already lined up Don Shoemaker for a three-man panel and would like to have you for the second spot. Don, as you know, must limit himself to a factual summary of progress. He felt, and I agree, that you might particularize on the experiences of some school boards in desegregating. The third member of the panel could be a school superintendent who has dealt with the problem of desegregation, one way or another.

I'm enclosing the report of the fall meeting of the Round Table to give you an idea on how the meeting goes.

If you can participate, we would like to have you do so as our guest, which would include travel expenses. I'm hoping to hear you can.

Sincerely,

Henry Toy, Jr.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS ROUND TABLE

GOULD HOUSE ARDSLEY-ON-HUDSON, N.Y.

OCTOBER 1-2, 1956

Thirty-five representatives of twenty-eight organizations met for the ninth time since the founding of the Round Table in 1953. The meeting was held for the first time at Gould House, Ardsley-on-Hudson, New York. Main topics were discussion of follow-up activities concerning the White House Conference on Education, the Committee on Education Beyond the High School, and the National School Boards Association study commission. Roy E. Larsen served as moderator of the two-day meeting.

Teachers, Goals and Public Interest

Prior to the meeting, participants received the summary of the White House Conference and the report of the Conference committee for study. As decided at the spring meeting, discussion focussed on the questions of goals of the schools and how to get enough good teachers, as the questions applied to the field of public interest in schools.

Public Interest

Participants began with a general picture of what has been done to follow up the findings of the Conference and the committee. It was stated that nothing has so far appeared on the national scene as a concerted effort to pull together all the recommendations. However, individual national organizations have programs for follow-up. Three states -- Montana, New Hampshire and Idaho -- were mentioned as instances where the state WHC committee subsequently formed into a state citizens' committee to encourage local action. Missouri is holding six conferences in various regions. Another instance: the Great Books Foundation has instituted a discussion program throughout the country to encourage study of what the schools should accomplish. Local boards of education are encouraging local conferences on education. Several states, notably Wyoming, are planning for a second conference. And a few of those states will help coordinate local conferences as a forerunner of the state meetings.

The attitude of the press was cited as a barometer of increased public interest and understanding of school problems. It was pointed out that many newspapers now realize their readers are ahead of the press in recognizing the need and desire for more depth reporting.

Sign of the times was noted as the major emphasis political parties are placing on education as a national campaign issue. This was interpreted as an indication of public interest.

The United States Office of Education's follow-up program includes staffing for that specific purpose and continuance of an advisory committee of national organizations. The Conference recommendations for strengthening of the USOE are being studied and many are already in force. A fact sheet on follow-up activities is being issued to national organizations, a staff writer is preparing pamphlets on each of the WHC six questions for national organizations to mail out, a questionnaire on what national organizations are doing to follow-up the Conference is to be mailed.

Teachers

On the question of teachers, it was noted that there has been progress in the area of teacher salaries. Too, more students are entering teaching than ever before. More colleges are now preparing teachers, including those not formerly concerned. The prestige of teacher preparation appears to be lifting. Yale University, for example, is facing the problems of the teacher shortage, not only in terms of college teachers but also for elementary teachers. This new attitude ncesssitates a revamping of curriculum in many colleges.

Industry seeking engineers and scientists are realizing their former attitude of hiring teachers in those fields helped increase the shortage of science teachers, and they are facing the need for teachers as a high-priority item in filling future manpower needs. Industry is also interested in increasing the quality of teachers and, in some instances, is offering training.

Distribution of the WHC report and the committee findings disclosed that the USOE has sent out some twenty thousand on request. The National Citizens Council for Better Schools printed the Conference and committee findings and did a total distribution of some 180 thousand. It was suggested that the findings should be in the hands of the 300,000 board members of the country and that perhaps national organizations could help in further distribution. One note of caution was sounded and that pointed out that there are discrepancies between the Conference report and the committee report. It was felt that that fact might serve to confuse rather than enlighten boards of education dealing with specific problems.

It was also pointed out that each state made a report of its state conference and that those reports should get wider distribution throughout the individual states.

On teacher recruitment, it was noted that perhaps scholarships to teachers or other increments might be of more long-term value than scholarships to students. This is being done in some places at the secondary level. The question of working conditions was noted as figuring enormously in whether good people went into and stayed in the teaching field. Prestige and status of the profession were cited as two reasons for teachers leaving the classroom.

The Kiwanis program on teacher recruitment stresses the need for information about the profession for high school students who might consider teaching as a career. This local program encourages one-day clinics for students who meet with teachers and college people as a way to get factual information about the profession.

The New York state citizens' committee project was cited as another way of approaching teacher recruitment. That project entailed a questionnaire on teachers, which was answered by citizens' committees in over a hundred communities. The questionnaire went into such questions as salary, living conditions for teachers, whether teachers are made to feel part of the community. Subsequent activity is hoped to center around erasing some of the bad conditions on the local level. One thing this project underlined is the impossibility of generalizing about conditions for all communities.

Important as salary is, it was the consensus that the problem of the teacher shortage cannot be reduced solely to finance. Where public interest is high, it was further pointed out, teaching conditions and salaries are better, too.

Another ramification was mentioned and that is that the shortage is not equal among men and women. And salaries for women teachers are more in line with salaries of other professions for women. The differential between teachers' salaries and the salaries for all other professions, it was said, is closing. Some communities give increments to teachers with dependents, most of whom are men. Others are paying extra bonuses for extra work. Most others set a basic minimum but the maximum in many places is not high enough or the formula for attaining it does not work to retain teachers.

The question of merit increases was discussed without any definite conclusions. It was pointed out that the job of teaching is so complex that some new method for rating on a merit basis is needed. In any application of merit increases, it was stated, it would be easiest to identify the two extremes: those who should not be teaching at all and those who are obviously superior creative teachers. One general agreement was that teachers themselves should have a voice in any merit pay plan, but school boards and citizens' groups should work with them.

In order to inform the public more accurately, it was suggested the advertising, promotion and public interest campaigns should set out to tell the American people that more taxes will be needed for the schools. It was felt that this direct approach would bring forth a better public response.

On the question of the recent defeat of federal legislation for schools, it was noted that little public hue and cry met the defeat. Perhaps general information on legislation, both federal and state, should be one of the jobs of national organizations working for school improvement.

The fact that education is a matter of national concern was underlined by the WHC, although the conferees differed on the question of responsibility for financing education.

General summary of the first session showed that each national organization participating should operate within the framework of its own regulations and outlets to inform the public about the questions and to encourage local and state action.

Committee on Education Beyond the High School

Since Devereux C. Josephs, chairman of the Committee on Education Beyond the High School, was not able to attend the Round Table meeting, he authorized Roy Larsen, who is a member of the Committee, to make an informal report to the participants. Much of what Mr. Larsen was able to report was confidential and given only to bring the participants up-to-date. However, since many of the tentative decisions of the Committee had not been agreed upon as final, they cannot be reported here.

What Mr. Larsen emphasized was that Mr. Josephs and the Committee would like recommendations from national organizations on what the Committee could and should do that is not planned, and on the matter of lay participation, recommendations as to how far the Committee should go. Mr. Larsen pointed out that even though the situation in education beyond high school differs from primary and secondary education, the public is still an important element if all the problems are to be solved.

The new Committee is a direct outgrowth of the WHC which limited itself to a consideration of primary and secondary public school education. The new group is faced with the problem of studying all education beyond high school, not only the conventional four-year college, but all organized and unorganized instruction after the high school years. The President charged the Committee with studying the problems and laying them before the American people, as well as encouraging an active and systematic attack on the problems. The Committee is also supposed to make recommendations as to the responsibility of the federal government in the whole area.

Already, the numerical crisis is facing the colleges. In 1954, more than twice as many people were born as in 1934. Nearly 80% of the age group is going into high school now and some 30% are going on for some form of higher education. The percentage is closer to 50% in California, which may be an indication for the nation.

The Committee, composed of some 36 men and women, half of whom are educators, went into action last spring, has already met five times, and another meeting was scheduled for the Friday following Mr. Larsen's presentation. Four sub-committees are considering the demand for education, the resources to meet that demand, modifications and improvements required in present programs, and relation of the federal government to this area. Each sub-committee has a professional staff,many supplied by the American Council on Education, which has been helpful on research.

Mr. Larsen said that the new group has an opportunity to prevent the kind of crisis that hit the elementary and secondary schools. The projections appear to be accurate and there is a limited amount of time to get ready for the big tidal wave of students. The facts are clear to a few but the general public does not know them, nor are state and local leaders aware of the total picture.

The Committee is planning to hold a series of regional conferences between January and June to look at the whole picture from the point of view of regional emphasis and factors that differentiate it from the national picture. The question of possible state conferences is still undecided.

The Committee needs help in defining its scope and in ways to inform the public, said Mr. Larsen. In fact, he said, the group considers its first job one of disseminating information, which would lead to state and local action. Only if the public is totally involved, he said, would the job be done.

In the general discussion that followed, it was pointed out that the concept of higher education as an ivory tower is gone. However, the problem still differs from general public school improvement in that 40% of higher education is under private control.

It was pointed out that a committee to study higher education, appointed by President Truman, turned in an excellent report but it never got beyond the professional group.

It was also mentioned that, in order to meet the college teacher shortage of the future, we cannot postpone action now. Since most college teachers need a doctor's degree, eight years' training is necessary and the flood of enrollments will hit before then. This is also true of medical education.

The six-year high school is one phase of the question the Committee is studying closely. In some states, notably California, there have been great advances. This form of higher education puts the problem back in the hands of those working on secondary education, and, therefore, brings in the public.

Three subsidiary questions were posed for Mr. Larsen to carry to the Committee:

1. Is the new Committee going to consider everything beyond high school? Perhaps the areas should be those institutions granting degrees. More specific definition of the area to be considered is needed.

2. How can the two questions of economic privilege and the right to a higher education be resolved? Perhaps planned payments for higher education, even though an instrumentality of the government, might be worked out. This would not give grants to any specific institutions.

3. Will the Committee consider the question of maintaining enrollment ratios to ethnic numbers? This European concept might be re-introduced as numbers of applicants increase. Perhaps the Committee should examine the criteria for admission to higher institutions and recommend that they be based solely on merit.

Related to the third question was the observation that the University of Mississippi asks an applicant to submit letters of recommendation from three alumni. This raises the question of whether the Committee will consider segregation in its scope.

One opinion advanced was that there is greater public understanding of the problems of higher education than of the long-term needs of the elementary and secondary schools. A counter opinion was that there is a great reluctance on the part of private institutions to face up to the problems of expansion. Many are simply asking for money to pay current bills without any long-term planning.

The expansion of some smaller institutions will present the problem of sacrificing quality, although it was pointed out the expansion has already started without planning and there has been no noticeable decrease in quality.

On the WHC, the Round Table participants informed their constituents of pending legislation for the WHC committee. It was suggested that individual organizations might do the same thing for the new Committee.

NSBA STUDY COMMISSION

At the third general session, O.H. Roberts, Jr., former president of the National School Boards Association and now director of the Research and Development Project of the NSBA reported on the new study commission.

He prefaced his remarks by noting that between 1946 and 1956, laymen got excited, interested and informed about education and great progress was made in the solution of the problems.

The NSBA became a national organization in 1949. It is a federation of 45 state associations and through them reaches local boards of education.

By the beginning of 1956, the NSBA felt that a peak of interest in school problems had been reached and that its mission was to look at its own program and study the relationship of laymen and professionals to the problems of education. The result was a study project, financed by the Fund for the Advancement of Education, which is set up for one year.

The project will attempt to develop answers to some basic questions:

1. What is the responsibility of laymen and how do laymen fulfill that responsibility?
2. What is the responsibility of lay and professional groups organized to improve education and what are the techniques they use?
3. What is the responsibility of the NSBA and school boards and how can they best fulfill their responsibility?

The study commission is composed of 19 people and has met for one two-day session to limit the areas of study and help isolate methods. Thus far, the group has decided on the use of questionnaires, interviews with laymen and professionals, and conferences around the country as the best methods of operation.

In travelling around the country, Mr. Roberts noted these things that are concerning school improvement leaders:

1. The need for communications between laymen and professionals.
2. The difficulty of evaluation of education.
3. The question of how deeply laymen can be involved in matters of curricula. This question involves the relationship between school boards and superintendents. A sharper definition of roles is needed, with laymen concerned with the ends of education and the professionals concerned with the means.

4. The leadership role of school boards on the question of desegregation. What effect is desegregation having on the caliber and role of school boards? In some places, the moderates are being forced off boards. School boards associations must face up to this situation.

5. The public is not aware of the responsibility and dignity of school board membership. The climate needs development. Negative illustrations are too prevalent.

6. Not enough good materials are going into the hands of new board members. There is an annual turnover of between 75,000 and 90,000 school board members a year and in-service training is needed. Workshops for new members and good information materials should be made available.

7. There exist barriers to working cooperation among groups. Perhaps it would be a good idea for the boards and staffs of some major organizations, such as the National Education Association, the American Association of School Administrators, the Council of Chief State School Officers, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, the National School Boards Association and the National Citizens Council for Better Schools, to meet together on this problem and decide what could be done better in cooperation. This action might be an illustration of cooperation for communities.

8. There is a gap at the national level for an action group for school improvement.

9. Apathy of the public about the responsibility of board members is still high. One manifestation is the poor showing at school board elections.

10. More research is needed that does not duplicate existing research. Rather than original research, perhaps a translation and distribution of what has already been done is needed.

11. There is no service organization for state boards of education and, therefore, no communication between state and local boards. The need for such an organization should be investigated.

Following Mr. Roberts' presentation, it was suggested that the turnover of board members each year represented a great loss of interested, involved people, unless some effort were made to keep records on them, if only a listing. It was underlined that that group represents an important alumni of interested people and a listing of who they are should be available in order to furnish them with continuing, up-to-date information.

One participant suggested that the work plan did not include any investigation into the processes of selection of school board members of the need for voluntary effort to reach responsible leadership for board membership.

Mr. Roberts closed his presentation by asking for case histories -- successes and failures -- to illustrate lay-professional cooperation. With those, his group could pinpoint and publicize workable techniques.

Future of the Round Table

The last general session opened with a report from Max Birnbaum, chairman of the membership committee of the Round Table, who brought the group up-to-date on efforts to encourage full participation and to broaden the base of membership.

The secretariat had prepared and distributed a history of the Round Table, which went to former participants and to invitees. The membership committee met in June and authorized the secretariat to invite eight more organizations to this meeting. Three had accepted membership with one refusal and four either not answering or not giving a definite reply. It was decided to send those four organizations the report of this meeting and invite them to the spring meeting. It was also decided to invite six other organizations, agreed upon by the membership committee. Mr. Birnbaum pointed out that in inviting new members, the committee is maintaining the balance of types of organizations originally decided upon for the Round Table.

The secretariat is to invite Altrusa, Zonta, National Sales Executives Association, American Institute of Accountants, the Institute of Life Insurance and the Public Relations Society of America to the spring meeting, as well as the four organizations invited for the fall meeting.

It was agreed that the spring meeting should be held the end of March and that the secretariat should investigate free dates for both Gould House and Arden House during that period and membership preferences to determine the exact date and place to meet.

It was suggested that each participant keep the secretariat informed about its action on any topics of discussion, so that the secretariat could, in turn, inform other members of techniques and programs.

Following general discussion of agenda for the next meeting, a vote of the participants was taken on the suggestions offered. The three items chosen for the spring agenda are:

1. A report from Mr. Josephs on the Committee on Education Beyond the High School.
2. A panel discussion on the progress of desegregation.

3. A progress report and discussion on the NSBA project, as well as criteria for school board membership.

It was suggested that reports could be in the form of papers and that some material could be sent out in advance for study. The secretariat will handle mailing of materials in advance and invitation of guests for the panel discussion.

Dear Dr. Fleming:

It's been so long since we got your acceptance to be on the program for the spring meeting of the Round Table of National Organizations, March 25-26, at Arden House, Harriman, New York, that I hope you haven't forgotten our correspondence of last November.

I'm enclosing the agenda for the meeting and you'll note that the panel on desegregation is slated for the afternoon of the first day. With you will be Don Shoemaker and Dr. W. D. McClurkin.

Don will lead off with a factual presentation of the progress of desegregation. The roles that you and Dr. McClurkin will take are probably best worked out among you three. I've suggested to Don that he get in touch with you and let me know what's decided.

If the Southern Regional Council has any materials on this subject that you'd like me to send out to the participants beforehand, I'll be glad to do so. I'll need 50 copies.

Will you be taking the chartered bus from New York City the morning of the 25th?

In the event that we didn't make this perfectly clear to you before, I'd like to repeat that the secretariat will pay all your expenses connected with attending this meeting.

We're delighted that you can participate and I look forward to meeting you.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Perhaps you have already learned that the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools discontinued its operation, as scheduled, at the end of January, 1956. More important, however, is the announcement of the successor organization, the National Citizens Council for Better Schools.

The new Council begins its work to alert citizens to the problems of their schools with a roster of sixty-nine members - twelve coming from the Southern region. Twenty-three served as members of the Commission until expiration of its charter.

While the Council will continue some activities started by the Commission, the scope of the program will be determined by a broader membership of men and women experienced in solving school problems at the state and local level.

As the Southern Regional Director for the new Council, I approach this responsibility with humility but with a pledge of full cooperation to you and your associates in your efforts toward better schools.

I sincerely hope you will feel free to request the services of this office at any time you feel we can be of help to you in furthering citizen interest and understanding for better schools. I will work, under local direction, toward this goal.

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House will sponsor its sixth annual Conference on Civil Liberties at the Hotel 2400 here on Thursday and Friday, March 18 and 19. We hope that your organization will be represented at it.

Through these past six years of war and the threat of more war, an infection of fear, suspicion and hostility has spread through our government and into our whole community life. But there was encouragement in Chief Justice Warren's recent comment that "the sober second thought" of the American community, after the people have had time to investigate and consider, has always been for freedom of the mind and the conscience.

And there are indications now that, although attacks on these freedoms have been increasing, this "sober second thought" is beginning to develop in resistance to them. In spite of threats to liberty, there is a growing awareness that, in President Eisenhower's words, Americans can't live in fear of one another forever. More and more, our leaders and our national organizations are speaking up for freedom.

The Clearing House Conference will give the representatives of these organizations an opportunity to meet together again, to study the national problem of protecting our security while preserving and promoting our civil rights and liberties.

The Conference Program and registration form will be sent you shortly. If there are others in your organization who should receive them, will you send us their names? Meanwhile, we are inviting you now to reserve the Conference dates on your calendar.

Sincerely yours,

E. F. Adams

SOME REVISIONS IN THE REFUGEE RELIEF ACT AND THE IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY LAW

The Refugee Relief Act of 1954 became law 14 months ago, and although the figures listed in the State Department report reproduced below indicate large numbers of applications in various degrees of processing, only 11,316 out of the 209,000 authorized have been issued as of October 15, 1954.

	Italy	Greece	Netherlands	Germany	Austria	Far East	Total
1. Applicants notified of documents required	24,382	8,856	345	7,356	2,934	1,234	45,107
2. Qualified on Documents	17,916	2,963	244	2,325	415	448	24,311
3. Completed Investigations	13,005	2,893	173	176	120	191	16,558
4. Visas Issued	8,915	1,838	167	154	79	163	11,316
5. Visas Refused	935	830	6	56	84	184	2,095
6. Applicants in Process	14,532	6,188	172	7,146	2,771	887	31,696
7. Assurances received by Administrator	2,649	6,041	38	6,112	2,458	1,397	18,695
8. Assurances Verified and sent to Field	1,558	4,536	21	4,357	1,794	603	12,869

(All Figures Cumulative. Items 7 and 8 reflect principal aliens only.)

Various reasons have been advanced for the delay in the issuance of visas under the Act. In his semi-annual report submitted to the Congress in August of this year, Scott McLeod, Administrator of the program, cited as some of these reasons lack of funds for special agents, lack of consular personnel, and lack of cooperation from foreign governments. However, the ranking minority member of the House Judiciary Committee, Congressman Celler of New York, in a series of public statements has taken issue with Mr. McLeod's administration of the Refugee Program. In a letter addressed to Mr. McLeod on October 25, 1954, Mr. Celler pointed out that only 6% of the total authorized visas have been issued, and that at this rate of issuance only one-quarter of the number of visas allocated by Congress will be used. He termed these figures "shocking", and said that Congressional intent has been thwarted by administrative instructions and regulations. He concluded his letter with this statement: "All these factors combined testify most eloquently to a deliberate and so far successful attempt so to administer that law as to make it completely ineffective".

While the administration of the Act remains a matter of controversy, some of its provisions which were found unworkable caused Congress to pass amendments embodied in Public Law 751, approved by the President on August 31, 1954. The major amendment to the Act will make possible the use of available visa allocations for Greece, Italy and Holland on the basis of the number of applications for relatives of American citizens and refugees, rather than the number for these two categories specified in the Act. In Greece and Italy there are many more applications for relatives than for refugees, whereas in Holland the refugee applications outnumber the demand for the admission of relatives of American citizens. Out of the 60,000 visas authorized under the Act for Italy, 15,000 were allocated to relatives, but there are over 32,000 applications in this category and not quite as many in the refugee category. The amendments will permit a more efficient utilization of available visas.

Two other amendments will correct the difficulties in the adjustment of status of refugees already in the U. S., and the admission of orphans. An alien lawfully admitted to the U. S. as a nonimmigrant could have had his status changed under the Refugee Relief Act, but only if he were unable to return to his country of birth, nationality or last residence because of events which occurred subsequent to his arrival in the U. S. Public Law 751 eliminates the requirement that events subsequent to an alien's arrival made the return impossible. It also eliminates the requirement of a "certificate of readmission" in the case of orphans.

The Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 established a Joint Congressional Committee charged with the responsibility for reviewing the administration of the Act, and authorized to recommend whatever changes experience may indicate. The Committee, with Sen. Watkins of Utah as chairman, was appointed shortly after the Act was passed, but no staff was engaged and no functions have been performed by this Committee during the two years of the Act's administration.

The need for changes in the McCarran-Walter Act has become so apparent that its co-author, Congressman Francis Walter, sponsored a revision to admit petty offenders, which was approved on the last day of the 83rd Congress in the form of an addition to the bill for the non-quota admission of sheepherders (now Public Law 770.). During the debate on his proposal, Mr. Walter declared that in the past two years it has become apparent that United States consular officials abroad were excluding "entirely too many aliens on very technical grounds."

Further revisions of the McCarran-Walter Act will undoubtedly receive very serious consideration in the next Congress.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE SECURITY PROGRAM
SLATED FOR CONGRESSIONAL STUDY

Public hearings by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on possible revision of the federal employee security program are in the offing. The projected hearings will follow a number of recent developments which have kept the security program in the limelight. They include:

1) The recommendation by the American Assembly on October 10 that "a commission of outstanding citizens be appointed by the President to review the entire problem and to seek the development of new standards of loyalty-security determination." (The Assembly, meeting in Harriman, N. Y., considered at this session general federal personnel problems, and was composed of 65 members, many of them former or present Federal officials.)

The Assembly declared that "existing security procedures are doing serious damage to . . . government service" and called for action which would "re-assert basic American traditions of justice and fair play." They emphasized particularly the need for a central board of review for accused employees and the hardships created by suspension without pay pending hearings.

Among the questions to be considered by the proposed commission would be: (a) the development of more precise criteria in determining loyalty and security; (b) the proper organization of loyalty and security determination and in particular the proper role of the security officer; (c) the advisability of reimbursing an exonerated employee for the costs of his defense, or of providing free legal assistance to him; (d) how to create public understanding, and prevent political exploitation, of the loyalty-security issue.

2) The release by the Civil Service Commission on October 11 of figures for "security separations" from May 28, 1953, through June 30, 1954. The data revealed that there were 6,926 separations, and two breakdowns were given, with some employees being placed in more than one category:

Dismissed	2611	Subversion	1743
		Perversion	618
Resigned	4315	Convictions	2272

One interesting feature of these figures was the much greater proportion of resignations than in the first figures released last March (1086 firings, 1400 resignations). Civil Service officials admitted that some of those who resigned may have done so without knowledge of derogatory information in their file.

3) A demand by Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S.C.) ranking minority member of the Senate Civil Service Committee, that the Commission reveal how many of the separated employees had been hired by the Eisenhower Administration.

4) Announcement by Rep. Edward H. Rees (R., Kans.), chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, that a report by the Civil Service Commission on just what a "subversive" is under the security program is to be made to his committee.

5) Criticism of the entire security program as established by Executive Order #10450, and particular cirticism of the injection of security risk figures into the political area. Among organizational critics have been:

-- the American Veterans Committee, which characterized present procedures as detrimental to the overall security of the Nation and as subversive of American principles of fair play.

-- Americans for Democratic Action, which said in a letter to Civil Service Commission Chairman Young that the Commission should either reveal the actual number of Communists and Communist agents dismissed or "admit that you have no evidence of successful Communist infiltration into our government."

-- the American Civil Liberties Union, which asked that the precise number of "subversives" who had received hearings should be given. "A hearing is vitally important," the ACLU declared, "because it affords the only reliable test of the accuracy of a 'subversive' charge leveled against a government worker."

--Andrew E. Rice,
American Veterans Committee.

Even so, a number of bishops have faced considerable antagonism from vocal minorities of white parents when instituting integration in their own schools. For instance, in 1947, when the Archbishop of St. Louis, the Most Rev. Joseph E. Ritter, ordered integration of all the Catholic high schools -- all of the grammar schools and some of the secondary schools had been integrated for years -- a small but militant group of parents threatened to bring civil suit against him. All vocal opposition dissipated, however, when the Archbishop cited the canon law section providing excommunication in such cases.

When the Louisiana Legislature was readying its move to circumvent the Supreme Court decision last June and July, Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans led a strong and steady attack on the proposed legislation. But a number of prominent Catholic laymen issued a public statement condemning their bishop's stand. In the end, only two of the Catholic members of the State Senate voted against the segregation bills, which now go to the people in referendum.

Breakdown by States

Here is the state-by-state breakdown of the picture in parochial schools where segregation has been enforced by law in the public schools, as found in the N.C.W.C. survey:

Washington, D. C. -- Catholic schools integrated on all levels since 1949.

Arizona (one of the four 'local option' states) -- there has "always been Catholic educational integration."

Alabama -- Segregated on primary and secondary levels, although one Catholic college began admitting Negro undergraduates this term.

Arkansas -- The Bishop of Little Rock, whose diocese includes the whole state, announced in August that Catholic Negroes were to be admitted immediately to "White" schools where there were no schools especially for them. The goal of the diocese, he said, is that "No Catholic student is refused admission to a Catholic school on account of race or color." There had previously been one integrated Catholic girls' school.

Delaware -- All Catholic schools now accepting Negro students. Breakdown of segregation was initiated in 1950 when one Wilmington high school enrolled five colored boys.

Florida -- No integration.

Georgia -- Segregation.

Kansas (local option state) -- Catholic schools now all open. Last major change came in 1945 when admission of Negroes to a previously all-white Catholic high school in the Archdiocese of Kansas City was made mandatory.

Kentucky -- Law prohibiting integration on primary and secondary levels -- even in private schools -- still on books. At least five elementary schools in the Archdiocese of Louisville are now integrated, however, with every school "acting quietly and naturally on its own." All Catholic colleges and nurses' training schools in the state had previously eliminated race bars.

Louisiana -- School board of the Archdiocese of New Orleans praised the Supreme Court decision, but announced it would await the tribunal's directive on implementation before going ahead with integration in the grade and high schools. Dioceses of Lafayette and Alexandria presumably following the same course. Loyola University in New Orleans, and the girls' college of the Sacred Heart, Grand Coteau, have had Negro and White undergraduates for some time.

Maryland -- Prince Georges and Montgomery County schools, in the Washington archdiocese, are integrated, as are the Eastern Shore schools, in the Diocese of Wilmington. Schools in southern counties still segregated. No announcement from Archdiocese of Baltimore concerning the rest of the state, although recurrent reports in the daily press hold that Catholic schools in the city of Baltimore are being integrated.

Mississippi -- Segregation in both primary and secondary schools.

Missouri -- Integration on all Catholic educational levels.

New Mexico -- (local option). All schools of the Archdiocese of Santa Fe and the Diocese of Gallup have "always accepted the few Negroes applying."

North Carolina -- Integration mandatory in the five parochial schools of the Diocese of Raleigh as of this Fall, while requested, but not ordered, in the elementary schools. As a result segregated primary schools are now the exception rather than the rule.

Oklahoma -- Negroes admitted to all Catholic schools this term, with the five schools already in operation for the colored remaining open.

South Carolina -- Separate facilities on all levels with only one known exception: parochial school in Rock Hill enrolled five Negro and 26 white children this term.

Tennessee -- Parochial schools in Nashville integrated this Fall, while those in the rest of the state are maintaining segregated facilities this year.

Texas -- Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio climaxed a 12-year crusade against the "sin of racial segregation" by making integration mandatory on all educational levels in an order sent out last Spring. Some integration in the dioceses of Dallas-Forth Worth, Corpus Christi, Austin and Amarillo. The Galveston diocese, which includes Houston, is continuing segregation this year. No data available for western part of state in Diocese of El Paso.

Virginia -- Integration in the Catholic high schools of Richmond announced a fortnight before the Court ruling. By Fall, six to eight parochial schools in the northern counties near Washington were integrated, as well as two primary and one secondary school in Roanoke, four high schools in the Richmond area and one grade school in the Tidewater area.

West Virginia -- Integration was begun on all levels in the Diocese of Wheeling several years ago, and the policy has proved "completely successful." Two elementary and one high school just for Negroes remain in operation, however, and it will be left "to the Negro parents themselves to decide whether they shall be continued."

Wyoming -- Local option never used to invoke segregation in public school systems. All Catholic schools integrated also; diocesan school superintendent asserted he had "never heard of the (segregation) issue being raised."

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS GIVES THE STATE-BY-STATE STORY OF SCHOOL DESEGREGATION DEVELOPMENTS

A valuable contribution to public understanding of the adjustments which are necessary for communities in the Southern regions as a result of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision is being made by the Southern School News. Issued by the Southern Education Reporting Service, which has been established through the cooperation of group of southern newspaper editors and educators and the Fund for the Advancement of Education, the Southern School News aims to present accurate and unbiased information on developments in the District of Columbia and the 17 States whose school laws are affected by the decision.

In each issue, the paper will present the factual story of events as they occur and programs as they develop, State by State. Basic information comes from reports by 18 field correspondents, all of whom are working newspaper people -- in many cases the regular education writers on their papers.

Its aim is to help State and Local school administrators and other leaders in working out practical and constructive solutions to their own particular school problems by supplying them with full information about developments throughout the South and the border States, in the belief that while each community must work out its own problems on the basis of its own particular circumstances, every community can benefit by knowledge of experience elsewhere.

Distribution is made without charge -- but only upon request -- to State and local government officials, educators and libraries; to representatives of the various communications media, and to interested citizens. The National Civil Liberties Clearing House has distributed the first two issues among representatives of interested associated organizations. Further information can be had by writing the Southern School News, P. O. BOX 6156, Acklen Station, Nashville 5, Tennessee.

NEW LAWS IN THE INTERNAL SECURITY AREA -- A TABULATION

Eight of the 15 anti-subversive and internal security proposals submitted by the Administration were enacted into law during the closing days of the 83rd Congress. In addition, Congress passed three measures that the Administration did not request. The following is a summary of these new laws; the first five listed were in line with initial proposals by the President and the Attorney General for the facilitation of detection or conviction of subversives.

1) Death penalty or peacetime espionage, Public Law 777. Provides the death penalty for espionage in time of peace, and broadens the laws relating to sabotage by making them effective in times of national emergency as well as during war. This would apply especially to sabotage relating to germ and atomic warfare. Passed House July 8 by a 324-0 roll call vote; passed Senate August 16 by voice vote.

2) Extension of statute of limitations and withdrawal of pension benefits. P. L. 769. This extends the statute of limitations from three to five years in certain cases, in line with the Attorney General's request; it also includes a provision not requested by the Administration, denying pension benefits to employees who are convicted of felonies or who refuse to testify on grounds of self-incrimination. Passed Senate by a division vote; passed House by voice vote, August 18.

3) Bail jumping. P.L. 603. Makes bail-jumping in federal cases a separate criminal offense from the one for which a person was originally imprisoned; provides a penalty of $5,000 fine or five years imprisonment, or both. This was directed at Communist leaders jumping bail, and passed both Houses by voice vote.

4) Harboring fugitives. P.L. 602. Increases penalties for harboring fugitives, with the aim of keeping Communists from going underground. Passed both Houses by voice vote.

5) Immunity or forced testimony. P.L. 600. The Attorney General had asked for a law giving him the authority to grant immunity from prosecution in order to compel testimony (thus removing the right against self-incrimination provided for in the Fifth Amendment), but this law as passed places such authority in the courts, upon application by Congress or a representative of the Attorney General. It further provides that Congress notify the Attorney General of action taken; and the Attorney General may appear for or against an order to require a witness to testify. If a witness, after an order, refuses to testify, he is subject to contempt proceedings. He is also, moreover, still subject to prosecution for perjury. Passed House August 4, 293-55, and Senate August 11 by voice vote.

6) Loss of "nationality". P.L. 772. The Attorney General had also proposed a bill to deprive of their citizenship persons convicted of conspiring to overthrow the government. Congressman Francis E. Walter of Pennsylvania and the late Senator Pat McCarran both raised serious doubts as to the constitutionality of this measure. However, after the Senate amended the bill to apply only to persons who "willfully" performed an act to overthrow the government (thus eliminating persons who unwittingly joined subversive organizations), both the Senate and House accepted the measure by voice vote on August 18 and 19.

7) Registration of printing equipment. P.L. 557. Requires Communist-front or Communist-action groups to register their printing and duplicating equipment. Passed both Houses by voice vote.

8) Communist-Control Act. P.L. 637. As S. 3706, this was designed to outlaw the Communist Party and to prohibit members of Communist organizations from serving in certain representative capacities. The measure was passed in the form of an amendment to a bill denying legal privileges to "Communist-infiltrated" labor organizations (one of the Administration's proposals) finally approved after heated debate in both Houses, by a Senate vote of 79-0 and a House vote of 265-2 on August 19. Earlier, a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee had held hearings on 15 bills and resolutions aimed at outlawing the Communist Party. Attorney General Brownell testified against these bills on the grounds that (1) making Communist Party membership a criminal offense would interfere with the working of the Internal Security Act of 1952, which requires organizations advocating the overthrow of the government to register, since an individual would then be required to give self-incriminating evidence and could invoke the Fifth Amendment; and (2) it would drive the Communist Party movement underground, thus making FBI surveillance more difficult.

No bill to outlaw the Communist Party was reported out by any congressional committee, but Senator Hubert Humphrey managed to win Senate approval of a proposal making party membership a criminal offense. The conference committee, however, removed this provision from the bill. As finally passed, it outlaws the Communist Party or any of its antecedents as such, but does not contain specific penalties for Party membership; it makes them subject to the provisions and penalties of the Internal Security Act of 1950.

Under the Act's second section, collective bargaining and other rights are denied to labor unions found by the Subversive Activities Control Board to be Communist-infiltrated, or to have followed Communist policies or aided Communist objectives, within the previous three years.

Several measures proposed by the Administration were not adopted by the Congress. Legislation to legalize wire-tapped evidence as court-room evidence in national security cases was not acted on by the Senate. A bill authorizing the President to bar potential subversives from facilities vital to national defense failed to gain House approval. Another measure was designed to tighten requirements of the Foreign Registration Act of 1938. Nor was any action taken on the Brownell request for an amendment to perjury laws providing that proof of the contradictory nature of two statements made by an individual would alone support a perjury conviction.

Congressman Goodwin's statement continued, "The foundations have made an important contribution to our American life. I am satisfied that they have tried to protect our free American institutions and have generally used the vast sums of money available to them in a manner best to serve the public interest. The future of our Republic is in the hands of our educational institutions and our teachers. We must encourage American business and American families of large wealth to continue to give financial support to these foundations so that through their generosity education, medical and scientific research will be aided. Implementation of Supreme Court Decision
Studied by National Council of Negro Women

"Implementation of the Supreme Court Decision Outlawing Segregation in the Public Schools" was the topic of a meeting of officials of women's organizations called in mid-October by the National Council of Negro Women, at its Washington headquarters. Discussion was based on an analysis of Southern reaction to the decision, pro and con, and an outline for local inter-group prepared by the Council, which has also developed a suggested course on the function and administration of school boards for its members. Copies of these materials are available on request to the Council's office, 1318 Vermont Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C.

The Council's 19th Annual Convention will be held at the Departmental Auditorium, Department of Labor, November 8 - 13, with a program stressing work by women in international relations, social welfare, education, and the development of better economic opportunities.

Dear Friend:

Attached are peprints of two articles which may be of informational value to your organization.

"Who 'Collaborated' with Russia?", by Paul Willen, is reprinted from the current issue of the Antioch Review, whose editorial board chairman is Paul Bixler, secretary of the American Library Association's Intellectual Freedom Committee. It offers a timely reminder of the general attitude in this country during the war years, when it seemed possible that we might look forward to an eventually stable and peaceful world; and it places popular opinion of those days, and the post-war shattering of our illusions, in proper historical perspective.

The second article, "Communism: Threat to Voluntary Groups", comes from the American Jewish Committee's Committee Reporter. This outlines current Communist Party efforts to revive the united front approach which had some success before and during the war, and indicates the need for alertness to this development on the part of citizens' organizations.

A few extra copies of both articles are available from the Clearing House office on request.

Sincerely yours,

Many thanks for the list of people on the Clearing House mail list which you sent me. We will mail them some of our promotion literature and pamphlets along the way. I would also appreciate it if you would send us your general list so that we too might send them informational mailings.

Please excuse my long delay in acknowledging the receipt of the list but we have been in a bit of a hassle getting the state organizations going. I am off this week for an organizational job in the state of Florida which will take me some 1500 to 2000 miles through the hinterlands.

It was surely good to meet you when I was in Washington and hope to see you again before too long.

Dear Fred:

I'm glad you think the list of names I sent you will be of some use to the Southern Council.

That list was made up of key people whom I selected from our best mailing list, and I think you will find them eager to be of whatever help they can.

As for your suggestion that I send you our general mailing list, however, I am afraid that is impossible, for the Administrative Committee and the Clearing House long ago decided that our mail list itself was not to be given out to any agency. What we do is, when an organization has some particular piece of literature that they want to send to all of the Clearing House people, they ship it up here to our mailing service; it is then sent out by that office with a covering note from the Clearing House accompanying it; and the mail service bills the distributing agency direct for mailing costs and postage.

Any time you'd like to have us do this for you, we'll be more than glad to cooperate, you may be sure.

Spring ought to be fairly well on the way down in the Florida backwoods by now(since even up here the birds have started their Spring singing) and I do envy you a chance to see it beginning. But that's the nature-lover speaking; as a civil rights promoter, I'll just hope that you have a very profitable trip.

Sincerely,

Luncheon Chicago chapter of a.j.c. and

Dear George Mitchell:

Is there any possibility that you will be around these parts on Thursday, March 17? If there is, would you consider being one of our panelists at the opening session of our seventh annual Conference on Civil Liberties, at 2 o'clock that afternoon, when we take up the question of encouraging orderly compliance with the Supreme Court's school integration decision?

Our usual conference plan is to have an over-all view of a subject by an opening speaker, followed by seven-to-10 minute presentations on specific issues in that field by each member of a three-or-four person panel, which leads into questions and answers and general conference discussion.

Father Shean of the Catholic Committee of the South is to open the program on integration. Because of your extraordinary experience in community work, we'd like you to talk to the conference about helping the community in the implementation of the decision.

The program committee is inviting a police chief, a housing expert and a public school superintendent for panel talks covering their fields, as well.

The preliminary conference program will come to you in one of our regular mailings the first of next week. We expect to have close to 100 national organizations represented this year. And since most of them are deeply concerned with making school integration work, we think the Thursday afternoon program can make a real contribution to public understanding and acceptance.

We will all be tremendously proud and happy if you can manage to join us.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear George Mitchell:

Naturally we are all terribly sorry that you will not be able to be at our Conference yourself, but we are also grateful that you are sending Mrs. Hamilton and that you have suggested her for a place on our school integration panel.

I have written her about this, and look forward to meeting her.

I'm enclosing a copy of the letter we are sending to a selected group of organizations requesting material for distribution at our literature table, which we regard as a really outstanding part of the Clearing House conferences. I am sure that any material from the Southern Regional Council would be received with great interest, and hope that you'll undertake to send us whatever you think best, as the Literature Committee suggests in its invitation letter.

Since "Changing Patterns" is priced at fifty cents, I don't imagine you'd be inclined to hand out free copies of it; however, if you would want to give the conference a few free copies I will try to arrange it with Mrs. Steinbarger to have them featured in some sort of a display. I hope that when our conference time comes around next year, we'll be able to manage our calendars so that you can be with us.

Best personal regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Pass on to K.S.

March 24, 1955.

Mr. George Mitchell,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Ave., North East,
Atlanta 3, Georgia.

Dear George Mitchell:

Maggie Garrity has told me that you want 200 copies of our "Memo on School Integration," and I am sending them along to you under separate cover.

Am also attaching the Clearing House version of a bill, since I don't know what your office customs are in the line of requiring invoices, etc. (As a matter of fact I have never been certain just what an invoice is.)

We were terribly sorry you couldn't be at the conference-- I think you would have enjoyed it.

But we were grateful to you for sending Mrs. Hamilton, who did a very fine job on the integration panel.

I expect we can get out the conference report in a matter of two or three weeks, and in it I hope we can give extra full coverage to the school panel, which I thought did a really constructive job.

Best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Miss Baldinger:

May I tell you again how useful the recent Clearing House Conference was. And to the person who I'm sure was responsible for the smooth and efficient way in which the meeting was organized, my congratulations.

This note is to remind you of our wish for at least one hundred copies of the memo on school integration. If you will send these to us at your earliest convenience and bill us, we will be grateful.

Yours cordially,

Dear Friend:

The address on national security and individual freedom made by former Senator Harry P. Cain of the Subversive Activities Control Board at our annual Conference on Civil Liberties last month was inserted in the Congressional Record by Senator Hubert Humphrey, and has been reprinted. We are glad to send you the attached copy for your information. If your organization wants additional copies, we can arrange to supply them.

A full report on the Conference will be sent you later this month.

Meanwhile, because of the widespread current interest in this subject, and the many requests we have received for material on it, it will be helpful to the Clearing House informational program if we can develop a compilation of the opinions of national organizations which have had it under consideration.

If your organization has adopted any position, approved any statement or resolution, or conducted any research or study relating to

(A) The federal loyalty-security programs, or

(B) The establishment of an official commission to review the whole area of our Nation's security and of our individual liberties, and which you feel would be of informational value to other agencies, will you send copies of pertinent materials to this office for inclusion in our study?

With appreciation for your cooperation, I am,

Yours truly,

Mary Alice Baldinger

Dear Friend:

In accord with the Clearing House policy of cooperating with associated organizations which wish to call their materials to the attention of other groups, a copy of the Newsletter on Intellectual Freedom, issued by the Intellectual Freedom Committee of the American Library Association, is attached.

As indicated in its opening paragraphs, a grant from the Fund for the Republic now enables the Committee to distribute its publication on an expanded basis, and without charge.

At the request of Paul Bixler, secretary of the ALA's Committee and editor of the Newsletter, the Clearing House Administrative Committee has authorized distribution of one issue of the Newsletter for the information of those who receive Clearing House mailings. As you will note, if you wish to receive a free subscription for future issues, you may send a postcard or letterhead saying so to: Mr. Paul Bixler, Secretary, Intellectual Freedom Committee, American Library Association, Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Also enclosed, for your information, is a copy of Dr. Vannevar Bush's article, "To Make Our Security System Secure", which has been reprinted from the New York Times Magazine and made available to the Clearing House by the Fund for the Republic.

SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS WILL HOLD INQUIRY INTO THE PRESENT STATE OF INDIVIDUAL LIBERTIES

The first investigation to be taken by the Congress on whether the individual liberties guaranteed by the Constitution are being invaded as a result of present trends in our national life will be opened in the near future by the Senate Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, made up of Senator Thomas C. Hennings, chairman, and Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney and William Langer.

The subcommittee expects to undertake "a general examination of the Bill of Rights and proposed legislation affecting it, to determine the appropriateness of its present-day application, with special attention to matters of due process of law," and freedom of speech, press and assembly. Under the broad authority given it, it also expects to examine "the functions of the administrative agencies whose responsibilities particularly affect such rights."

The Senate voted $50,000 for the investigation on May 11. The subcommittee is a permanent unit of the Judiciary Committee. Formerly called the Civil Rights Subcommittee, in the past it has been generally inactive, without staff or funds. The new name has been given it as an indication that its scope goes well beyond matters solely of racial discrimination.

In a letter supporting the subcommittee's investigation, Senator Harley M. Kilgore, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, noted that "in recent years there have been sweeping changes in our economic and social life, largely resulting from technological advances at home and political threats from abroad," and said that the inquiry will seek to measure the impact of these changes on the basic rights of the individual.

SOME DEVELOPMENTS IN IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SUPREME COURT'S SCHOOL INTEGRATION DECISION

The South and the Court

It is notable that not a single school system has announced plans for desegregation or steps to be taken in September, other than those who have begun desegregation during the current school year. There are unmistakable signs that many school people in the south are giving attention to the subject and that citizens groups are forming in many places. It is equally clear that official action is being delayed, pending a further pronouncement from the Supreme Court on implementation.

The second reargument in the school cases, held the week of April 11, produced few surprises. The states argued that time is needed to implement the decision, that immediate action would in many cases be dangerous, and that a time limit is unwise. NAACP attorneys argued that Negro children are entitled to relief at present, that delay is unnecessary, and that a time limit is needed. They suggest September 1955 as the best final date, or, if necessary, September 1956. The Attorney General of the United States recommended a time limit but did not suggest what it would be.

In the District of Columbia case (Bolling v. Sharpe), the District argues that the desegregation program will be complete in September of 1955, that therefore the case is moot and no court order is needed. The District further argues that the option plan (under which many children have a choice of the school they are to attend) has no racial implications. Attorneys for Consolidated Parent Group argue that the plan depends on the good faith of its administrators, and that a court order is needed as permanent guarantee of unsegregated school operation. They also contend that the option plan leaves room for pressures which do have racial implications, and that full integration is not insured as long as it remains in force.

Administrative Reorganization

In the District of Columbia, interest in the school desegregation program has recently centered around plans to reorganize the administrative staff to achieve integration of school officers. Reassignment of top school officers on an integrated basis has been virtually completed.

The Board of Education has approved plans for the lower staff levels (covering directors and department heads) but assignment of individuals to particular jobs has not been completed. In a number of cases, one of a pair of officers is to be chosen as the top, the other as assistant. There has been no spelling out of criteria or procedures for making such selections. Pending final selection there is considerable feeling of competition and insecurity, and fear of discrimination, among school officers.

Teachers College

The future of the two teachers colleges is currently under consideration. Earlier administrative plans called for placing the merged college in a high school building. (Cardozo was suggested at one time). Recently Dr. Corning announced that use of a high school building was not found to be feasible next fall, but that the colleges would be merged while continuing to use the two campuses. The Board of Education has approved appointment of Dr. Walter Hager (President of Wilson Teachers College) as president of the merged institution, while Dr. Matthew Whitehead (President of Miner Teachers College) and Dr. Carr (Professor of Education at Wilson) have been designated as deans.

There has been no announcement of how the promised merger is to be carried out. It is not clear whether or not, or on what basis, reassignment of faculty, departments, and classes is to be made. It is therefore not possible to judge whether the colleges will in fact be effectively merged. Critics of the present plans believe that full integration and efficient operation cannot be achieved without relocation to a single site. The Strayer Report in 1948 found that both the Wilson and Miner buildings are inadequate to a satisfactory program.

P-TA's

The D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers and the Washington Congress of Parents and Teachers have recently announced plans for consolidation of all P-TA's into a single organization. The Washington Congress will dissolve after insuring that all its member organizations qualify for membership in the D. C. Congress and the national organization. Local P-TA's are now reviewing constitutions and by-laws to insure conformity with national standards.

Nearby Counties

In Montgomery County, Maryland, the County Council of P-TA's recently approved a resolution recommending school integration in September of 1955 or as soon thereafter as possible. The vote represented a victory for the pro-integration forces after months of study and debate.

The Board of Education recently entered into official discussion of integration at an open meeting. They approved two measures: first, as soon as legal barriers are removed, some sub-standard Negro schools are to be closed and their children integrated into nearby schools; second, as soon as legal barriers are removed, Negro high school children down-county will be permitted to apply for admission to the nearest school if they so choose. These steps have been criticized as partial and piecemeal, taken without reference to any county-wide plan for orderly desegregation.

Fairfax County, Virginia, was recently the site of some unpleasantness. A P-TA workshop on human relations was invaded and literally broken up by an organized group of pro-segregationists.

American Friends Service Committee.

The voluntary agencies had taken hope when announcement was made of Corsi's appointment. He was known as an expert in the immigration field whose philosophy was based on the need for bringing people in rather than the desirability of keeping people out. His new assignment was taken as a sign that the State Department was responding to public criticism, and would try to break up the log-jam which was holding back large numbers of refugees. The fact that he was designated as an adviser to Dulles, rather than an assistant to Scott McLeod, was interpreted to mean that McLeod's own role in the administration of the Act would be under scrutiny.

Listening to the stories of both sides in the Senate hearings, it was hard to sift out what actually happened. It seems to have been about like this: McLeod nominated Corsi along with several others as deputy administrator of the Refugee Relief Act, to administer the program under his supervision. Corsi's qualifications, known to Dulles, led to his being offered the job. Knowing the roadblocks which had been placed in the way of an effective program, Corsi refused to work under McLeod but talked Dulles into appointing him as a special adviser. In this capacity he took a trip to Europe and, cutting the red tape of usual administrative procedure, dug beneath the surface to see what was blocking the flow of refugees to the U. S. Breathing fire, he returned to Washington with recommendations for a far-reaching shakeup in personnel and organization.

While Corsi did not go so far as to propose McLeod's removal, his comments inevitably reflected on the competence of his administration. Corsi's hammer-and-tongs method of tackling the problem won the opposition of McLeod, who claimed that his "free wheeling" activities and criticisms had impaired staff morale. The issue eventually boiled down to a power struggle between the two men, and McLeod's status was sufficiently secure that he won out.

Although he lost his job, Corsi actually won a moral victory. He succeeded in making the State Department and Congress take seriously what had up to that time been a side issue. At the Senate hearings, McLeod admitted somewhat reluctantly that most of Corsi's recommendations were good ones, and that some of them were already being put into effect. The public furore led to an interview with Secretary Dulles by a committee of voluntary agency representatives. Here Dulles was informed of the factual basis of past criticisms of the program, much of which he had not known before. He assured the churchmen that every effort would be made to implement the Refugee Relief Act effectively.

The fact that there will be a new drive behind the effort to bring in refugees, places an urgent responsibility on church groups. If, after all the tumult and shouting, the voluntary agencies should not provide enough assurances to keep the newly unplugged pipeline filled to the brim, they would be open to justified criticism. Their role now is to provide the job and housing assurances that will keep the program moving.

Division of Public Relations,
National Lutheran Council.

HEARINGS ON THE BRICKER AMENDMENT ARE CONCLUDED BY SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE

Hearings on the Bricker Amendment to restrict the treaty-making power (S.F. Res. 1) began April 27, before the Standing Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Senator Kefauver is chairman of the subcommittee. Other members are Hennings, Daniel, Dirksen, and Langer.

The first speaker was Senator Hennings, who said that the hearings would be a waste of time and taxpayers' money; that the whole issue had been thoroughly debated on the Senate floor in January and February 1954; that no member of the subcommittee is going to change his position as a result of hearings. He said that the law does not contemplate the doing of a useless thing. However, his motion to postpone the hearings indefinitely lost. Senator Kefauver said that any Senator who had an amendment which he wished the subcommittee to consider would be given that courtesy. Senator Hennings then pleaded urgent business and left. He has attended no other meetings. Senator Langer has not been present at all.

Senator Bricker led off the testimony in favor of his amendment. He has been supported by a number of organizations and individuals, among them the Peace and Law Committee of the American Bar Association, Frank E. Holman, the D.A.R., the American Legion, VFW, Pro America, and Clarence Manion. Statements have been filed in support of the proposed amendment by the Defenders of the Constitution, the Christian Science Church, the Committee on Constitutional Government, and Gerald L. K. Smith.

Compromise Coming Up?

After some confusion as to whether he would or not, the Secretary of State testified against the amendment. However, he said that he agreed with President Eisenhower that they would not object to a simple amendment declaring that no treaty could be made in conflict with the Constitution. Senator Kefauver asked him if he thought such an amendment was necessary. He replied that it would not be necessary from a judicial or legal standpoint, but it might be necessary from a psychological standpoint, to reassure some people's fears. Senator Kefauver said he thinks it would be unfortunate to amend the Constitution every time there was hysteria or fear.

Other witnesses against the proposed amendment have been Attorney General Brownell, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Quincy Wright, Dana Converse Backus, Harrop Freeman of Cornell for the Friends Committee on National Legislation, the Minnesota Committee Against the Bricker Amendment, the League of Women Voters, Bethuel Webster, Philip Perlman, and Dean Griswold of Harvard. Statements have been filed by the Defense Department, the Board of World Peace of the Methodist Church, Judge John J. Parker, the New York State Bar Association, and Norman Thomas for the Post War World Council. The hearings were scheduled to conclude May 11. Other organizations which had asked to testify are being asked to submit written statements.

While the same individuals and organizations as last year are supporting the proposed amendment, they seem to have picked up few new supporters and no new arguments. The array of legal talent opposing the amendment seems to get more and more impressive. Present indications are that the subcommittee will not recommend the amendment; that the whole Judiciary committee will report a compromise along the lines of what the President has said he will not oppose; and that it will probably not get the necessary two-thirds majority. Several Senators who voted for the George substitute in February 1954 have been supplanted by others considered to be less favorable to any amendment.

United Nations.

COMBINED BILL FOR ALASKAN-HAWAIIAN
STATEHOOD IS SHELVED BY HOUSE

By a vote of 218 to 170, the House of Representatives on May 10 sidetracked the combined bill to bring both Hawaii and Alaska into the Union, by returning it to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

The immediate reaction was that this was a deathblow to Statehood for either during this session of Congress. However, Statehood supporters have not given up hope, and believe that there is still a possibility that individual bills might be brought up on the floor of the House.

When the issues were submitted separately, the House has previously voted three times to admit Hawaii to statehood, and once to admit Alaska. The Senate last year tied the two together in a combined bill, and approved statehood for both. The May 10 vote was the first time that this "single package" deal had come up before the House. The major roadblock to statehood for both appears to be President Eisenhower's firm but unspecific opposition to statehood for Alaska, and the Senate's refusal to consider statehood for one apart from statehood for the other.

Americans for Democratic Action.

In other words, the Constitution does permit an invasion if the authority to do so is exercised on a specific warrant issued for probable cause, and describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

The prohibition against general warrants has rich meaning in the light of the early American experience. In our Colonial history, general warrants (in the form of writs of assistance) were issued authorizing officers to enter, in their discretion, suspected places, and search for goods. Of this, James Otis, in 1761, said, "the worst instrument of arbitrary power, the most destructive of English liberty and the fundamental principle of law, that ever was found in an English law book" is this placing of "the liberty of every man in the hands of every petty officer."

The basic question is whether we can limit the direct invasion of one's privacy resulting from tapping wires by the provisions of the Fourth Amendment.

The police officer before tapping should be limited in this power the same way he is limited before searching one's home. He should be given only a warrant that is specific as to the names of places, persons, and things to be searched and seized.

In essence, the very nature of wiretapping is violative of the Fourth Amendment, because any order to tap in effect becomes a general warrant. The very dragnet feature of wiretapping makes it impossible to prescribe beforehand the limits of personal invasion.

Of course, this viewpoint was rejected by the Supreme Court as far back as 1928 in the now famous Olmstead Case. The Court held wiretap evidence was not violative of the Fourth Amendment.

In 1934, Congress passed a law (Section 605 of the Federal Communications Act) which prohibited anyone, unless authorized by the sender, to intercept a telephone message; and said further that no person shall divulge or publish the message or its substance to any person. The intent of Congress in passing this statute was considered by the Supreme Court in Nardone vs. U.S. when it said:

> "Congress may have thought it less important that some offenders should go unwhipped of justice than that officers should resort to methods deemed inconsistent with ethical standards and destructive of personal liberty. The same considerations may well have moved Congress to adopt Section 605 as evoked the guaranty against practices and procedures violative of privacy, embodied in the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Constitution."

However, since 1941, on the authority of a memorandum supplied by President Roosevelt, the Government has taken the view that the 1934 law does not prevent it from tapping if it does not divulge the information to anyone outside of government.

Hearings Highlight Security Areas that Need Study

The report of the Senate Government Operations Sub-Committee which recently terminated hearings on S. J. Res. 21, sponsored by Senators Hubert Humphrey and John Stennis, and providing for a Commission to inquire into the various security programs, is expected to be issued before the end of this month.

Testimony before the sub-committee, which was chaired by Senator Humphrey, highlighted the following points of study that could properly be handled by a Commission:

1) There is a growing need for the granting of hearing rights to applicants. Presently such a hearing is being granted to applicants by the Atomic Energy Commission. The need for the applicant to be confronted with derogatory information in his file is greater now because of the further uses his file might be put to, with the increasing extension of the security program to fields of work other than Government employment.

2) There is considerable feeling that the right to confront and cross-examine informants who are not F. B. I. agents or under-cover agents would help establish greater fairness, without harming our security.

3) Many feel there is a decisive need for centralized review authority to oversee the fairly autonomous work of security officials in the various agencies.

4) A number of witnesses expressed concern that the Employee Security Program was being indiscriminately extended to non-sensitive positions. Thisss could lead to real harm to our security because of the needless exhaustion of our investigative resources.

Defense Department Makes Two Changes

Meanwhile, there have been two significant recent changes in Defense Department practices. Early in May, the Department rescinded its requirement that college students enrolled in basic training courses of the Reserve Officers Training Corps swear that they were not members "of any organization listed by the Attorney General as 'subversive'", did not attend any meeting or social activity sponsored by these organizations, distribute their literature, or give them any other form of aid. The oath was dropped in favor of a positive affirmation of loyalty and allegiance and defense of the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, after the American Civil Liberties Union had written the Defense Department that the former requirement presented a danger both to education and to democracy, by giving the government control of "education and ideas and associations without that control having any reasonable relationship to national security."

The so-called "stool pigeon" question was dropped from the Defense Department's industrial security questionnaire, used in the civilian counterpart of the Federal employee loyalty program, in late April. An employee who answered "yes" to the question -- "Are you now associating with, or have you within the past five years associated with, any individuals, including relatives, who you know, or have reason to believe, are or have been members of any of the organizations (on the Attorney General's list) within the past five years?" -- was required to list the names of any friends or relatives he thought might be implicated.

This question was cited by former Senator Harry P. Cain of the Subversive Activities Control Board, in his speech at the Clearing House conference in March, as "establishing an informer system."

NOTES ABOUT ORGANIZATIONS

Study of Our Constitution and Guarantees of Freedom Is Program Suggestion of National Council of Catholic Women

The Committee on Legislation of the National Council of Catholic Women, in issuing program suggestions for the coming year, 1955-56, is suggesting to its affiliated groups study of the natural law, the American Constitution, Bill of Rights, and constitutional guarantees of freedom. This material will go to its 20 affiliated national organizations, 14 state groups, 93 archdiocesan and diocesan councils, and approximately 9400 local organizations.

In March, 1955, Monthly Message, the N. C. C. W. Committee on Legislation had a page devoted to the background and importance of jury duty in preserving human rights and freedoms. It also tabulated the States and Territories that require jury duty from all qualified persons and those that provide for voluntary or optional service by women, and noted that in Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and West Virginia women are still barred from jury service.

-- Irma Piepho,
National Council of Catholic Women.

Freedom Agenda -- A Going Concern

At the rate local Freedom Agenda projects are setting up committees and making plans for city-wide discussion groups, a good cross-section of the nation should be involved in discussing our basic constitutional liberties by next Fall. Some energetic communities have already completed their neighborhood discussion series. Other projects have been working for some time making plans, still others will make their preparations during the Summer months.

To get this grass-roots educational program underway, regional conferences were recently held in fourteen population centers scattered throughout the nation. Each conference was attended by representatives of many different organizations, with St. Louis topping the list with 67 organizational representatives.

Local chapters of the following organizations were represented at three or more of the conferences: Adult Education Assn., AAUN, AAUW, American Civil Liberties Union, American Friends Service Committee, American Library Association, B'nai B'rith (and its Anti-Defamation League, and B'nai B'rith Women), Catholic Daughters of America, Chamber of Commerce, CIO, DAR, Junior League, Girls Scouts, Hadassah, League of Women Voters, Methodist Church-Women's Division of Christian Service, National Conference of Christians and Jews, National Council of Churches - Department of United Church Women, National Council of Jewish Women, National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, PTA, and YWCA. Local public libraries were also represented at many conferences.

Most of the conferences had at least one or more participants who could describe projects which were well underway, including "pace-setter" communities such as Wellesley, Mass., Detroit, Michigan, Pasadena, Calif., Park Forest, Ill., Canton, Ohio, and New Orleans, La.

Detroit's careful and thorough plans for a community-wide project indicated what can be done in a large city. Cities such as Pasadena which have already suffered through an individual liberty crisis have found that their citizens were quite receptive to a FAP project. A project seemed equally appropriate for cities in areas where the very word "discussion" is controversial (Canton, Ohio), and in cities where the citizens consider themselves to have sane and normal attitudes toward individual liberty (Dayton, Ohio).

What They Did in Wellesley, Mass.

One of the best ways to see what can be in store for other communities is to take a look at how one of the "early starters" went about organizing its program:

February 24 was the "kick-off" of the Wellesley, Mass. discussion series. Between 400 and 500 people gathered at the Junior High School Auditorium to hear a short address by Saville R. Davis, American News Editor of the Christian Science Monitor. Afterwards the audience met in pre-formed groups in the classrooms of the school, each with a moderator, for a discussion of the Freedom Agenda pamphlet, "Freedom of Speech and Press," by Zechriah Chafee. Succeeding discussions were held in private homes at 2-week intervals and were based on other FAP pamphlets. These discussion groups had been organized in every precinct in the town in advance of the first meeting. The attendance stayed at approximately at the same level throughout the discussion series.

The weeks and months of organization and planning for this discussion series were handled by a project committee made up of 20 leading citizens of all ages, religions, professions, backgrounds and sections of town (6 women, 14 men). Sponsors were also chosen including 20 leading educators, clergy, and heads of organizations. A project subcommittee used voting lists and personal knowledge to set up discussions groups. Five or six key couples were asked in each precinct to organize groups. These in turn contacted 20-30 people each.

A sub-committee suggested for moderators a "pool" of names from personal knowledge. Out of this "pool", 30 were willing to serve, including scientists, economists, historians, philosophers, lawyers, businessmen, etc. One evening meeting was held for material, instructions and discussion of techniques and was led by a professional teacher of group dynamics at Tufts College.

Good publicity was given in local paper including an editorial front-page article and a picture of moderators the day the Forum opened; articles in the Christian Science Monitor; spot announcements on radio stations; posters in strategic spots throughout town; mimeographed announcement-invitations to over 50 organizations (also personal contacts) in town; reminders in church bulletins; announcements from pulpits; and a front-page advertisement in the local paper.

Deposits of Approximately $250,000 Are Now
On Hand for Loans to "Credit Squeeze" Victims

Approximately a quarter of a million dollars has been deposited with the Tri-State Bank of Memphis, Tenn., as a result of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's campaign to build the bank's deposits to enable it to expand its loans to Mississippi Negro farmers, home-owners, business and professional men who have been the victims of a "credit squeeze" by some white financial institutions in Mississippi. The credit cut-off, instituted against NAACP members and others in Mississippi because of their pressure for the right to vote and for compliance with the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling, had resulted in threats of mortgage foreclosures and denial of financing for agricultural and business projects. the NAACP's aim in appealing for deposits with Tri-State has been to provide a source of funds for loan to good credit resks who are victims of this economic pressure.

Observance of May 17 -- the date of the Supreme Court's historic decision outlawing public school segregation -- as "Freedom Day" is beginning this year on the decision's first anniversary, with celebration throughout the Nation by local units of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It is the organization's hope and belief that in the future observance of the date will grow to be nation-wide.

Community Project Emphasizes the Public Library As a Force for Preserving and Extending Freedom

In March of this year the National Council of Jewish Women, in cooperation with the Young Women's Christian Association, the United Church Women and the National Council of Negro Women, launched a community project to stimulate interest in and concern for the public library as a force for the preservation and extension of freedom. Three main activities are suggested:

1. To analyze and discuss the nature of intellectual freedom and "freedom to read" and their implications for democratic life in the United States.
2. To examine the way in which the public library contributes to the development of a free society.
3. To develop better understanding of the relationship of the library to the community as a whole with particular reference to what the community can do to build a more effective library program.

The objectives of the community program are: 1. To promote discussion in the community on freedom to reach and freedom of inquiry. 2. To spearhead a publicity program to increase knowledge about the library and to encourage its use. 3. To carry out a program of library improvement.

Support for the project by the American Library Association is expressed in the following statement made by Mr. David H. Clift, Executive Director: "EXTENDING INTELLECTUAL FREEDOM; THE ROLE OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY" proposes a community project that is both imaginative and practical. It aims at achieving a better understanding of intellectual freedom and a closer community relationship with the public library. Librarians will welcome this opportunity to work with the sponsoring organizations in a project which can have such real benefits. The American Library Association will be happy to give its enthusiastic support to the program."

A detailed description of the project is embodied in the pamphlet "EXTENDING INTELLECTUAL FREEDOM; THE ROLE OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY" available from the National Council of Jewish Women, Inc., 1 West 47th Street, New York 36, N. Y. Price 15¢.

Mr. George Mitchell,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Ave., N. E.,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear George Mitchell:

Do you remember the Memo on School Integration that Irene Osborne, Maggie Garrity, Phil Lerman and Olya Margolin did for the Clearing House? (I'm attaching a copy, in case you don't.)

Well, we have encountered a really surprising demand for it, with the result that the Fund for the Republic is financing a third reprinting.

This means that we will have another 1000 copies to distribute without charge. We are of course anxious to see them go where they can do the most good.

So if you could use any more (I believe you ordered 100 from our first printing, for which we had to charge people) please let me know, and I'll be glad to send down as many as you like, free. Or would you like to have some sent to any of your local offices? You were so helpful with good advice to us on preparing the thing, I want to see that you have first call on these extra copies.

All the best,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

A MEMO ON SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Steps in Implementing the Supreme Court's Decision

A MEMO ON SCHOOL INTEGRATION

"Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship.

". . . We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

-- From the Supreme Court's Decision of May 17, 1954.

* * * \

School authorities will do well to take leadership in building a constructive program of desegregation. The stable elements in the community will welcome such leadership and will give it whole-hearted support.

Establishing Policy

It is most important to establish a clear and concise policy, one which will be understandable to everyone. The policy should affirm the principle of non-discrimination in the conduct of school affairs. However it may be worded, the basic plan should specify that both pupil assignment and personnel handling should be carried out without regard to race. A statement of conviction is a sound idea. As an example of what one community has done, the policy statement of the District of Columbia Board of Education, adopted May 24, 1954, is here cited:

> In the light of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Bolling v. Sharpe, the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, believing it to be in the best interest of all citizens of the community of Washington, and necessary to the effective administration of an integrated system within the public schools, hereby adopts the following declaration of policy:
> 1. Appointments, transfers, preferments, promotions, ratings, or any other matters respecting the officers and employees of the Board shall be predicated solely upon merit and not upon race or color.
> 2. No pupil of the public schools shall be favored or discriminated against in any matter or in any manner respecting his or her relationship to the schools of the District of Columbia by reason of race or color.
> 3. Attendance of pupils residing within school boundaries, hereafter to be established, shall not be permitted at schools located beyond such boundaries, except for the most necessitous reasons or for the public convenience, and in no event for reasons related to the racial character of the school within the boundaries in which the pupil resides.
> 4. The Board believes that no record should be kept or maintained in respect to any pupil not enrolled in a public school on or prior to June 17, 1954, or in respect to any officer or employee not employed within the system on or prior to that date in which information is solicited or recorded relating to the color or race of any such person.
> 5. That the maximum efficient use shall be made of all physical facilities without regard to race or color.
> In support of the foregoing principles, which are believed to be cardinal, the Board will not hesitate to use its full powers. It is pledged to a complete and wholehearted pursuit of these objectives.
> We affirm our intention to secure the right of every child, within his own capacity, to the full, equal and impartial use of all school facilities, and the right of all qualified teachers to teach where needed within the school system. And finally, we ask the aid, cooperation and goodwill of all citizens and the help of the Almighty in holding to our stated purposes.

Pupil Assignment

In order to make desegregated pupil assignments, the city can be re-zoned on a geographic basis without reference to the race of the child. The new zones should be drawn in such a way as to make maximum use of facilities. Efficiency and economy will be the natural results. If racial prejudice or antagonism to integration are allowed to dictate school assignment, policy becomes difficult or impossible to enforce, placing school officials in an untenable position. For these reasons, a liberal transfer policy is unwise.

When boundary lines are drawn on a geographic basis, results will vary in different communities, depending on the pattern of housing. Where there is considerable residential segregation, it may be inevitable that some schools of only one race remain. On the other hand, the practice of gerrymandering may be used as a device to avoid integration. Citizens should be aware of this as a threat to a positive program.

Details will need specific planning in each community. In some cases there are inadequate school buildings which should be abandoned and pupils reassigned elsewhere. Where two schools are close together, they may be combined as one school, with lower grades in one building and upper grades in the other. Often there are special institutions which can be merged at once (e.g. teacherscollege, technical school, or facilities for the handicapped).

There are, of course, some school systems which do not use a plan of enforced districting, or which have secondary schools specialized on a curricular basis. Whatever system is used, the rules should apply without regard to race.

Staff Integration

Integration of teachers should take place along with integration of pupils. Teachers should be hired and promoted on the basis of merit, and placed according to the needs of the system, irrespective of the race of the teacher or the student. There are numerous instances of interracial staffs around the country, and many where the staffs were integrated along with pupil integration. Personnel-wise, it is the soundest policy, since it insures the best qualified person for each job. With the nation-wide shortage of teachers severe as it is, the South cannot adequately staff its schools without the services of Negro teachers. Staff integration is therefore indicated both for the needs of the schools and out of fairness to Negro teachers.

Meeting Opposition

One of the questions most often asked is how to handle cases of outright resistance, such as the student strikes which occurred in a few cities. The best answer is provided by the experience of cities which have met the problem. It is notable that in Baltimore and Washington, the strikes were short-lived and met with no success. In those cities, school officials, police and press took a firm stand against the demonstrations, reaffirming policy and opposing the tactics of the strikes. Social action, religious, and welfare groups organized quickly to defend the integration policy. This is in contrast to the story in Milford, Delaware, where the state authorities hesitated and backed down, and no community organizations came to the rescue. The result was a long period of trouble. The lesson is clear that success depends on a firm and positive stand.

Public Relations

School authorities should give special attention to public relations at the time of desegregation. To do a good reporting job, press representatives need ample factual material as well as some interpretation of what the schools are trying to do.

A school administrator who does a careful and honest job of working with the press will find that it pays dividends in terms of public understanding and good will.

The school program should likewise be interpreted to city officials, police, and leading community agencies. Conferences with the chief of police are particularly advised, so that the police will be fully aware of a responsibility to act impartially and in the interest of law and order at all times.

CITIZENS CAN HELP

Part of the American belief is the right of every child to an education, an education which will meet his needs as a person and which will be available to him regardless of his financial resources. Out of this belief grew our public and private school systems. Our money has built and maintained our schools. Our money and time must still be given if we wish to continue a solid program of education. The schools are ours, and the responsibility of keeping the schools is ours.

Today more than ever before it behooves us to make known our interest to our local and state officials so they can discharge honorably the responsibilities with which we, the citizens, have entrusted to them. They cannot know our desires unless we tell them what we want.

We must have now a positive program of study and action to safeguard our schools and to insure an orderly transition period from segregation to de-segregation - a transition period which will be a pleasant experience for our children and not one which will be harmful to them.

This is not the goal of just one or two or a few of us. This is the goal of almost everyone in every community. It needs serious consideration. Talk to your friends, your neighbors. Their interest in preserving the schools is the same as yours. See to it that your voices are heard. You make up the bulk of your community. Now your voice must be heard if your community and your schools are to serve their true purpose.

To be heard you must talk together, meet together, learn together how your schools and community are managed. You will want to become better acquainted with your community and the people who make up your community: work with the organized segments of your hometown. Learn with the churches, the synagogues, the schools, the civic clubs, the community centers, the professional associations and fraternal organizations what your major school problems are.

Study the strengths and weaknesses of your school system. Discover how the system is organized and financed. What is the employment status, the tenure and the qualifications of Negro and white teachers? What is the proportion of Negro and white teachers? Of Negro and white students? What are your school boundary lines and how are they determined? Are the citizens kept informed of the planning of the school board? Are Negro and white teachers meeting separately or together to work out their problems?

Learn the practice and policy of other state and city organizations, e.g. libraries, hospitals, employment offices, colleges and universities. What is the official attitude and practice of church groups, civic associations and other institutions in your community in regard to desegregation?

After you have acquired the factual information which bears on a program of desegregation, talk with your responsible officials so that together you can arrange an orderly desegregation of the schools. Be prepared to make some recommendations about how the process should be carried out. Urge other outstanding citizens in your area to do likewise. Encourage the organizations already established to do the same. Work with the press, so they can help to build an informed citizenry. Encourage widening segments of the community to give serious thought to the subject.

AND IN CONCLUSION

What, then, do we know about the job ahead of us? What guideposts are available to give the citizen a sense of sureness about what he is doing? By way of summary, we offer here a few of the conclusions which emerge from the record of experience.

1. Experience in desegregation of schools has been extensive in recent years, demonstrating that the job can be successfully accomplished, contributing to better schools and more democratic communities.

2. Desegregation should begin with official adoption and announcement of a policy of non-discrimination, affecting both pupil assignment and personnel action.

3. Opposition can be effectively met by a firm and positive stand. Constructive elements of the community can and should be organized in support of a forthright policy.

4. Desegregation is a responsibility not only of school officials, but of all citizens who have an interest in a good school program.

5. Citizens can help by taking the lead in study and planning, by making their views known to the public and to the responsible officials.

6. In every community, there are resources that can be tapped for help in doing the job, resources in terms of people, organizations, and specialized services.

7. Problems do not solve themselves. People solve problems. In the words of Arnold Toynbee, "We cannot just fold our hands and let history rip." The problems we are facing are, in fact, human problems which human beings can and will solve.

Those who believe in the American concept that all men are created equal and therefore entitled to equal protection of the laws should now assume their citizenship responsibilities by actively participating in the implementation of the Supreme Court Decision -- the law of the land. The economic, political and social wellbeing of our nation and its communities depends on an intelligent and informed citizenry. An adequate education for all children is, therefore, essential. Those who have faith in our Nation and its people welcome the opportunity to take a step forward in democratic living.

Dear George:

The Program Committee for our next Spring's conference on Civil liberties has asked me to thank you again, in their behalf, for your suggestions about Southern clergymen who might come to speak to us then. They intend to be guided entirely by your comments.

If anyone else comes into your head as a possible speaker, could you drop me a note about him?

I assume you get The Progressive, and have seen the good piece on your work by Vic Reinemer in the December issue.

But in the light of what you have been through of late, I imagine you will take considerable issue (as I do) with Murray Kempton's "Lost-- One Scapegoat," in which he holds that the "new American Right" is a fading flower and that we are all cozily nestled together and rotting away in a dull and mediocre "dead center." I can't think that you feel either cozy or dull. My own theory is that the real depth of public acceptance of the ultra-reactionary theories that have dripped down from the top is just beginning to be seen. Mrs. Lee of the League of Women Voters is going to talk at the December 14 Clearing House meeting about the cevelcping pattern in attacks on private organizations. I think it ought to be pretty interesting.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

To: Organizational Officers and Staff Members

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House invites you to attend its eighth annual CONFERENCE ON CIVIL LIBERTIES, which will be held on Thursday and Friday, March 22 and 23. The place will again be the Hotel 2400 in Washington.

Though 1955 brought an easing-off of some of the assaults that our constitutional liberties have suffered in recent years, it also brought the development of new attacks on freedom -- some of them subtle, some of them blatantly open and aggressive.

The Clearing House conferences offer associated organizations and other invited groups a yearly opportunity to come together for a wide-scale re-appraisal of the status of our individual rights and liberties, and of the problems that lie ahead as well as those we face today.

Eighty-nine agencies indicated their interest in the information-sharing program of the Clearing House on these issues by representation at our 1955 conference. We believe that this year's conference will bring together an even larger roster of outstanding organizations that feel the need for joint consideration of the protection of our constitutional guarantees of individual dignity and liberty, and for mutual inter-change and consultation.

The conference program and registration form will be sent you shortly. If there are others in your organization who should receive them, will you send us their names? Meanwhile, we hope that you will note and reserve the conference dates on your calendar.

Yours sincerely,

(Co-Chairmen, Conference Program Committee)

To: Organizational Officer and Staff Members

Dear Friend:

We hope that your organization will be represented at the eighth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, to be held by the National Civil Liberties Clearing House at the Hotel 2400 in Washington on Thursday and Friday, March 22 and 23.

The program for the conference will be sent you shortly. Meanwhile, we are happy to say that among those who will be participating as speakers or panelists are: William F. Schnitzler, secretary-treasurer, AFL-CIO; Dr. Emanuel Piore, noted physicist; Alfred Friendly, managing editor of The Washington Post and Times Herald; Dr. Marie Jahoda of New York University's Research Center for Human Relations; Dr. Carl R. Pritchett of the Bethesda Presbyterian Church, former pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Anderson, S. C. -- along with a number of officers of organizations associated in the Clearing House.

Because community interest in issues of civil rights and liberties is increasing so rapidly, a number of organizations have already informed the Clearing House that they intend to invite members of their national boards, or representatives of their locals or chapters, to attend the conference in addition to their staff people.

For the convenience of these groups, and others which may also wish to select and register their representatives now, an advance registration form is attached.

The Clearing House conferences are open to associated organizations and other invited agencies and individuals. The office will send you extra registration froms on request. Or, if you wish to have conference invitations and forms go direct to other staff people or members of your organization, please send their names and addresses to the Clearing House office, which will be glad to comply.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Fred Routh:

Since you're on our regular mail list, you will be getting a copy of the program for our conference, etc., through our mailing service, but I thought you might like to have a couple of extra copies; hence the enclosed.

You will note that no opening speaker is listed for the civil rights panel session. This is because the program committee was put in a hole by the Justice Department, which took two months to decide that they cannot make any public statements about the department's responsibilities in relation to civil rights. (Did you ever hear such nonsense?)

So , since we had to getthe program out, we went ahead without anyone in this spot. However, it will be filled before the conference -- I rather think by Congressman Kenneth Keating, the top Republican on the House Judiciary Committee. (Although personally, it seems to me that that panel is such a beauty that we could perfectly well get along without any official spokesman.) But I wanted you to have this explanatory note in case you might feel that you were being listed for a lot more than you had agreed to.

I hope that the title, Community Opinion and the Schools, is agreeable to you. Maggie Garrity (who sends you her best regards) and I figured that it would be purely impossible for you to talk about work in the communities without going into the school situations, so that was how we hit on it.

You will be getting any number of notes from me within the next two weeks. I hope they will be typed better than this one. And I'm looking forward tremendously to seeing you again and hearing you, too.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Miss Baldinger,

Your letter to Dr. George Mitchell concerning display material of civil rights literature has been referred to me. We are sending you, under separate cover, 150 copies of each of an issue of our magazine, New South; our publications list; and our promotion pamphlet on our publication Changing Patterns in the New South. We appreciate the opportunity to get some of our literature before the public through your organization.

Sincerely,

Mr. George Mitchell
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Ave., N.E.,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House is now completing plans for its eighth national Conference on Civil Liberties, to be held here March 22 and 23.

Arrangements are being made for display and distribution at the Conference of key pieces of literature in the areas of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, international human rights, and related issues. We understand that your organization has issued some excellent materials, and we'd like to know whether you would like to have any of them brought to the attention of our conferees.

If so, we will appreciate your sending a maximum of 150 copies each of cost-free literature. We will not be able to undertake distribution of material for which a charge must be collected. However, if you have bibliographies of the publications you offer for sale, we will be glad to include these with the other literature.

We ask that your pertinent material be mailed so as to arrive on or before March 15, to --

National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.

Many people commented on the helpfulness of the interesting variety of literature presented at our 1955 Conference. We are glad to be of service in bringing your materials to the attention of this wide inter-organizational audience.

With gratitude for your cooperation,

Sincerely,
Edward F. Snyder

Dear Fred:

It was very nice to hear from you & I must admit I've been a little negligent in letter writing.

Actually New York, is New York is New York (as you well know) I must admit I haven't been doing too much outside of entertaining & being entertained by Insurance people. But I have somehow in a few cocktail parties on the side. One of them was very interesting, it was given by Alec Waugh (the author recently written up about 6 times in the New Yorker) who is a cousin of one of the other members of our group. Met quite a few authors & hangerons & must say their bohemian existance is intriguing (to a point)

I'm sharing an apartment with two others of the group, which over-looks the east river,
It's fairly large + has a terrific view but then it costs $150.00
a month.
I'm afraid I still haven't been even close to financial stability but I assure you I will comply as soon as possible.
It sounds as if you have a very terrific place + I'm sure the gin + tonics are much more delicious with the new atmosphere. Please excuse my handwriting as I'm laying on the bed writing this.
Hope this finds you well
+ in good spirits, (its been a long time since I have qualified for the above) as ever
Bob

Dear Fred —

Thank you for agreeing to take part in the program at our Conference on Civil Liberties.

The program participants for the session on equality under law should meet a little before that part of the conference begins to talk over their presentations.

This meeting will be held in the rear section of the Palm Room at the Hotel 2400 at 1:45 o'clock on Thursday March 22.

I will look forward to seeing you at that time. It will help if you can be there promptly.

Also I'd appreciate your advice on these two questions :

1) Will we have any advance copies of your remarks for press use?

2) May we have any pertinent data for our chairman's use in introducing you ?

The Eighth Annual

National Civil Liberties Clearing House

Conference on Civil Liberties

MARCH 22 AND 23, 1956

Hotel 2400 Washington, D. C.

The Eighth Conference on Civil Liberties

The early days of 1956 threw a clear light on one sure lesson—that the vigilant defense of constitutional rights and freedoms is a continuing necessity.

There are wide contrasts today in the two basic areas of civil liberties and civil rights. The scales go up on one side, down on the other.

On the national level at least, there is strong evidence of the onset of a sober scrutiny of the present status of our historic concepts of due process of law. With the courts taking the lead, with conservatives and liberals joining together, with great national organizations speaking their convictions, there is a definite and steady re-assertion of the principles of liberty and justice that are the foundation of our democracy.

The question is, how deeply has our national philosophy been penetrated by the fear-inspired excesses of these years of the Cold War? To what extent has the urge for conformity altered the pattern of American thought? Will our States, our communities, our institutions, reflect our leaders' renascent concern for civil liberties?

And what of the other side of the coin—the citizen's right to live on a basis of equality in his country and in his neighborhood, without discrimination because of his race, his color, or his religion? If the return to respect for the law and the Constitution in matters of individual freedom has developed slowly, the departure from it in matters of individual equality has come upon us with terrifying rapidity. Resistance to the law has ranged, in some parts of the country, from delays and evasions, through intimidation of citizens who demand their legal rights, to violence—even murder. Daily, the forces of organized defiance grow more intransigent; the problems grow more acute.

In his memorable article, "The Law and the Future," Chief Justice Warren commented that the Bill of Rights is under "subtle and pervasive attack," and continued: "This attack comes not only from without, but from our own indifference and failure of imagination . . . The pursuit of justice is not the vain pursuit of a remote abstraction; it is a continuing direction of our daily conduct . . . We will pass on a better Bill of Rights or a worse one, tarnished by neglect or burnished by growing use."

This invitation to our Eighth Conference on Civil Liberties goes to all responsible organizations which are concerned with a re-affirmation of our constitutional guarantees of freedom, justice and equality, and which wish to come together for mutual consultation on how the Bill of Rights may be burnished more brightly, for today and for the future.

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House

. . . is a voluntary association through which more than 60 national organizations share their knowledge, factual information and programs in the fields of civil liberties, civil rights, intellectual freedom and other human rights.

. . . is limited in both its continuing program and its annual conferences to the promotion of education and the exchange of information in these fields, and is in no sense an action organization, being prohibited by its constitution from adopting positions or making policy statements on any issues.

. . . aims in its Conferences on Civil Liberties to bring together representatives of its associated groups and other invited agencies for free, full and informed inter-organizational discussion and analysis of current issues, and for consideration of ways by which they may help to strengthen and preserve our constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms.

EQUALITY UNDER LAW: THE BALANCE SHEET TODAY

Program Personnel:

Invocation	:	The Rev. Dr. Robert E. Van Deusen.
Address	:	Representative Kenneth B. Keating.
Chairman	:	Dr. Leonard P. Aries, National Conference of Christians and Jews.
Panel	:	Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean, The Catholic Committee of the South. Dr. Carl R. Pritchett, Pastor, Bethesda Presbyterian Church. Dr. Frederick B. Routh, Southern Regional Council. Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.
Reporters	:	Violet Gunther and David Williams, Americans for Democratic Action.

Representative Kenneth B. Keating (R., N.Y.) surveyed the record of the Eisenhower Administration in promoting and maintaining civil rights and civil liberties. "The school segregation cases," he said, "are, in my opinion, the most important single gain recorded in this field since the 19th Amendment invested women with the right to vote." Expressing confidence "that reason is going to prevail after the protests have thinned out and tempers have cooled a little," he stated that "the lines of color have been obliterated, in fact as well as in theory, in everything pertaining to the Federal Government and its operations." Mr. Keating also said that "There has been a great improvement in the matter of loyalty and security procedures and our responses in general to the menace of the Communist conspiracy."

The Civil Rights Situation in the District of Columbia

In the discussion following Representative Keating's address, his claim for near-perfection in the race relations and civil rights situation in the District of Columbia was challenged by a number of people. Instances where serious discrimination continues to exist were cited, such as the Fire Department, the District Jail, the Home for the Aged, the Boys' club, the Telephone Company, and the District Commissioners' long-standing refusal to extend non-discrimination in amusement places beyond the one-third of the city covered by the anti-discrimination laws of 1869-70. Representative Keating in response, acknowledged that perhaps he should correct his remarks to say that "more progress has been made in Washington in three years than in the previous twenty."

Changing Patterns in the South

The Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean, of the Catholic Committee of the South, in discussing the changing patterns in the South, emphasized that substantial progress in the Southern racial picture has been observed. He pointed out that 150,000 Negroes are now registered to vote in Louisiana, as compared with 5,000 in 1948. Citing the Montgomery, Alabama, bus boycott as an encouraging first example of a Southern Negro community acting in a united fashion to improve its own status, Father Shean stressed that people of various groups must learn to work together locally on the problem of segregation.

Responsibility of the Churches

Dr. Carl R. Pritchett, pastor of the Bethesda Presbyterian Church, posed the question of the responsibility of the churches in combatting racial prejudice. He said that he felt that the Gospel is one of the most potent forces in breaking down racial prejudice, citing his own conversion as an example. He contrasted the pro-integration attitude of many churches in the South with the situation during the Civil War when Southern ministers generally supported the Confederacy.

Variations in Attitudes in Different Southern States

Dr. Frederick B. Routh of the Southern Regional Council reiterated the contention of Rev. Shean that the South is not monolithic in its attitude toward segregation in education and related problems. The "hard core" area actively resisting school de-segregation, which includes Alabama, Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, and Mississippi, is shocked by the progress toward integration that is being made in the border States, he said; even within this "Old South" area, opinion is far from unanimous in favor of resistance. He grouped other Southern States according to their response to the Supreme Court's school segregation decisions as follows: in Kentucky, Texas, and Arkansas de-segregation is proceeding; in Tennessee, Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia a wait-and-see attitude prevails.

Dr. Routh suggested that industry is being repelled from coming into the South by the civil disorders there, and that this might become a very significant factor in eventually breaking down Southern resistance to the Supreme Court's decisions. He pointed out that the political systems of the South are more often than not based on obsolete rural and agrarian economies.

Applauding the firmness and determination of the Negro community in a number of instances, Dr. Routh stressed the importance of such developments in working against discrimination. The problem of integration is not a North-South conflict, nor a Negro-white conflict, he said, but rather a problem of whether there is to be law and order or anarchy. He urged that Northern groups not take the advice of William Faulkner and Hodding Carter that the South be left alone to solve its own problems: "Don't leave us alone -- we will never deal with them unless you keep after us."

"Extremism" versus "Moderation"

Clarence Mitchell of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People deplored the practice of depicting civil rights proponents as "extremists". If this frame of reference is accepted, he said, President Eisenhower could be construed as an "extremist" because he had taken an oath to uphold the Constitution.

Mr. Mitchell suggested that the Department of Justice should be given authority to protect the right to register and vote.

Discussion

In discussion among the panel members following their formal presentations, Dr. Pritchett, in response to a question as to whether or not there was pressure on ministers from congregation members to abandon a position against segregation, said that there was a deliberate and to some extent successful effort to eliminate ministers of "moderate" opinions. He mentioned an instance in which a Federal judge had put pressure on a minister for anti-integration views expressed privately, but not from the pulpit. The hostility of the Southern press does a great deal of damage, he said, adding that "Our own interracial council, was done in by a newspaper."

Dr. Routh called attention to the fact that the right of petition had been challenged in some places in the South, and Mr. Mitchell, replying that this challenge would be brought to the attention of the officers of the NAACP, said that the NAACP had advocated the filing of petitions with local school boards. Where good faith negotiations are entered into, there would be no need for NAACP legal action.

There was considerable discussion about the attitudes exemplified by William Faulkner's articles in LIFE and THE REPORTER magazines. As to whether or not the situation in Mississippi is actually as explosive as Faulkner described, Dr. Routh agreed that that State constitutes the South's most difficult area. The establishment of a Governor's Commission there to maintain law and order might be the solution, he said.

Charles Webber of the AFL-CIO noted that unfortunately many trade unionists in the South are just as prejudiced as anyone else, and asked for comments on this problem. Father Shean suggested that three forces were of importance in this connection: (1) economic growth and development in the South, (2) moral leadership by the churches, and (3) the schools themselves. The greater economic development of South Carolina, for example, as compared to that of Mississippi, explains at least in part the difference in attitude toward integration in those two States.

In discussing the responsibility of the President in combatting violations of the law by anti-integrationists, some conferees held that the President should make a statement to the effect that deprivations of the rights to vote and to petition do not exemplify "moderation". Others felt that the President should call upon the Attorney General to state publicly what the Executive Branch can do under existing law -- and, if existing law is not adequate, what supplementary legislation is needed.

WHO GUARDS OUR LIBERTIES?

Program Personnel:

Invocation	:	The Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean.
Address	:	Senator Wayne Morse.
Chairman	:	Dr. Earl F. Adams, National Council of Churches.
Reporter	:	Mary Frances Aldrich, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice.

"Who Guards Our Liberties?" was the subject of a major address by Senator Wayne Morse (D., Ore.) at the Thursday evening dinner meeting of the conference.

Senator Morse, who was introduced by Mr. Philip Schiff of the National Jewish Welfare Board, took as his principal thesis the fact that our liberties depend basically on the procedural rights of which we are assured, and that our substantive rights, which embody these liberties, are no better than our procedural rights.

Most of the rights, in fact, which are safeguarded by the Bill of Rights, are procedural rights, the Senator pointed out. They include such rights as --

* the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures;

* the right of every person in any criminal case not to be compelled to be a witness against himself, nor to be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law;

* the right of an accused person to be informed of the nature and cause of accusations against him, to be confronted by his accusers and the witnesses against him to have the courts compel the attendance of witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

The preservation of these procedural rights is essential if our basic freedoms of speech, press, and petition, equality of opportunity, and freedom from discrimination based on race, creed, color, or national origin, are to be effectively realized and enjoyed.

As an Example, the Filibuster

As an illustration of the way in which procedural rights affect the safeguarding of substantive liberties, Senator Morse cited the manner in which the rule of unlimited debate in the Senate can be, and has been, used to frustrate progress in the enactment of civil rights legislation. He noted especially Senate Rule 22, which permits a minority of the Senate to block the Senate's decision-making processes by filibuster, as an example of this.

The Senator said he was for the rule of unlimited debate, whether or not it was called a "filibuster", if what is protected by this rule is the right to argue the merits of a proposition which is before the Senate for consideration. "I have, and will again, partake in that kind of a filibuster", he said, "but I will never engage in a filibuster that seeks simply and solely to prevent a vote from ever occurring." Unfortunately, he said, he could see no possible chance at present to achieve any progress through a modification of Rule 22. Just the same, he argued, "if you want to make a fight for substantive improvements in the fields of civil rights, then you have got to do something about the procedural problem embodied in this Rule."

Senator Morse also criticized the present trend toward secrecy in government. "A great many of our procedural rights are going to be endangered," he said, "if we don't stop this trend. In my judgment an overwhelming majority of legislative committee sessions should not be held in executive session. The facts belong to the American people. The American people can take the facts. Foreign governments often know them before we do, anyway."

The Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy

The real source of all our liberties is the doctrine of judicial supremacy laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in 1803 in the famous case of Marbury v. Madison. In that case, the Supreme Court, speaking through the Chief Justice, annulled an act of Congress as unconstitutional and, by making the decision stick, established the supremacy of the Supreme Court under the Constitution.

Turning to the Court's school segregation decisions, Senator Morse pointed out that "we now have a judgment by the Supreme Court -- a judgment which, I believe, was long overdue -- that there shall be no discrimination, and therefore no segregation, in public education." This decision, the Senator stated, is clearly correct "for the torch of liberty in this country must burn as brightly in colored homes as in white homes."

The responsibility for implementing and enforcing the Supreme Court's school segregation decisions now rests with the executive and legislative branches of the Government, Morse continued. Maintaining the supremacy of the Supreme Court, in this admittedly most difficult field, is an essential obligation of leadership and statesmanship in our Government. "All people will abide by the Supreme Court's decisions," he contended, "once it is clear that our leaders will abide by these decisions." When our leaders counsel defiance of the Court, however, they are encouraging contempt for all law and order.

Need for Re-dedication

In this connection, Senator Morse argued that the manifesto counselling all possible lawful resistance to the Supreme Court's school segregation decisions, which has been signed by more than 100 Southern Senators and Representatives in Congress, is an example of lack of responsible leadership that must be counteracted.

Specifically, he proposed, each member of the Senate should be given an opportunity to stand up and be counted on whether he believes in a government of laws, of the supremacy of law, of the supremacy of the Supreme Court as the ultimate interpreter of the Constitution and the law under our system of government. "I think there should be offered in the Senate," Morse said, "another manifesto stating that the signers believe that decisions of the Supreme Court should be supreme in fact as well as in theory. I don't believe we would have trouble in getting signers to such a manifesto." "It would give all Senators," he pointed out, "an opportunity to re-dedicate themselves to the philosophy of Marbury v. Madison".

In a brief discussion period following his address, Senator Morse was asked whether he would support the Lehman bill under which Federal funds for school construction would not be available to any State in which there was resistance, amounting to defiance, of the Supreme Court's school segregation decisions, but would be held in escrow for such State until such time as its authorities undertook in good faith to comply with the decisions. The Senator said that he would never commit himself on a bill until the last hour of debate. He said that he believes that it is his responsibility to remain at liberty to change his mind on any issue until the last opportunity for argument has been given.

In response to other questions following his address, Senator Morse emphasized again that constitutional law is a matter of social, political and legal dynamics. The dead hand of the past can not be permitted to frustrate its constructive growth and development. As a living document the Constitution has growth and life in it, and it must be kept that way. That is the spirit in which it was written, and the faith that has sustained that spirit over the years must never be lost by the American people.

THE FREE EXCHANGE OF IDEAS, AND PRESENT RESTRAINTS THEREON

Program Personnel:

Address	:	Dr. Marie Jahoda, Associate Director, New York University Research Center for Human Relations.
Chairman	:	Irving Ferman, American Civil Liberties Union.
Panel	:	Dan M. Lacy, Managing Director, American Book Publishers Council. Alfred Friendly, Managing Editor, The Washington Post and Times Herald.
Reporter	:	Lucile Ellison, Defense Commission, National Education Association.

The opening address on this subject was given by Dr. Marie Jahoda, Associate Director, New York University Research Center for Human Relations.

Over-simplification, Dr. Jahoda said, is admirably suited to those who want restrictions on liberty of thought, speech and action. The complex problems of security and subversion have been all too readily simplified by the attackers of civil liberties into the notion that unorthodox ideas must be stamped out.

Unfortunately, the defenders of civil liberties have often accepted the strategy of the opposition. This is implicit in the frequently-heard complaint that the whole country has become conformist in thought and action. Such an acceptance of over-simplification results in the imposition of a negativistic, defensive, and unsophisticated attitude on efforts to discover and diagnose basic trends in our current social climate. They become thin and shallow, and impede, rather than promote, true understansing of psychological and social forces and developments.

Dr. Jahoda contended that we need a new strategy for maintaining and increasing freedom of thought. It must be recognized, she said, that combatting orthodoxy and restoring respect for diversity require tactics that differ from situation to situation.

It is wrong, she continued, to accept the diagnosis that the psychological realities experienced by different sectors of our population with regard to their respect for, and enjoyment of -- let alone, devotion to -- civil liberties, are more or less alike, and that the differences in these realities need not be a matter of concern. There is need for much work looking to more adequate knowledge of the psychology of prejudice and better understanding of the psychological realities felt by various groups. If this could be successfully carried out, it would make possible the development of specific strategies that would be more appropriate than those currently in use.

The fears experienced by Federal employees and scientists as a result of the Federal Government's loyalty-security programs are based on reality, Dr. Jahoda stated. Diversity of opinion would quickly return, she held, if the inequities of current loyalty-security procedures were eliminated.

Dr. Jahoda also had a suggestion that she felt might do much to encourage faith and devotion to freedom of thought and action -- that an enterprising insurance company might significantly affect the climate of thought, amd make a profit, too, by undertaking to write insurance against loss of income or legal costs involved in establishing innocence in Federal loyalty-security proceedings.

Limitations on Books

Dan M. Lacy, managing director of the American Book Publishers Council, discussing current restrictions on the publication of books, said that although there have been some limitations on book publishing, the publishing business has sustained a large and reassuring measure of freedom both to hold a mirror up to life itself and to discuss public issues.

Existing restraints, Mr. Lacy said, come from two sources: (1) uneasiness when dealing with subjects that are culturally taboo; and (2) uneasiness when dealing with public issues in which emotions are involved. Often, of course, these are found together; they are by no means completely separate.

As for moral censorship, no important limitations have been imposed on the efforts of a sincere artist to deal as candidly as he wishes with some of the disturbing aspects of life. It is true, however, that a great many people are disturbed by a candid depiction. When this happens, they exert active pressure either to (1) persuade others not to read certain types of books (not an objectionable form of restraint in itself, Mr. Lacy thought), or (2) bring certain forms of economic pressure to bear and thereby limit the freedom to read.

Speaking of State censorship, Mr. Lacy pointed out that the United States Supreme Court has never defined the limitations of the police powers of the States in the light of the First Amendment, which protects against abridgment of the freedoms of speech and press. The basic legal principle that has been developed through court decisions has been that consideration must be given to a book as a whole, to its purpose, and its effect on the general public.

Mr. Lacy reminded his audience that a year ago it seemed probable that libraries would be subjected to major restrictions. Fortunately, this fear has proved unjustified. There has been a crystalization of public opinion to the effect that public libraries ought to provide access to a wide diversity of points of view.

The picture in regard to school libraries and school textbooks, however, is less optimistic, Mr. Lacy said. Some serious problems remain in these areas. One of the most serious of all the problems involved in the right to read is the sheer inaccessibility of libraries to many of our countrymen. Well over half of our population, Mr. Lacy said, has no access at all to libraries, or has access only to those without resources to purchase more than about 50 books per year. He called the Library Services Bill, which would help to remedy some of these deficiencies and make libraries available to many more people throughout the country, an important civil liberties measure.

Freedom of Information

The problems of freedom of information and interferences imposed on such freedom by the Federal Government were discussed by Alfred Friendly, managing editor of the Washington Post and Times Herald.

Mr. Friendly said that a Government organization or agency can impede the free flow of information to mass communications media or channels in numerous ways:

1. It can censor by prior restraint;

2. It can impose penalties on publication so severe that the reporter will hesitate to publish what he knows;

3. It can deny access to the facilities or machinery necessary for proper reporting;

4. It can develop methods to prevent distribution of the printed word;

5. It can withhold at the source information about government, about itself, or about matters that democracy has a right to know.

Today, Mr. Friendly pointed out, widespread secrecy prevails in the various branches of Government, and the attitude of "Papa knows best" is encountered all too frequently by reporters endeavoring to get information which the public has a right to have.

Mr. Friendly suggested that this may be due in part to the heavy influx of businessmen into the higher levels of government service. Too often, he said, they bring with them a managerial point of view. It is obviously easier to get faster, neater, but not necessarily wiser, decisions through autocratic methods.

Finally, Mr. Friendly noted that scientists have repeatedly pointed out the absurdity and the harmful effects of the degree and extent of secrecy imposed in scientific fields. Progress in these fields is vastly slower if knowledge is compartmentalized.

APPARENT CONFLICTS BETWEEN FREEDOM AND THE DESIRE FOR SECURITY, AS EXEMPLIFIED BY THE EXTENSION OF LOYALTY-SECURITY PROGRAMS INTO INDUSTRY

Program Personnel:

Invocation	:	Rabbi Balfour Brickner.
Address	:	William F. Schnitzler, Secretary-Treasurer, American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations.
Chairman	:	Alan Barth
Reporter	:	Kenneth A. Meiklejohn, International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, AFL-CIO.

Mr. Schnitzler emphasized the vital stake that the organized labor movement has in the defense of civil liberties and the enrichment of freedom in the United States. "Unions have been and are, "he said,"dependent on civil liberties for their very existence. The history of our trade union movement closely parallels the history of civil liberties. Freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and other basic freedoms are essential to the very existence of our unions today."

He recalled some of the past struggles to obtain the right to organize unions and to obtain basic freedoms of speech, press, and assembly, such as those of the anthracite coal miners in 1873, and the railroad workers in 1877. Today, although the reign of the labor injunction has been outlawed in the Federal courts by the Norris-LaGuardia Act, and the right to organize and bargain collectively through unions freely chosen by the workers has been written into the law by the Wagner Act, state and local courts still continue to harass unions with injunctions in many parts of the country, and 18 States have enacted phony "right to work" laws, which have been legalized by the Taft-Hartley Act, effectively destroying union security. So the fight of the unions to secure basic freedoms goes on.

Mr. Schnitzler described a number of present-day situations in which these struggles are very much involved. A labor dispute involving field workers on Louisiana corporation-owned sugar plantations "called dramatically to the nation's attention the existence of a large group of exploited workers, who had only their union and the labor movement to provide them with protection and support." Throughout the South local communities are devising new methods of interfering with efforts of the unions to organize unorganized workers employed in that region, such as imposing license fees on union organizers, taxing unions for each member recruited or for engaging in union organizing activity.

"Restraints upon the workers' exercise of their right of self-organization and of free assembly are still frequent," Mr. Schnitzler said. "In many localities restraining orders are still handed out by local and state courts to thwart workers in their legitimate union activities, including orderly and peaceful picketing." He emphasized, however, that "far and wide across the industrial scene of our country, our unions have gained not only acceptance by management but respect and confidence of employers as well. Our movement is strong and articulate. It has won wide public recognition and support." The case histories which he had described, he said, were to remind us that the "ever-present dangers to our freedoms" must not be obscured by labor's gains.

Essential Security Measures

The United States, Mr. Schnitzler said, "is today and must always remain the citadel of freedom." Its spirit of freedom must be the spearhead of the free world in its struggle against the world-wide threat of imperialist domination by Communism. The "new look" of "collective leadership" in Moscow has not changed this threat, he added. And this threat "makes it necessary for us in America to protect ourselves against espionage, infiltration and subversion."

There should be no misunderstanding, Mr. Schnitzler stressed, about the threat which Communism poses to our liberties. "There is no freedom of political choice in the Soviet Union," he pointed out. "There are no civil liberties under the Communist rule. There is no freedom of speech. There is no freedom of assembly. There is no freedom of movement. There is no protection against search and seizure by those in power. There are no free and independent unions. There are no legal safeguards of the rights to life, liberty and property. And the Communist government is not pledged to secure these rights. There is no charter, no Magna Charta, no Bill of Rights, to proclaim man's freedom and to protect it."

The existence of the Communist threat makes special security measures against espionage, infiltration and subversion essential. But, the speaker warned, "whatever we do to safeguard our national security must be done calmly, judiciously and soberly, with full regard at every step for the complete observance of the very civil liberties we are striving to defend." There is no room for hysteria, Mr. Schnitzler said. The problem is to devise the best and most effective ways to meet the threat of internal espionage and sabotage.

These include (1) alert and vigilant counter-intelligence work, (2) vigorous enforcement of criminal laws, and (3) a realistic and effective security system. "We must reject the ways and methods of totalitarian despots in pursuing this task," Mr. Schnitzler said, "we cannot afford to let the basic civil liberties take a holiday in America."

He felt that during the past year protection of individual civil rights in security cases has been greatly improved. "The witch hunt is over," he said, "but the problem is still with us." He applauded the establishment by Congress of a bipartisan public commission to investigate the whole subject of personnel security programs, and the rejection, thus far, of the so-called Defense Facilities Bill.

Four Security Programs

Four security screening programs were analyzed in some detail by Mr. Schnitzler. The Port Security Program, initiated under the Magnuson Act of 1950, to provide security protection for docks and other waterfront facilities "gives the best protection to the individual both by its procedures and by its criteria", he said.

In connection with the Atomic Energy Program, he pointed out that "with the increasing use of nuclear materials by private industry and wider contracting out of the AEC projects to private firms, the number of industrial workers affected by this program is on the increase." As in the cases involving our union members have been straightened out, after consultation between the union concerned and government officials." He noted, however, that union representatives have not been given the opportunity to participate in the review procedure or to serve on either hearing or review boards, as they do under the Port Security Program.

The governmental security program which is broadest in its application to industrial workers in the Industrial Personnel Security Program administered by the Defense Department. Under this, all contractors doing work for the Department must have their employees screened if they are to have access to classified information or sensitive areas. Employees are required to fill out detailed personnel security questionnaires and to certify to their non-affiliation with any subversive organization or any organization included in the Attorney General's list.

Criteria Analyzed

The criteria for denying clearance are very broad, Mr. Schnitzler pointed out, "ranging from outright sabotage, espionage or treason all the way to the invocation of the Fifth Amendment when questioned as to loyalty or alleged misconduct." They include such things as "any behavior, activities or associations which tend to show that the individual is not reliable or trustworthy" and "acts of reckless, irresponsible or wanton nature which indicate such poor judgment and instability as to suggest that the individual might disclose information to unauthorized persons." This latter criterion was used (as brought out in hearings before the Hennings Subcommittee last fall) to deny security clearance to a worker because during a strike he had suggested that workers on the picket line wear their old service uniforms with all insignia and buttons removed, as required by law, in order to make clear that they were ex-servicemen and not Communists, as the management had falsely called them.

Mr. Schnitzler analyzed the procedures followed under the Industrial Personnel Security Program and concluded: "Working people cannot easily cope with the broad criteria of the security tests, the heavy burden of proof that must be met by the accused, and the concealment of the informants against him." Although the program has been administered by men of good will, he said, "the ancient safeguards of notice and hearing and of due process of law must be rigorously adhered to when the man's rights as a free citizen are adjudged and his future livelihood is at stake."

Mr. Schnitzler said there is a fourth non-governmental and unofficial program in effect -- an Employer Security Program -- under which "private employers, on their own initiative, enlarge upon and go far beyond necessary and proper plant security practices." He described the possible uses to which this program can be put, quoting from the foreword to a report on industrial security by the National Industrial Conference Board, which states to employers:

> "Even if you don't have a trained saboteur in hire, Industrial Security can pay off in peace time. It can help you rid your plant of agitators who create labor unrest; who promote labor grievances, slow-downs and strikes and encourage workers' antipathy towards management."

This document continues:

> "Furthermore, while Communism is a great threat to America today, who knows in this unsettled world what the color, nationality or political philosophy of our next enemy will be?"

Mr. Schnitzler added: "The potential dangers of such a program are obvious. In the name of security, anti-union employers could readily bring back the old vicious practices of blacklisting and labor espionage."

In conclusion, the speaker called for participation by labor in the administration of the government's industrial security program, rather than its exclusion from it.

SEEKING SOLUTIONS: ORGANIZATIONAL TECHNIQUES FOR THE PROTECTION OF CIVIL RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES

Program Personnel :

Chairman	:	John J. Gunther, Americans for Democratic Action.
Panel	:	Mrs. Jacob S. Cohen, National Council of Jewish Women. Dr. J. Oscar Lee, National Council of Churches. Mrs. Ralph Golla, Chairman, Paramus, N.J., Freedom Agenda Project. Benjamin Segal, Trade Union Consultant, The Fund for the Republic.
Reporter	:	Betty Douglas, League of Women Voters.

Mrs. Cohen was the first panelist to lead off the discussion. United community action on integration in the South is impossible now, she said, because most communities are paralyzed by fear."Many decent Southerners think it is desirable and possible to continue segregation in the schools indefinitely," she pointed out.

Many more voices, however, are now being raised in protest against the stalemate than were heard in 1954. At that time the Virginia State Legislative Council of the National Council of Jewish Women decided to send representatives to the Governor's Commission (the Gray Commission) on problems growing out of the Supreme Court's decision in the school segregation cases.

They planned to protest proposed legislative action to prevent integration. The Council was jointed by two other large organizations in issuing a statement in opposition to the proposed plan. These groups soon felt the force of State pressures against them, but they did not back down. Ministerial groups also joined them in asking for moderation in the State's approach to the problem.

Later these groups worked hard to get out a large protest vote against the Gray Commission proposals. They knew they could not win, but they managed to roll up a very creditable showing.

Mrs. Cohen concluded by saying that each step taken has been in the right direction, and quoted some lines from Hillel to show what satisfactions the groups have had through their unfaltering stand:

"If I am not for myself, who will be for me?
If I am only for myself, what am I?
And if not now, when?"

Church and Community

Dr. Lee spoke of the relationship between civil and individual liberties and noted that they are both bound up in the integration issue. He said that opposition to integration has given a serious setback to those who would go forward in promoting these liberties.

Calling attention to the necessity for preserving the public school system, Dr. Lee said that the public schools were indispensable for our spiritual and industrial defense. The laws must be obeyed, even though we do not agree with them. He urged the use of orderly processes to promote change.

Dr. Lee characterized the White Citizens Councils that have sprung up in the South as instruments of thought control. They operate, he said, in violation of the First Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Their strategy was tipped off by their advocacy of the "right to work" laws in many states. They mean to maintain the status quo in the South.

"There are many 'Souths'," Dr. Lee continued; the South should not be referred to as if it were a solid block of opposition to integration. In the Border States the churches have encouraged a look at the local problems and are considering post-integration problems. In West Virginia, for example, the National Council of Churches is making a consultation service on these problems available to groups.

Dr. Lee discussed how best to give support to the liberal groups in the Deep South and told of statements that church groups have made for this purpose. He said that the churches are continuing to bring relief from the pressures of the White Citizens Councils to liberals, white and Negro alike. While temporary relief in the form of clothing, for example, is no longer needed in some places, longer term aid, such as crop loans, is necessary. Such loans are being arranged in many cases through banks and sympathetic organizations.

Community Education and Individual Liberties

The difficulties encountered by a group of people who wanted to discuss the Constitution, the Bill of Rights and individual liberties in a small New Jersey town were recounted by Mrs. Golla. Paramus, New Jersey, her home, and the scene of the Freedom Agenda Project in which she participated, is a town which has grown from a population of 5,000 in 1951, to 18,000 today. This rapid expansion has caused growing pains which, she believes, were partly responsible for the troubles which beset the initiation of the project. Attempts have been made to censor the books in the two libraries, and attacks have been made on the curriculum of the elementary school.

It took almost a year to organize the Freedom Agenda Project. After a great deal of work a meeting to discuss the Bill of Rights and the Constitution was arranged, with the Superintendent of Schools, members of the Board of Education and a Lutheran minister pledged to participate. Ten days before the meeting a City Council meeting was disrupted by a man who waved an unidentified pamphlet before the Mayor and Councilmen, demanding that the Freedom Agenda meeting be cancelled. Some of the panelists who had agreed to lead the discussion dropped out, and an unfriendly crowd assembled on the night of the meeting. The Chairman, however, conducted the meeting with great dignity, and it was rated a success.

Discussion groups have continued to meet, and their attendance has grown. Many subjects related to individual liberty have been discussed, and a new climate of ideas has begun to be felt in the town. It demonstrates what can be done with a few people getting together to talk about basic principles.

Mrs. Golla closed by reporting that after all the trials and tribulations the project has threatened for those connected with it, no lasting harm has come to any of them, and even some positive good has resulted: as the result of her job as chairman of the project, her husband had just been elected to the Board of Education.

Labor and Civil Liberties

Mr. Segal declared that the climate of opinion has improved during the past year insofar as regard for civil liberties and the Bill of Rights is concerned, but he warned that the basic problems have not been solved. "What basic changes," he asked, "have been made in the loyalty-security program?" The section of this program dealing with the pre-induction activities of draftees in the armed forces is still being administered strictly, he said, although it had been hoped that progress had been made in liberalizing it. There has been no decrease in the number of persons affected by the security programs.

Mr. Segal did not feel that much hope could be placed in the bipartisan Security Commission created by Congress last year. He cited testimony by the Commission's chairman, Loyd Wright, indicating that its emphasis will be on developing greater uniformity and strictness of enforcement in security programs, a task that will require an appropriation of $2 million to enable it to do its work. The Commission, he said, has been slow in organizing and getting its work under way.

Another problem which Mr. Segal discussed was the gap between the positions adopted by top labor officials and knowledge of these positions by local officers. He urged that attempts be made to close this gap. The need for a real education program in the fields of civil and individual rights is pressing and work on civil rights should be one of the normal activities of all unions. Conferences on civil rights, he urged, should include not only the "converted", but people of different points of view, including management. All problems in the security field should be aired.

In answer to a question as to whether the security programs are affecting the recruitment of good persons into government, Mr. Segal replied that he believes that these programs are retarding recruitment. The criteria for government employment have not been changed; these programs weaken liberty, rather than effectively guard our security, he said.

FROM THE CONFERENCE SUMMARY

Dr. Earl F. Adams of the National Council of Churches, chairman of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House and of its Conference, concluded the program with a brief comment on the two-days' proceedings.

The Conference had centered its attention, Dr. Adams said, upon "concern for people." Such concern with the welfare and the rights of the individual he termed vital to the healthy functioning of a free democracy. The problems that the meetings had discussed, he said, are not academic, but are real and urgent.

He stressed the importance of the part played by voluntary citizens' organizations in American life, and the contribution that they make to the maintenance of basic democratic practices.

It is encouraging, he continued, to observe the constantly-increasing number of organizations that are showing an active concern for the preservation of our constitutional liberties. He noted the wide diversity of purposes among the more than 60 groups associated in the Clearing House, and among the even larger number assembled at the Conference. That so many agencies are interested in joining together for study of problems in the fields of civil rights and liberties indicates, he said, how wide-spread is their growing realization of the importance of these issues, and of their own responsibilities to the Nation as a whole and to its citizens of every race and creed.

Dr. Adams urged their continuing efforts for the development of wider public understanding of the meaning and values of our fundamental individual rights, stressing that this is of international as well as national import. He described some of his own expreiences in the course of a recent trip to Europe, and added: "We must remember that what we in the United States do on matters of civil liberties is watched around the world. It is hard to explain abroad some of the 'incidents' that happen here at home. Our international prestige and reputation are at stake: we must put our own house in order."

THE ANNUAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CONFERENCES sponsored by it bring together representatives of associated groups and other invited agencies for free, full and informed inter-organizational discussion and analysis of current issues in these fields, and for consideration of ways by which they may help to strengthen and preserve our constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms.

BOTH THE CLEARING HOUSE AND ITS CONFERENCES are limited to the promotion of education and the exchange of information. Both are prohibited by the Clearing House constitution from adopting positions or making policy statements on any issues.

South Divided on Segregation, Civil Rights Conference Is Told

By Frank R. Kent Jr.
Staff Reporter

The South is not "monolithic" in its views on segregation, and up to a half dozen communities in Virginia may take some steps toward ending it in their schools by next fall, Frederick B. Routh of the Southern Regional Council yesterday told the Conference on Civil Rights.

Routh was one of a panel of five speakers at the eighth annual conference held by the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, now meeting at the Hotel 2400. Routh said the South could be divided into three categories of states: Kentucky, Texas and Arkansas where integration is proceeding, Virginia, Tennessee, Florida and North Carolina in a "waiting status," and Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, as the "hard core" segregation states.

Routh said despite the approval in principle by the voters of the Gray Commission Virginia program, Virginia was not in the "hard core."

He called definitions of the controversy as a second civil war or a struggle basically between whites and Negroes as "nonsense." It basically is a contest between believers in law and order and those who would prefer chaos, he declared.

Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.), said during the last few years color lines have been obliterated in everything pertaining to the Federal Government and its operations. In the District, Keating said, segregation in most activities is disappearing.

The Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean of the Catholic Committee of the South, said he knew of many instances that indicated a change was coming in Southern states "county by county." It is tragic, he said, that in many Southern communities people are afraid to make their views known.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the word "extremist" was being used in the controversy. President Eisenhower was an extremist, Mitchell said, in the tradition of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. Mitchell said the "mask of hysteria" on the faces of members of Congress must be stripped away.

At an evening banquet, Sen. Wayne L. Morse (D-Ore.) said the interposition was nullification.

"The Court has spoken, the law is clear, the emancipation long overdue," he declared.

He said that he was not an "overnighter" regarding integration, but that "some are talking in terms of 25 to 30 years and America can't wait that long."

Referring to the recent manifesto by Southern Senators challenging the integration decision of the Supreme Court, Morse said that he was preparing another manifesto—that the decision of the Supreme Court should be supreme in action as well as in theory.

NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CLEARING HOUSE

Ware, Washington Urban League; Frank Dorey, Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches; Julia Bennett and Edward de Grazia, American Library Association; R. W. Frase, American Book Publishers Council; Herman Edelsberg and William Korey, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women; Martha T. Mills, League of Women Voters; Rosaline Fisher, Harriet Cipriani and Miriam Carliner, League of Women Voters of D.C.; Nathaniel H. Goodrich, American Jewish Committee; Denise Tourover, Hadassah; Ken Birkhead, American Veterans Committee; Alan R. Howe, American Friends Service Committee; Olinda M. Roettger, Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod; Mary Jane Simpson, Friends Committee on National Legislation; Beth Scholander and Kenneth Peterson, IUE, AFL-CIO; Jack Curran, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, AFL-CIO; Mabel Snyder, National Farmers Union; Charles E. Hogan, United Steelworkers of America; Sanford H. Bolz, American Jewish Congress; Annalee Stewart, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Irving Ferman, American Civil Liberties Union; Mary Alice Baldinger and Lucia Lhamon, for the office; James H. Heller, guest.

Next Meeting : The Clearing House will hold its final session before the summer recess on Wednesday, July 18, from 2 to 4 o'clock in the Washington Post Community Room. The Administrative Committee will meet in the Community Room from 1 to 2 p. m.

Nominations for Office, 1956-57 : The meeting received, without making any further additions, the report of the Committee on Nominations for 1956-57, which was presented by Olinda Roettger in the absence of the chairman, Lucile Ellison. The election processes outlined in the Clearing House constitution are summarized in the report, which follows:

Report of the Committee on Nominations for 1956-57 :

"Before it considered any nominations, your Committee made a complete review of past organizational representation in office in the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

"The Committee also reviewed the Clearing House constitution, noting particularly Article V's provision that an officer or Administrative Committee member who has served for three successive one-year terms shall not be eligible for re-election for one year following the end of his third successive year. It is the Committee's understanding that this provision aims at maintaining stability in the governing body and at the same time securing an annual rotation in office of approximately one-third of the Administrative Committee's total membership.

"On the basis of these considerations, the Committee determined to re-nominate present officers who have served less than three years.

"We also discussed the advisability of nominating more than one person for each office. On the basis of the procedures of past Nominating Committees, and because the Clearing House is an agency in which individuals participate as representatives of their national organizations, however, we decided to submit only one nomination for each office or Administrative Committee post.

"The Committee wishes to express its awareness of the fine leadership given to the Clearing House by all of its officers in the 1955-56 term.

* * * * * * * *

"The Nominating Committee of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House recommends the following slate of officers for the year 1956-57 :

Chairman : Dr. Earl F. Adams, National Council of Churches.

Vice Chairmen :

Academic Freedom : Julia Bennett, American Library Association.

Civil Liberties : Kenneth Birkhead, American Veterans Committee.

Civil Rights : Boris Shishkin, AFL-CIO.

Human Rights : Katherine Jansson, American Association for the United Nations.

Secretary : Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women.

Treasurer : Nathaniel H. Goodrich, American Jewish Committee.

Administrative Committee :

Dr. Leonard Aries, National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Sanford Bolz, American Jewish Congress.

Dr. Ralph F. Fuchs, American Association of University Professors.

Arthur J. Goldberg, United Steelworkers of America.

Martha Mills, League of Women Voters.

Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

* * * * * * *

"Elected office in the Clearing House is limited to a chairman, four vice chairmen, secretary, treasurer, and six Administrative Committee members.

"Associated organizations may, if they wish, submit additions to the slate proposed by the Nominating Committee through July 15. The constitution further provides that such additional nominations must be approved by the Nominating Committee before they are placed on the ballot; and that election shall be by mail ballot in August, and term of office shall begin in September.

(For the Committee)

For the Committee :

Lucile Ellison, National Education Association, chairman
John Edelman, Textile Workers Union of America
Eleanor Hadley, National Association of Social Workers
Olinda Roettger, Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod
Edward Snyder, Friends Committee on National Legislation."

Emergency Situation of the Clearing House : In presenting his report of income and expenditures for the first six months of 1956, Herman Edelsberg, the treasurer, called attention to the emergency financial situation which the Clearing House is facing.

He and Dr. Adams both urged that all associated organizations increase their contributions or subscription payments, and that organizations which would normally contribute or subscribe later in the year should make every effort to send in their payments now, instead of later.

To Mrs. Tourover's request that the Finance Committee establish a definite minimum amount to cover Clearing House servicing, Dr. Adams replied that the wide variety of by-laws and rules among associated organizations made this impracticable, and that the Clearing House could only ask that each associated group make a contribution or subscription payment to the best of its own ability.

Financial Record, Jan. 1- June 30, 1956 : The financial report as of June 30, 1956, (exclusive of the conference) was submitted by Mr. Edelsberg as follows:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House

Purpose

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House is a voluntary association of independent national organizations for the promotion of knowledge and the exchange of factual information, educational materials, opinions and ideas in the fields of civil liberties, civil rights, intellectual freedom, and other human rights. These organizations represent a wide diversity of programs . . . religious, educational, professional, labor, veterans, social and civic welfare . . . but they have a common concern for the preservation of America's constitutional rights and freedoms.

The Clearing House is the only inter-organizational agency of its type (as distinct from action groups) working on a continuing basis in the over-all area of civil rights and liberties.

Policies

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House exists solely for the development of education and the dissemination of information in its four fields. Its constitution prohibits it from adopting positions or making policy statements on any issues.

Admission to association in the Clearing House is based on two rules: An organization must be substantially interested in some specific aspect of the Clearing House program and in the protection of our fundamental individual rights; and it may become an associate only upon invitation, which is extended after recommendation by a Committee on Organizations, the Administrative Committee, and a general meeting.

The Clearing House does not speak for or bind associated organizations in any way, and no group may be designated as representing it. It does not enter into agreements with its associates, nor does it ask for any commitments from them. Organizations may take part in its activities to whatever extent they themselves choose, whether by attendance at its meetings or conferences, contributing work or materials, or assisting with its financing.

The governing body, elected annually, is the Administrative Committee, which includes the chairman; four vice chairmen, each of whom is responsible for coverage of one of the four fields of Clearing House interest; secretary, treasurer, and six other elected individuals. All of these are representatives of associated organizations. The Administrative Committee is also empowered to appoint three members-at-large without reference to their organizational membership. Clearing House chairmen to date have been E. Raymond Wilson of the Friends Committee on National Legislation; Mike M. Masaoka, Japanese American Citizens League; Paul Sifton, United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America; and Dr. Earl F. Adams, National Council of Churches.

The Clearing House is financed by the associated organizations, either through contributions or through subscription payments which cover actual costs of the informational services and materials they receive. Organizations contribute or subscribe voluntarily, in whatever amounts they themselves decide; the Clearing House does not set any dues, fees or assessments.

Program

The activities of the Clearing House include:

- Monthly meetings (except in August and September) which serve as focal points for interpretation and study of basic problems and current developments in its fields, through reports by representatives of associated organizations and through the presentation of guest speakers who are expert in specialized areas. These talks are followed by informal general discussion sessions for the elicitation of further information and for the exchange of viewpoints.

- An annual Conference on Civil Liberties, at which representatives of associated groups and other invited agencies meet together for full, free and informed inter-organizational discussion and analysis of current issues; for broad-scale sharing of opinions, programs and experiences; and for consideration of ways by which they may help to safeguard and strengthen our constitutionally-guaranteed individual rights. Every Clearing House conference has been honored by a message of greeting from the President of the United States.
- Issuing the Civil Liberties Bulletin, a publication made up of articles by organizational representatives, notes on the programs and activities of associated groups, and notes on current materials in the Clearing House fields.
- Supplementary mailings to its list of over 200 agencies of outstanding informational materials prepared by associated groups or made available by other sources, such as governmental agencies.
- Selective mailings of material of more specialized interest, sent to those groups to which it might be of particular informative value.
- Maintaining an extensive library and files on topics in its fields, which are available for consultation.
- Filling requests for information or materials on subjects in its four fields, for help in conducting programs, and for guidance to other sources of information. (Such requests come not only from associated organizations, but from other national citizens groups and local units; governmental agencies; executive departments; national, state and local officials; churches, colleges, schools and libraries; newspapers and magazines; television and radio discussion programs.)
- Making all of its services available on as wide a scale as possible, as a part of its goal of organizational and public education in its area.

The problems involved in the fields of civil rights and liberties alter from year to year, reflecting changing times and changing climates of opinion, and influenced both by domestic developments and by fluctuating international tensions, the overhanging menace of Communist imperialism, and the continuing threat of a third world war.

In its eight years of existence, the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has witnessed a steadily-increasing concern, among our great voluntary citizens' organizations, with these problems, and awareness of the importance of accurate, up-to-date information on them.

This is evidenced in part by the growth of the Clearing House itself. In 1948, representatives of 19 organizations established it in an effort to meet their own need for a continuing exchange of information and knowledge in its fields. In 1956, at its eighth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, 99 agencies were registered, and the majority of these take an active part in its year-round program.

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House hopes that it may continue to serve all responsible organizations that cherish our constitutional heritage of freedom, justice and equality under law.

"The attack (on the Bill of Rights) comes not only from without, but from our own indifference and failure of imagination . . . The pursuit of justice is not the vain pursuit of a remote abstraction; it is a continuing direction for our daily conduct . . . We will pass on a better Bill of Rights or a worse one, tarnished by neglect or burnished by growing use."

—EARL WARREN,

Chief Justice of the United States

November 2, 1956

Dear Friend:

We feel that everyone who knows the National Civil Liberties Clearing House will share our sorrow at the death of our chairman, the Rev. Dr. Earl Frederick Adams.

Dr. Adams died yesterday a few hours after he suffered a heart attack at the Washington Office of the National Council of Churches, of which he was General Director.

Funeral services will be held at the First Baptist Church, 16th and "O" Streets, N.W., at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, November 5th. Friends may call at the church on Monday morning.

His family has requested that instead of sending flowers, anyone who wishes to may make a contribution to the Church World Service, 215 Fourth Avenue, New York 3, in his memory.

Sincerely yours,

Mary Alice Baldinger

Dear Miss Baldinger:

I was glad to have your letter knocking off the two birds.

As to Bird One, I am looking forward to being at your conference, and meanwhile will expect to hear from you further about the details of the program.

As to Bird Two, we are in the process of revising and re-running the memo on pro-segregation groups in the South. That should be ready in a week or so, at which time we can supply the 350. For normal purposes, we have been charging a cost price of 5¢ per copy. I recognize that the Clearing House is a cooperative, shoe-string, operation and would waive the price if necessary. But if you have any small amounts available, a contribution toward the cost would help our somewhat frayed shoe-string.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Mr. Harold Fleming,

Dear Harold Fleming:

Do you have any objection to my trying to hit two birds with one stone? If not ---

Bird One. The Program Committee for our annual Conference is just delighted that you have promised to take part in our program on Friday, April 5, at the Hotel Statler here. I have told them of your suggestions, the day we talked on the telephone, about handling the deprivations of civil liberties involved in the intergration resistance movement. They will work it out at their meeting next Friday, and we will be in touch with you again subsequently. This letter is just a confirmation of time and place. And gratitude for your acceptance.

Bird Two. How well are you supplied with copies of the Pro-Segregation Groups in the South? If you could spare them, I would like to have 350 to send out to the Clearing House groups. It's extremely well done and extremely informative, and I know it would be veryvaluable to them.

Could you let me know about this? If we could have them, they should be mailed direct to our mailing service --

Many thanks for the check, which goes a long way toward meeting the cost of the mimeographed reports. The 350 copies were mailed last Friday, addressed as you suggested.

I'm glad to learn that the program is shaping up so well. As for my part, I'll be glad to emphasize the civil liberties issues arising from the efforts to maintain segregated schools. It does occur to me that it would take someone professionally versed in constitutional law to give a proper picture of the mass of oppressive legislation enacted by Southern states. But that is something for you and the Program Committee to decide in the light of the total concerns of the conference.

Enclosed is yet another Special Report which you might find of interest. We expect it to be of value to people who will need specific references on post-school decision developments

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Harold Fleming:

Another two-birder.

One : I am so glad that you can let us have the 350 copies of the memo- on the southern pro-segregation groups. I am also glad that you are willing to forego your regular price on them, in sympathy with our chronic lack of funds. In sympathy with yours, I am attaching our check for $10 as a toaken payment; I hope it will be satisfactory.

In case my first letter about this isn't handy, here again is the address they should be mailed to --

Two : As to the conference, the program is shaping up so well it almost ~~xxxxxx~~ scares me. I should think that within another week it will be completely jelled and we can get the programs printed and out. At the Program Committee meeting the other day I told them of your concern with the deprivations of civil liberties arising from the resistance to integration. They agree that this is an extremely important aspect, and they wonder if you will use it in the framework of your talk on education. They think the two will combine well. What do you think? Will you let me know?

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House invites you to attend its ninth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, which will be held at the Hotel Statler in Washington on Thursday and Friday, April 4 and 5.

The Clearing House conference offers associated organizations and other invited groups an opportunity to meet together for joint consideration of the status of our individual rights and liberties, and for mutual interchange and consultation on the problems that lie ahead, as well as those we face today.

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House

. . . is a voluntary association of independent national organizations for the promotion of knowledge and the exchange of factual information, educational materials, opinions and ideas in the fields of civil liberties, civil rights, intellectual freedom and other human rights.

. . . is limited both in its continuing program and its annual conferences to the promotion of education and the exchange of information in these fields. It is in no sense an action organization, and is prohibited by its constitution from adopting positions or making policy statements on any issues.

. . . aims in its Conferences on Civil Liberties to bring together representatives of its associated groups and other invited agencies for free, full and informed inter-organizational discussions and analysis of current issues, and for consideration of ways by which they may help to strengthen and preserve our constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms.

PLANS FOR THE ANNUAL CLEARING HOUSE CONFERENCE ARE NEARING COMPLETION

Program planning for the ninth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, to be held on Thursday and Friday, April 4 and 5, is almost completed. We expect to present a distinguished roster of speakers on current issues in the fields of civil rights and liberties. Among those who are already scheduled to take part in the program are Elmo Roper, public opinion analyst and Chairman of the Board of the Fund for the Republic; Dudley B. Bonsal, chairman of the New York City Bar Association's Special Committee on the Federal Loyalty-Security Program; Warren Olney III, Assistant Attorney General; Harold Fleming, executive director of the Southern Regional Council; Charles Abrams, head of the New York State Commission on Discrimination; Frank Simpson, executive secretary of the Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights; Patrick Murphy Malin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union; and Congressman Richard Bolling of Missouri.

This year the conference will be held at the Hotel Statler. With more room at our disposal, we will be able to accommodate a larger number of participants, and organizations may, if they wish, invite representatives of their locals or affiliates to attend, in addition to their national offices. We expect that a larger number of agencies will be represented, since this Clearing House conference is being held in cooperation with the Industrial Security Conference which met in Washingtin in 1955.

The conference program and registration forms will be sent out in mid-February.

Serving on the Program Committee are Kenneth M. Birkhead, American Veterans Committee, and Dr. Ralph F. Fuchs, American Association of University Professors, co-chairmen; Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and chairman of the Clearing House; Kenneth Meiklejohn, International Ladies Garment Workers Union; Martha Mills, League of Women Voters; Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Boris Shishkin, AFL-CIO; and Benjamin D. Segal, trade union consultant, the Fund for the Republic, and president of Local 189, American Federation of Teachers.

SENATE AND HOUSE GET PROPOSALS FOR IMMIGRATION LAW REVISIONS

The tragic plight of the Hungarian refugees has dramatized the need for reform of our basic immigration laws and has resulted in a spate of congressional activity. While it is too early to predict what Congress will do in the immigration field, some liberalization of our immigration laws, as well as some refugee-relief legislation, can be expected during the 85th Congress.

President Eisenhower, in his State of the Union message, called for prompt enactment of legislation to regularize the status in the United States of the Hungarian refugees brought here under the "parole" provision of the McCarran-Walter Act. The President also stated that he would shortly send up a special message recommending changes in the basic immigration law that are necessary in the light of our world responsibilities. The President is expected to send up this special message some time in the week of January 28.

Senator Watkins and Congressman Keating have already reintroduced last year's Administration proposals. First introduced last session, the bills provide for drastic revision of the McCarran-Walter Act, even though they do not specifically depart from the national origins quota system. They call for revision of the overall immigration quota, from 154,000 to some 220,000, and provide for regional pooling of unused quotas, as well as a substantial number of procedural reforms.

Also aimed at "modernizing" immigration law in line with the President's wishes is a bill sponsored jointly on January 25 by five Republican Senators -- Ives and Javits of New York, Smith and Case of New Jersey, and Saltonstall of Massachusetts. This would bring to 250,000 the total of immigrants to be admitted, and according to Senator Ives would end "discrimination against people from Southeastern Europe" and "wipe out procedural injustices" in the present law.

A more comprehensive bill has been introduced in the House by Congressman Celler, joined by 27 Democrats. The Celler bill retains the basic features of the omnibus Lehman-Celler bill introduced in the last two Congresses, but departs from the Lehman bill in two respects. It would place the administration and responsibility over immigration and naturalization matters in the Department of Justice, in the hands of a Director of a Bureau of Immigration and Citizenship, who would be given the rank of an Assistant Attorney General. (The Lehman bill placed administration of the law in the hands of a Commission on Immigration and Naturalization.)

The second change relates to the manner of selecting immigrants for admission to this country. Like the Lehman bill, the Celler bill abolishes the discriminatory national origins quota system, but instead of calculating the quota ceiling on the basis of the 1950 census, the Celler bill provides for a total annual quota of 250,000, based on the average number of immigrants actually admitted into the United States within the last decade. These 250,000 quota visas are to be distributed among the five following categories: 1) family unification; 2) occupation; 3) refugee asylum; 4) national interest; and 5) resettlement. No more than 15 per cent of the visas in each category may be issued to the inhabitants of any single country. Each year, under the Celler bill, the President would be required to submit to Congress the proposed breakdown for each of the five categories, and the proposed allocation would go into effect, unless Congress disapproved by a concurrent resolution.

Congressman Walter, Chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee, has promised to hold hearings on the Celler bill. In the meantime, Walter has opened up an investigation of the Hungarian refugee program to determine whether any Communists have slipped into the country under the program, and also to determine whether the parole provision of the McCarran-Walter Act was designed to cover a situation such as the mass admission of 15,000 Hungarian refugees.

Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

CIVIL RIGHTS HEARINGS ARE SCHEDULED IN THE HOUSE

Civil rights bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress.

In the Senate, Democrats have proposed bills covering the twelve points set forth in the Truman Committee report of 1947. Some Republicans have joined in sponsoring these several bills. Senator Dirksen and some 30 Republican co-sponsors introduced the Eisenhower package which passed the House by a more than 2-to-1 majority in the summer of 1956. All these bills have been referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, where similar proposals died because of filibuster and inaction in the 84th Congress. Senator Thomas C. Hennings (D., Mo.) is the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, of which the members are Senators Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.); Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.); Sam J. Ervin, Jr., (D., N. C.); William Langer (R., N. D.); Arthur V. Watkins (R., Utah); and Roman L. Hruska (R., Neb.). However, Committee Chairman Eastland has thus far failed to refer the bills to the Subcommittee.

In the House, many measures have been introduced, with the Judiciary Committee's Chairman, Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) and the ranking Republican member, Kenneth B. Keating of New York, among the leaders in sponsorship. The bills are before Subcommittee No. 5 of the Judiciary Committee, made up of Democrats Celler, chairman, and Rodino of New Jersey, Rogers of Colorado, and Holtzman of New York, and Republicans Keating, McCulloch of Ohio and Miller of New York.

This Subcommittee has announced four days of hearings, February 4-7. In announcing the hearings they asked those organizations and witnesses that appeared before the Committee in the previous Congress to forego personal appearances and submit any additions or modifications of their earlier testimony in writing. It is expected that the full House Judiciary Committee will approve by mid-February a bill similar to H. R. 627, 84th Congress, which passed the House last Summer.

Supporters of civil rights both in and out of Congress are wary of rumored proposals for compromise civil rights legislation. This uneasiness results from the fact that the compromises seem to be originating with long-time opponents of equality legislation.

Rules Change Proposals

Senators Douglas of Illinois and Ives of New York have taken the lead in a bipartisan block in presenting a proposal to amend Rule 22 of the Senate to permit cloture in two days by two-thirds of the Senators present and voting, and/or after 15 days of debate by an affirmative vote of one-half of the entire membership of the Senate, plus one (49 as the Senate is now constituted). Indications are that this proposal will receive substantial backing by civil rights advocates.

The two Party leaders in the Senate, Johnson and Knowland, are the principal sponsors of a proposal which would (1) permit cloture on all questions by two-thirds of those present and voting, and (2) specifically add to the rules a provision that they carry over from one Congress to the next and that they not be amendable except under procedures provided in the rules. This second proviso is an apparent attempt to overcome the effects of Vice President Nixon's opinion, presented to the Senate on January 4, 1957, that: Each new Senate has the constitutional right to adopt its rules, and any rule which would interfere with this right, specifically Section 3 of Rule 22, is unconstitutional and of no force or effect.

-- John J. Gunther,
Americans for Democratic Action.

THE BRICKER AMENDMENT IS RE-INTRODUCED

S. J. Res. 3 is the 1957 version of the amendment which Senator Bricker introduced in the 82nd and 84th Congresses. The new wording of the resolution follows:

"Sec. 1. A provision of a treaty or other international agreement not made in pursuance of this Constitution shall have no force or effect. This section shall not apply to treaties made prior to the effective date of this Constitution.

"Sec. 2. A treaty or other international agreement shall have legislative effect within the United States as a law thereof only through legislation, except to the extent that the Senate shall provide affirmatively, in its resolution advising and consenting to a treaty, that a treaty shall have legislative effect.

"Sec. 3. An international agreement other than a treaty shall have legislative effect within the United States as a law thereof only through legislation valid in the absence of such an international agreement.

"Sec. 4. On the question of advising and consenting to a treaty, the vote shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the Senators voting for and against shall be entered on the journal of the Senate."

Much of the 1957 version of the Bricker Amendment repeats the language of S. J. Res. 1 of 1955. A report on this earlier version, made by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York is entitled "A Continued Defense of the Constitution Against the Bricker Proposals". Copies of it may be obtained at the Bar Association office, 42 West 44th Street, New York, or at the Washington office of the A.A.U.N., 1420 New York Avenue, N. W. Reference is also made to the Congressional Record for Monday, January 7, 1957, where Senator Bricker (at page 259) explains his amendment.

Generally, one detects retreat from a direct exposition of many of Senator Bricker's previously-announced objectives to an attempt to obtain somewhat the same effect by legislative interpretation. In Section 1, Senator Bricker has inserted a sentence stating that his amendment would not invalidate the treaty ending the Revolutionary War (a criticism that had been directed at previous versions of the amendment). It appears that passage of the amendment as presently worded would make necessary a review of all treaties concluded since 1787. Senator Bricker has stated that "Section 2 is intended to be prospective and also retroactive to the effective date of the original Constitution."

The Senate Judiciary Committee's standing subcommittee on constitutional amendments, which would be the first body to consider S. J. Res. 3, is composed of Senators Kefauver (chairman), Hennings, Eastland, Langer, and Dirksen.

American Association for the United Nations.

NAACP IS UNDER FIRE
IN EIGHT STATES

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, principal protagonist in efforts to effect public school desegregation, has been the object of special legislation, court action or official restraint in eight states, according to a Southern School News survey.

The NAACP participated in the original Brown case and has initiated or become involved in all but a few of the school entry cases settled or under litigation in the 17 southern and border states having statutory segregation. This has brought legislation described as "punitive" or generally circumscribing NAACP activity. In three states the organization has been barred from doing business. Other approaches against the NAACP has included investigations launched by legislative or administrative agencies and direct legal attacks seeking to enjoin further operations under new or existing laws.

Injunctions in Effect

Temporary injunctions restraining the NAACP from operation are in effect in Alabama, Louisiana and Texas. In Alabama, where the NAACP announced its dissolution, the state supreme court has upheld a $100,000 contempt of court fine against it for refusing to produce certain records sought in connection with a suit to drive it out of the state. The suit was brought under state laws requiring that out-of-state corporations doing business in the state register with the secretary of state.

A 1924 law designed to curb the Ku Klux Klan -- by requiring that lists of membership be filed by all organizations operating in the state except the National Guard and churches -- was the basis on which the NAACP was enjoined in Louisiana. After a state appeals court decision raised some question as to the jurisdiction of the lower state court in restraining the organization, efforts to reactivate were made last month. However, with meetings threatened by police raids, spokesmen for the organization announced the group was still inactive and was contemplating compliance with the law.

Officer Jailed

And in Georgia, an NAACP branch president was jailed briefly on a contempt charge and a $25,000 fine was levied against the organization pending submission of records sought by the state in a tax investigation. The NAACP, however, has not been barred from operation in Georgia, though legislation for this purpose is under consideration.

Membership in the NAACP by government employes, including teachers, is unlawful in Louisiana and South Carolina.

Investigations of the NAACP have been launched by legislatures or state government officials in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Texas, and in Mississippi the organization presumably is under surveillance by the State Sovereignty Commission, a "watchdog" body which reports on the activities of pro-integrationists.

In South Carolina, a legislative committee has been investigating the activities of the NAACP on the campus of South Carolina State College for Negroes.

Virginia, North Carolina and Texas have laws requiring registration of groups seeking to influence legislation. In North Carolina, the NAACP initiated a test suit against the attorney general in respect to statutes requiring registration of out-of-state corporations and lobbying groups.

A number of states have adopted legislation bearing on alleged NAACP activity, including barratry (solicitation of law suits). At its 1956 session the Virginia General Assembly passed seven such measures, including one which creates a legislative committee to investigate the activities and tax-exempt status of organizations seeking to influence, encourage or promote litigation involving racial relations. (Copies of the Virginia laws are available from the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, on request.)

The validity of these measures has been attacked in federal court actions brought in behalf of the NAACP and its Legal Defense and Education Fund.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE SECURITY PROGRAM:
RECENT PROPOSALS

Cole v. Young, 351 U.S. 536, handed down on June 11, 1956, in a 6-3 decision by Mr. Justice Harlan, held that the Eisenhower Executive Order #10450 on Federal Employee Security was not properly based on Public Law #733 in terms of its application to non-sensitive positions.

The Court pointed out that P.L. 733 authorized dismissals only upon a determination that such dismissals are "necessary and advisable in the interests of the national security." The Court then stated that the term "national security" was intended to include only those activities of the Government directly concerned with the protection of the nation from internal subversion or foreign aggression. The Supreme Court concluded that only Government employees in positions sensitive to our national security were intended to be covered. Therefore, the Court said, President Eisenhower did not have the authority under P.L. 733 to extend the Security Order to all federal employees regardless of the sensitivity of their positions.

Soon after the Court handed down its decision in the Cole case, legislation was proposed in the 84th Congress designed to overrule the effect of the Court's decision. In the Senate, Senators Joseph McCarthy, James Eastland, and Karl Mundt introduced proposals which would have amended P.L. 733 by simply expressing the intent that nothing in the law should preclude its coverage of all Federal employees. On the House side, Congressman Francis Walter sponsored a bill which would have amended P.L. 733 more drastically than the Senate proposals. It would have equated the term national security with national welfare, as opposed to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the original Congressional definition in terms of subversion and aggression. Congressman Edward H. Rees, also impelled by the Cole decision, introduced a bill which would have separated the concept of security from loyalty, setting up a loyalty program with considerable procedural rights for the employee. Legislation along similar lines can be expected to be introduced in the 85th Congress.

These proposals present an interesting dilemma to those who are desirous of maintaining a security program as broad as the Eisenhower one.

In terms of the Cole case, the Senate proposals may not, and probably do not, contain language sufficiently specific to express a congressional intent to overcome the Supreme Court's definition of national security. The Walter bill does this, but, in so doing, of necessity it has had to adopt language which stretches the meaning of security to welfare. Such a definition virtually repeals the long statutory limitation upon the Executive power to hire and fire in the form of various Civil Service statutes.

Employees in non-sensitive positions, as defined by the Court in Cole v. Young, are subject to the suitability regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission, one of which provides that if a reasonable doubt exists as to an employee's loyalty, he might be unsuitable. The Civil Service Commission is presently re-evaluating its loyalty-suitability regulations.

Years of intimate contact with the various employee programs has convinced the American Civil Liberties Union that much of the abuse in their administration results from the invalidity of initial determinations made by the security officer. The Union often encounters this kind of abuse elsewhere in the administrative process, i.e., the permitting of the administrative officer, acting quasi-judicially, to base much of his determination on personal predilection, rather than on prescribed factors.

ACLU Recommendations

The Union has recently recommended that when a question of loyalty or security is involved in considering suitability or fitness for government employment, the person making the decision that charges be preferred against an employee or prospective employee on such ground should be required to set forth his determination in a written, reasoned decision, relating the evidence to specified criteria. He should be required to set forth a fair summary of the case, including all the evidence in support and rebuttal of his findings, omitting only security-classified evidence. Names of parties need not be mentioned. The form of the decision would be similar to those made in the immigration field, with the use of letters to signify people.

The requirement of fully writing a determination and the bases therefor by the security officer and making such determination a matter of public disclosure would result in a safeguard against the worst abuse of any administrative process -- unreviewable and undisclosable decision making.

In addition there is an absence of training for security officials in the correct assembling and evaluation of materials considered as 'evidence.' The Union believes that this results in many situations in which the individual employee is subject to an unfair and biased decision, and is one of the reasons for the severe criticism leveled at the program. The Union has suggested that this problem could be relieved by a clear-cut instruction such as the following:

"All government agencies should institute what the Department of Defense has already authorized, an intensive training and refresher program for all investigators, security officials, hearing officers, and all others having anything to do with loyalty or security programs, in order that they may more accurately assemble and evaluate the material which may be under consideration as 'evidence.'"

-- Irving Ferman,
American Civil Liberties Union.

HOME RULE COMMITTEE
EXPANDS ITS PROGRAM

The Washington Home Rule Committee, for several years the leading force in the movement for local self-government in the District of Columbia, has recently expanded its program to include in its objectives an amendment to the Constitution to permit the people in the District to vote for President and Vice President. It has done so because Home Rule supporters have always favored the vote for President although they believe that logically local self-government should come first. The vote for President is also endorsed by virtually every other local group interested in suffrage.

Since the new Congress started on January 3, 1957, several measures have been introduced to provide one form or other of suffrage for the District. Congressman Wier has introduced the Home Rule bill. Congressman Auchincloss has sponsored the bill to give the District simply a non-voting delegate in the House. Both he and Congressman Broyhill have introduced resolutions to amend the Constitution to provide for the vote for President and Vice President. The Home Rule bill will be introduced in the Senate in the near future under the auspices of a number of Senators.

To avoid confusion these various proposals should be separately identified. The Home Rule bill, which has three times passed the Senate but never the House, provides for an elected local legislature, i.e., a city council which would pass all local laws, including tax laws and appropriation laws relating to the District of Columbia and thus relieve Congress of that burden. It also provides for an elected school board and an elected non-voting delegate in the U.S. House of Representatives. Finally, it provides for a mayor appointed by the President. Such a mayor-city council local government would give the District full local self government and would let the District citizens deal directly with their own problems by electing their own officials. The Home Rule bill will probably go through the Senate again fairly easily during 1957, but the House District Committee, which in past years has prevented the bill from reaching the House floor for debate, may continue to be a roadblock.

The proposed vote for President is entirely consistent with Home Rule. There is no conflict between the two proposals. However, the vote for President requires an amendment to the Constitution, because only States are entitled to electoral college representation and the District is not a State. The proposed amendment would not make the District a State but would give the District the same electoral college representation to which it would be entitled if it were a State. There is no serious opposition to this proposal, but in past years it has been tied to a proposal for national voting representation in Congress, i.e., Senators and Representatives from the District, to which there has been great opposition in Congress. Senators are reluctant to dilute their strength by enlarging the national legislative body. With united community support the proposal for the vote for President may obtain the necessary 2/3rd vote of each House of Congress, but even then it would require ratification by the legislatures of 3/4th of the States within 7 years in order to become an amendment to the Constitution. At best this is a long-haul proposition whereas Home Rule requires only an act of Congress.

-- Philip B. Brown,
Washington Home Rule Committee.

EXPULSION OF THE JEWS FROM EGYPT

The adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on December 10, 1948, was a historic moment in man's long effort to give universal legal expression to the doctrine of human equality. It is a curious irony of history that it was Egypt which in November 1946 proposed a United Nations resolution to the effect that it was in the interests of humanity to put an immediate end to religious and racial persecution and discrimination, and to call on governments to exert every effort toward that end. By December 1956, ten years later, the Egyptian government was violating every article in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by officially undertaking a campaign to uproot the Jews of Egypt.

According to available information, there are approximately 50,000 Jews in Egypt. 15,000 of these are stateless, though they have been living in Egypt for generations; 16,000 are nationals of other countries. As of this time, Egypt has ordered thousands of Jews to leave the country within a period ranging from seven to thirty days. The details of the program are being administered under the direction of the State Security Cadres, an agency of the Egyptian Ministry of Interior, which includes more than 6,000 former Nazis who have assumed Egyptianized names.

About 6,000 refugees have reached lands of freedom within the past few weeks. According to their reports and the reports of other reliable agencies, the property of Jews, who have lived in Egypt for generations and who had built up substantial businesses, has been confiscated or sequestered by the Egyptian government. Bank accounts of Jews are frozen and no transaction with bonds or similar papers is permitted. Owners and managers come to their offices to find their businesses sealed. The names of all Jewish lawyers have been struck from the lists of the bar. Jewish schools have been closed.

In addition, the Egyptian government is conducting a subtle campaign of psychological intimidation under pressure of which Jews are terrorized into committing themselves "voluntarily" to leave the country, and in the case of those who are citizens, to relinquish their citizenship.

Of the 967 refugees who arrived in Naples in January 1957, almost all had spent weeks and even months in concentration camps and prisons. Many reported brutal police methods to extort written pledges that they would never return. In addition to the sequestration of property orders, there has been a systematic impoverishment of the great mass of Egyptian Jewry depriving them of the means of livelihood. Firms employing Jews have been requested to discharge them and have acted accordingly. Jews have been dismissed without compensation from public enterprises and services in which they were employed. Hostages have been taken from nearly all Jewish families to deter those who escape from reporting the facts.

Israel's Foreign Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, has sent a formal complaint to the United Nations Secretary General charging the Nasser government with violating the Geneva Conference of 1949 providing for the protection of civilians in times of war, as well as violating the United Nations Convention on Genocide and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to which Egypt is a signator. It was charged that the guaranties of the right to life, liberty and security of person, to nationality, to own property, fundamental rights of human beings and recognized as such by every civilized government, have become a scrap of paper to the present rulers of Egypt.

Human society has not yet reached a level where the guaranty of fundamental human rights is universally enforceable. Nevertheless, human society has not yet become so universally cynical that a concerted expression of moral indignation of the nations of the world is ineffectual. If the international community remains silent in the face of Egypt's treatment of Jews, all its declarations and resolutions can hardly be considered more than pious expressions. The civilized peoples of the world cannot afford to sit idly by while Egypt follows the disastrous pattern of Hitler. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights must be universally observed and appropriate steps to that end should be taken by the United Nations.

Hadassah.

RACIAL DESIGNATIONS ARE ENDED BY ARMY

Military orders issued by the Department of the Army will no longer contain racial designations, Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D., Wis.) announced on January 18. The Congressman said he had been informed by Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense Stephen S. Jackson that the use of written designations -- such as "Negro" and "Caucasian" -- to identify the race of personnel listed in Army orders would be abandoned beginning February 1.

The announcement followed a correspondence in which Congressman Reuss first protested the use of such designations, in a letter to Secretary of Defense Wilson in August of last year, as not being in keeping with the spirit of integration in the Armed Services, and said that "despite official policies of non-discrimination, their continued use obviously makes much easier evasion of such policies."

Although the Defense Department at first replied that "unintentional degrees of segregation could conceivably result" if the designations were not in use, it subsequently informed the Congressman that the Army was re-evaluating its policy, and the decision for the Feburary 1 change of policy was apparently the result. Rep. Reuss called this "a great step forward in insuring that there will remain no vestige of racial discrimination against any American serving his country in the Army."

American Veterans Committee.

ORGANIZATIONAL PROGRAMS AND PEOPLE

Calling the guarantee of full civil rights for every American the "number one civil liberties issue before the nation," the American Civil Liberties Union has announced a major organizational effort in the South to provide new support for the elimination of discrimination. Focus of the effort, according to ACLU Director Patrick Murphy Malin, will be the building of a larger corps of volunteer lawyers to be available promptly to handle all kinds of civil liberties cases for all groups in the community. Special attention will also be given to establishing new ACLU units in Southern States and localities.

The American Library Association is inviting suggestions for the ALA Liberty and Justice Book Awards, which it has established with the aid of a grant from the Fund for the Republic in order to draw special attention to books which make distinguished contributions in this field. Three award categories -- each with a prize of $5000 -- have been set up for books published in 1956 and 1957: 1) Contemporary problems and affairs (non-fiction); 2) History and biography (non-fiction); and 3) Imaginative literatures (fiction, poetry, or published drama). Areas of interest covered may include freedom of speech, press and association; tolerance for individual social, religious and cultural differences; equal opportunity; the Bill of Rights; censorship; restrictions on personal liberty; the anti-libertarian threats of dictatorship and totalitarianism; pressures for conformity. Suggestions for the 1956 awards, which will be presented in late April, should be sent to Robert B. Downs, Chairman, ALA Intellectual Freedom Committee, University of Illinois Library, Urbana, Ill.

George Mitchell, who retired from the post of director of the Southern Regional Council in mid-January, plans to leave in the early Spring to spend some time in Scotland. Succeeding him as the SRC's director is Harold Fleming, formerly the assistant director, and co-author of the recently-published summary of progress towards equality, "Integration, North and South." (Incidentally, Mr. Fleming will be one of the speakers at this year's Clearing House Conference.) Mr. Mitchell will be honored at a farewell luncheon to be given at the International Student House in Washington on March 4 by Local 189, American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO. Clearing House associates who would like to attend should telephone the Local's president, Ben Segal, at STerling 3-2194.

The personal story of Mike Masaoka of the Japanese American Citizens League was presented on NBC-TV's "This Is Your Life" in early January. The program stressed Mike's outstanding role in Nisei life, his leadership during the mass evacuation of persons of Japanese ancestry from the Pacific coast in 1942, his help in achieving the re-opening of Selective Service to Nisei, his war record as the first volunteer with the famed 442nd Combat Team, and his post-war work for the Japanese and Japanese-Americans in Washington. Appearing on the program, along with Mike's wife Etsu and their baby daughter Midori, were Brig. Gen. Charles W. Pence (ret.), who commanded the 442nd, and New York Attorney Edward J. Ennis, who was director of the Alien Enemy Control Unit of the Justice Department at the outset of the war. Mike was chairman of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House in 1952-53, and Mr. Ennis is a former member of the Clearing House Advisory Board.

The Wilsons are living at the Quaker Center in Tokyo, where Miriam is teaching part-time. In Ray's absence, Wilmer Cooper is directing the FCNL's work here.

This year the National Council of Jewish Women, which has been carrying on its "Freedom Campaign" since 1952, is placing its program emphasis on Censorship, and has recently published two pieces of material on the subject -- a dramatic skit and a discussion guide entitled "Censorship: Safeguard or Threat?" The guide's preface outlines the purpose of the program and the material:

"In the past several years, a pattern of caution has emerged in many fields of expression and communication in the nation. Although the intense fear and mistrust which prevailed at the peak of 'McCarthyism' has passed, the atmosphere of conformity has not yet been dissipated. And it is not limited to the field of political ideas. It has brought with it an upsurge of censorship activity, as well as a mushrooming of self-appointed volunteer groups who have set themselves up as arbiters of public taste and morals. The discussion guide is designed to carry forward one more step Council's campaign of vigilance against any attempts to cut away at the right to know -- the right to free inquiry and critical thought essential to democracy.

"The discussion guide examines some current trends and ways of censorship in America today . . . turns the spotlight on some of the channels of mass communication and expression . . . takes a look at recent and continuing efforts to narrow these channels."

The American Book Publishers Council, American Civil Liberties Union, American Jewish Committee and the Freedom Agenda Program have ordered copies for distribution, indicating their feeling that the pamphlet is a significant contribution to discussion of this subject. The materials are available from the National Council of Jewish Women, 1 West 47th Street, New York 36: Attention Miss Helen Raebeck.

Dear Mary Alice:

Our running into each other was indeed a fine coincidence, though it is too bad we got swept away in all the confusion.

We have sent Bill Oliver twelve copies of the special report. If any more requests come in, just send them along to us.

The outline for the coming conference looks good, and I am fully satisfied with the title you had given my talk.

Until April 5th, best regards and good wishes.

Mr. Harold Fleming

63 Auburn Avenue N.E.

Dear Harold:

I still feel pleased about the surprised way we ran into each other at the Fund for the Republic dinner last week, but I am sorry we didn't really have a chance to talk to each other. Perhaps we can get together next time you are up here.

Meanwhile, I am receiving a number of requests for "Pro-Segregation Groups in the South". I have been able to fill them to date but now we are clear out except for a couple of file copies. If any more come in, will it be all right to transmit them to you, as I am taking the liberty of doing with the attached from Bill Oliver of the UAW?

To change the subject, I mentioned to the program committee the question you raised about needing a constitutional lawyer to discuss the various Southern restrictions on civil liberties at the conference. However, the members felt that they preferred to leave this in your hands, to handle as you may see fit. The title they selected for your presentation is Resistance to the Supreme Court's School Decision. That, they thought, should give you enough latitude to bring in practically anything you want to.

I am attaching a carbon of my copy for the printer covering the Friday meetings, so that you can see, too, the way the program for that day shapes up; it may be helpful in planning your own talk. Ben Segal says he believes that Boyd Payton's talk will deal primarily with the problems of labor.

Looking forward to seeing you again, I am

RECEIVED MAR 11 1957

Dear Harold:

By now you should have received both the program for our conference and a letter inquiring about Southern Regional Council publications for distribution at it for our literature table.

I thought you might like one or two extra copies of the program for your own files, and am enclosing them.

Personally, I think it is a might provocative program.

Now about this literature question : I had hoped, that the Fund for the Republic might come through with copies of "Integration North and South" on a rather large scale, as they did last year with the "Freedom Reader". However, today I have a letter from a fellow named Edward Hall in their Distribution Department outlining the materials they can send us - and all I get on "Integration North and South" is a promotion circular giving prices and the place to order it. I would love to have a couple of hundred copies for the conference, and naturally (the Clearing House being what it is) I would like to have them free. Would you have any suggestions to make on whether this could be achieved?

Incidentally, the Fund is sending us two hundred copies of "What's Happening in School Integration". I thought you should know about this.

One last query : our attendance committee wonders whether staff people or representatives of the Human Rights Councils in the nearby states should not be invited to come to the conference. If you like this idea, would you send me the names and addresses of those to whom you think we might write?

Thanks so much for all your help,

Sincerely,

Received
~~CHECKED~~ MAR 8 1957

Dear Mr. Fleming:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House is currently completing plans for its ninth annual Conference on Civil Liberties, to be held here on April 4 and 5.

Arrangements are being made for distribution at the conference of key pieces of literature in the areas of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, international human rights and related issues. We know that your organization has issued some excellent materials, and we think you might like to have some of them brought to the attention of our conferees.

If so, we will appreciate your sending a maximum of 150 copies each of cost-free literature. We will not be able to undertake distribution of materials for which a charge must be collected. However, if you have bibliographies of the publications you offer for sale, we will be glad to include these with the other literature.

We ask that your pertinent materials be mailed so as to arrive on or before March 25, to ---

National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

As you probably know, our literature tables have become a very important part of Clearing House conferences, notable for the variety and value of the materials they present. We are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the attention of this wide inter-organizational audience.

With gratitude for your cooperation,

Sincerely,

Dear Mary Alice:

Thanks for the copies of the program and for your last letter.

I agree whole-heartedly that the program is provocative. The word that popped into my mind when I first saw it was "impressive" -- so much so that I wondered what I was doing there.

I am glad that the Fund is supplying the Public Affairs Pamphlet. All I can suggest about Integration North and South is that I write Ed Reid at the Fund and raise the question with him again. This I will do.

We would be very glad to have you invite representatives of the state councils on human relations affiliated with SRC. Enclosed is a list of state offices.

Dear Mr. Edelsberg:

To those attending the ninth annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, I send greetings.

By bringing together religious leaders of all faiths, and citizens concerned with human rights from all areas of our national life, your conference provides a splendid forum. With accurate information and a determined sense of social responsibility I am sure your discussion will bring added meaning to the American heritiage of freedom.

Best wishes for another successful conference.

conspiracy, such as military security, international security (the maintenance of our close relations with our allies), internal security and, as the most important, the continuance of our free economy with initiative and sincere devotion. Any fair personnel program must be considered, he said, in the light of these other elements so that we do what is necessary, and only what is necessary, to complement the picture of national security.

National security required the portection of the classified information which industry must use from disloyal and indiscreet persons. How information is classified, and how much should be classified, are problems to be considered in administration of the program. Flexibility should be maintained in the program through supervision and review of its operation.

The Committee recommended in its report that these considerations be met by the appointment of a Director of Personnel and Information Security, responsible to the President, to supervise and conduct a continuous review of the various programs and the procedures for the classification of information. It also recommended changing the standard now used in this program so that clearance decisions would be based on many factors, including not only the individual's associations but his positive contribution, if any, to the interests of national security. Mr. Bonsal suggested that the administration of the program would be helped by establishing training courses for security personnel, who should be well grounded in basic constitutional and legal principles, the relative reliability of various kinds of evidence, the nature of Communism and the techniques employed by the Communists in the U. S. Some training is already being given to personnel administering this program.

As to procedural changes, Mr. Bonsal suggested that screening boards include at least one lawyer, and one member whose only Government employment is his work on the board; that where it is not practicable to transfer an individual during disposition of his case; and that the Government reimburse an individual who is ultimately cleared for reasonable counsel fees incurred by him in obtaining his clearance. He urged that one member of each hearing board be a lawyer and that one member be drawn from private life, and that screening boards and hearing boards should be authorized to subpoena witnesses both for the Government and for the employee. All witnesses should be made available for cross-examination except for regularly employed undercover agents. In the case of such an agent, the head of his department should certify that his identification would be detrimental to the interests of the national security. Such a certificate would be accompanied by data to aid the board in evaluating the evidence given by the agent, including a statement as to whether the information was first-hand knowledge or hearsay. In all cases the board should make available to the employee the substance of all evidence given by unnamed witnesses. In weighing the evidence, all boards should be required to take the lack of opportunity for confrontation and cross examination into account.

The Program in Action

George MacClain, Special Assistant and Legal Adviser to the Director of the Defense Department's Office of Industrial Personnel Security Review, quoted the following statistics in order to place the Industrial Personnel Security Program in proper perspective: Today the work force in the U. S. subject to the program is 17,000,000. During the eight-year period since 1949, the total number of all clearances granted has been only about 3,000,000. Between July, 1953 and March, 1957 less than 3,000 cases have involved derogatory information sufficiently serious to require consideration by a screening board. Of these cases 2,210 were processed under the earlier program from July, 1953 to April, 1955; 517 came up under the present program, between April, 1955 and July, 1956; the remaining 202 came up between July, 1956 and February, 1957.

Almost all these cases have been finally settled: 692 were closed without decision, principally because the individual left his job before screening board action was taken; 1,299 resulted in clearances, and 886 resulted in denial or revocation of clearance.

The Program is concerned solely with determining who shall have access to the Nation's defense secrets. Since it is not the Program's purpose to restrict a worker's freedom in choosing a job or to regulate an employer's selection and use of employees, it does not go into action until the worker has accepted a job and his employer has already selected him for work requiring a clearance. The Defense Department tries to avoid making unnecessary clearances by routine on-the-spot plant inspections to analyze the conditions which cause a particular company to request a clearance. If the inspection discloses that clearance is not necessary, no action is undertaken.

Procedures and Safeguards

Describing the course of a clearance investigation, Mr. MacLain noted the safeguards to the individual at each step. A Screening Board of three members and staff first examines the case to determine if there is sufficient reliable information in the file at that time to support a decision. If not, further investigation, a written interragatory or an interview may be used. The individual need not respond to an interragatory but the advantages of doing so are explained to him. The same is true of the interview, which is arranged at his convenience, and at which he may be accompanied by legal counsel. Information gathered by both these techniques is added to the individual's file. A verbatim transcript of the interview is furnished to him, and considered by the Screening Board. The Screening Board may grant clearance after it has the information it feels is needed. If it does not grant clearance, the Board prepares a Statement of Reasons and sends it with a supporting memorandum to the Director of the Program, who reviews and analyses every case sent him. The Statement of Reasons, which is always accompanied by a Notice of Suspension of Clearance, is never made available to anyone outside the necessary official channels, other than to the individual concerned and his counsel, without the individual's express written consent. He himself is free to show the statement to anyone he wishes. Copies of the Notice of Suspension are sent to the appropriate security agency and to the employer with a letter stating that the case is under consideration.

The individual's reply to the Statement of Reasons goes directly to the Director, who sends it, with the file, to a Hearing Board. The individual is encouraged to ask for a hearing, but he has a choice of appearing or not, as he chooses. If he makes no reply to the Statement, clearance is denied without further action.

When a live hearing is to be held the Hearing Board makes available to the individual as much of the derogatory information as possible without violating security considerations. This Board is required to try to secure the appearance of as many witnesses as possible who have given relevant derogatory information, and to assist the individual, on his request, by issuing invitations to witnesses identified by him. If witnesses cannot appear, the Board accepts depositions, affidavits or written replies to interrogatories. The Hearing Board, after completing action on the case, returns the complete file with its decision to the Director; it does not announce its own decision. The Director again reviews the case and can return it to the Hearing Board for more information. If the Board's determination has been reached by a split vote or if the Director is not satisfied with the Hearing Board's findings, the case must be referred by the Director to the Review Board. The Review Board makes the final decision and announces it to the individual. If clearance is denied the individual is furnished with a statement of the findings on which it was made.

Summing up, Mr. MacClain said that decisions are based on at least one very careful collective judgement and usually on two such collective judgements by successive Boards. Not infrequently a series of three such collective judgements are involved. The principle involved in the judgements, he said, is that stated in a quotation from Wilbur M. Brucker, now Secretary of the Army, formerly General Counsel of the Defense Department: "We must be mighty careful to see that no communist or subversive gets into a place where he can do any damage or give precious information to our enemies . . . On the other hand, we must be equally careful to see that the sacred rights of each citizen are respected and that no one is unfairly treated in granting or (denying) . . . security clearance for access to classified United States information . . ."

Panel Presentations and Discussion

Opening the panel presentation, Mr. Dillon said that the American people want a strong security system, that they consider the Industrial Security program good; and that their judgement is usually good; but he questioned the cost -- in the sacrifice of individual liberty and in billions of dollars -- of our effort to achieve the utmost in national security. He noted that there are twenty-two criteria for denial of clearances listed in the Security Program, and remarked on the difficulty of applying them fairly. The greatest weakness of the Security Program, he believes, is its failure to recognize the fierceness of most American's loyalty to their country.

Mr. Shapiro said that the Industrial Personnel Security Program is one of the three best run and administered in the field today. Technically he saw two problems in this program: (1) Coverage - to what extend should it be extended? (2) Substantive rights, which include the problem of confrontation of the accused by his accuser, and the problem of the man who is economically destroyed because, having been fired during probation, he can't get another job.

Mr. Rovner declared that the Department of Defense is supporting moves to extend the program. He said that employees denied security clearance cannot long continue to work in the defense plants, even though they have been transferred to work where clearance is not needed. Any informer can remain anonymous if he wants to, he added. He cited as defects in the appeal part of the program: There is no appeal from decisions of the Review Board; there is no written decision from which to appeal. This program has led to the reinstatement of the labor spy, he said, and the employer has been encouraged to develop an investigation system of his own. Only employers can initiate a request for clearance; unions have asked that this provision be revised, but no revision has been made. Unions have been making efforts to advise their locals to aid members involved in security cases, and have been trying to educate their members along this line.

In the question period there was some agreement that the general public feels safer because of the existence of the security programs. In response to questions, Mr. MacClain said that the administrators of the program always try to find a rational basis for their decisions; that they have cleared people who have had prison records, some who had been members of subversive organizations in the past, and that they never deny clearance without telling the individual involved why it has been denied. Whether workers denied clearance are actually transferred to non-sensitive jobs he said he did not know; this is not the responsibility of the Defense Department.

When all members of the panel were asked to comment on whether or not the program is really useful and effective, Mr. Dillon replied that he believes we are less secure in the long run because of the program, and that the amount of money and effort expended on it are unjustified. Mr. Harris said he felt there is a real need for the program, but that it should be restricted to those having access to secret and top-secret material, and the number of jobs subject to examination should be kept to a minimum. He thought that the security programs have not made an impressive record in turning up spies.

Mr. MacClain feels that the program is necessary; that one traitor is too many, and that we often don't know what secrets we have until they are lost. The program, he believes, given an opportunity to examine all evidence in each case where an individual's loyalty is questioned. It protects the individual and his traditional rights and liberties.

When Mr. Segal asked the audience to comment on the question, one member of the group said that he felt the panel members had gone too far in suggestions for liberalizing or dispensing with the program and that he believed the safeguards it provides are necessary. Others present thought that labor should be given some responsibility in the operation of the program, and that individual liberties should be carefully guarded in its procedures.

OUR TEN-YEAR SEARCH FOR SECURITY AND LIBERTY, 1947-1957

Program Personnel	:
Chairman	: Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and chairman of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.
Introductory Remarks	: Senator Richard L. Neuberger
Address	: Elmo Roper, Public Opinion Analyst and Chairman of the Board of the Fund for the Republic.
Reporter	: Warren Griffiths, Friends Committee on National Legislation.

Theme of the conference dinner meeting was an appraisal of developments in the loyalty-security program in the decade since it was instituted by President Truman's Executive Order of March 31, 1947.

After Mr. Edelsberg's brief welcome to the conferees, Senator Neuberger discussed the effects of congressional immunity, and proposed that anyone slandered on the floor of Congress or before an investigating committee be enabled to bring suit against the Government. "Committee rules should offer any person whose reputation is injured the opportunity to give his own version of the facts, to confront the attacking witness before the committee, and to submit to the committee a line of cross-examination to be put to that witness under oath," he said.

"If a person is denied such an opportunity to meet a slanderous attack, or if it is made by members of Congress themselves, a damage action against the Government would give him some legal protection without infringing on the essential immunity of Congress itself." Such a procedural change would not revoke the privileged status of Congressional hearings and debate, Senator Neuberger added, but would make both Congressmen and witnesses more careful about advancing unfounded charges under the protection of immunity.

The Senator also expressed his wish that elected officials of the Government might be freed from the indebtedness to special interest that results from campaign contributions.

Our Ten-Year Search for Security

"The conflict between the need for security and the desire for liberty is as old as history," Mr. Roper said. He stressed, however, the importance of the decade 1947-1957, in which, "we have witnessed in our country an enormous expansion of the urge to compel people to fit into the molds of those in authority."

He recounted in some detail developments of loyalty-security programs under both President Truman and President Eisenhower. When we look back to the atmosphere and events preceding the Truman loyalty order, the President's action seems inevitable, he said, because the end of World War II brought, not the kind of peace we had hoped for, but a "new kind of war . . . a war of spies and subversion, a war of propaganda and infiltration."

The march of events from 1948 through 1953 in particular caused alarm, bewilderment and at times hysteria. The case of Alger Hiss, the Communist seizure in Czechoslovakia, the victory of Communist forces in China, the cases of Dr. Klaus Fuchs in Britain and Judith Coplon and the Rosenbergs here, the first announcement of the Soviet's atom bomb, and the Korean outbreak combined to make the needs of security seem greater and greater. So, restrictions on liberty in order to protect the common welfare of all Americans seemed to be more and more necessary.

The belief that a "monstrous conspiracy" was at work in the country resulted in hysteria and acts which had a crippling effect on some of our most honored liberties; on the procedural safeguards which have been the foundation of our system of justice. Of the excesses of these years, Mr. Roper observed: "Maybe some of it was unjustified, but it certainly was not uncaused. To interpret it without taking into account the genuinely threatening facts of that time is to surrender to the demonology we all deplore so thoroughly in the thinking of others, inside the Iron Curtain and out."

After 1954, however, the hysteria began to recede. It was in that year that the Atomic Energy Commission withdrew the clearance of Dr. Robert Oppenheimer. Mr. Roper interpreted this event in the following light: "I think it was the Oppenheimer case that spelled out the outer limits our fear could take us to and in doing so, helped us to begin to measure the difference between that part of our fear which was based on real danger, and that part of it which was simply an emotional reaction to a generally threatening world." So, by 1955 the tide had turned. In keeping with the new, "more sober and realistic" mood was the Senate's censure vote on Senator Joseph R. McCarthy and the Summit Meeting at Geneva.

1956 -- "A Year of Progress"

In this spirit, Mr. Roper described 1956 as "A Year of Progress." In spite of some tragic outbreaks of violence in the South, and some cases in the North, it was a year of steady progress in eliminating segregation and discrimination in employment, public accommodations, schools, private associations, and the Armed Forces. There were also improvements in the Federal Loyalty-Security Program. In addition, there were moves to increase public knowledge of scientific developments and to resist the encroachment of the censors.

The legal profession and the courts have helped lead the way to a reassertion of the individual's right to a fair trial with benefit of competent counsel. Similarly, the discussion of the Fifth Amendment has caused many people to learn more of this phase of our constitutional protections. In addition, civic, educational, church, professional and veterans groups have sponsored constructive discussion and educational programs concerning the basic provisions of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, while commercial television and the press have given intelligent treatment of our great American traditions.

On the basis of the past year's developments, Mr. Roper concluded that "as we go forward in 1957, we can take heart . . . that the nation as a whole has seen the need for organized defense of civil, constitutional liberty along with the organized defense of national security . . . The Communist movement in the United States has received such severe blows -- from the anti-Communist efforts in this country and from the sense of revulsion created by the Soviet's brutal treatment of the Hungarians -- that it cannot recover for a long time, if ever. With Communism largely eliminated as an internal threat, our efforts to hold a sane balance between liberty and security can be made in an atmosphere which will contain much less fear and hysteria than it has in the last ten years."

Discussion

In the discussion period, Mr. Roper was asked how far down into the general public this more hopeful climate of opinion spreads, and whether individual freedom is not still in a precarious position. He replied that there was still a great deal of McCarthyism at all levels and that probably some people are just tired of the subject of loyalty-security, and hence quiescent.

Another questioner stated his opinion that we have merely become complacent about injustice and that the central vice of the anonymous accuser still remains, and in fact is institutionalized. Mr. Roper recognized a good deal of truth in this view, but held that four years ago there was a large segment of the population that wished to go further than Congress. This group is no longer vocal. The climate of opinion is better, and so are government procedures.

In reply to a question as to whether we can be optimistic in the face of the deep dissension in the South, Mr. Roper noted the great progress made there in the last ten years. He averred that before too long we shall have a South much advanced in respect for the dignity of all men, and in voting rights for all. On this note of faith in the future the discussion closed.

The Right to Vote

In 1944 the "last effective, legal, open disfranchisement" of Negro citizens was removed when the Supreme Court outlawed the white primary, Mr. Malin said, but the Southern Regional Council currently reports that of five million Negroes in 11 southern states eligible to vote, only 25% had registered, while 65% of the white eligible voters registered. This contrast between white and colored registrations is the result of four factors: (1) discrimination practiced against potential Negro registrants; (2) apathy and lack of political consciousness on the part of some Negro citizens, even in cities where registration is easy; (3) fear of economic pressures; and (4) violence and threats of violence.

The American Civil Liberties Union supports the Administration's civil rights proposals, which would give to the Attorney General the power to institute civil proceedings to enjoin threatened violations of Federally protected civil rights. Criminal sanctions have proved ineffective, Mr. Malin noted, because local citizens refuse to indict and convict friends and neighbors for offenses which they themselves condone.

Of the ACLU'S opposition to an amendment sponsored by southern opponents of the Administration's measure, to require a jury trial for persons charged with contempt of a lawful court order obtained by the Attorney General in a civil suit, Mr. Malin pointed out that there is no constitutional right to a jury trial in either civil or criminal contempt cases. The use of equity procedures as a means of enforcing federal law is not new. It is used, for example, to enforce the antitrust and the food and drug laws. Mr. Malin also expressed opposition "at this time and in this context" to Senator Eastland's bill which would require a jury trial in all contempt cases to which the United States is a party. Before such a general and basic overhauling of established procedures in contempt cases is undertaken, an exhaustive study should be made to determine what jurisdiction should properly be preserved to the judge and what allowed the jury in contempt proceedings, he said.

Resistance to the Supreme Court's School Decisions.

The Supreme Court's school segregation decision has not set back the cause of race relations, as charged by some, said Mr. Fleming. It has only brought out into the open the great mass of contradictions and problems underlying race relations in the South. Great progress has been made since the decision; in the border States the rapid rate of the changeover has been phenomenal. On the other side of the picture, however, in eight States a "resolidification of the South" is taking place.

The violence in the South today, though sporadic, reflects a "massive, organized, powerful, conscious, and shrewd" resistance movement. It is a movement which represents virtually all the institutions of power and influence -- political, economic, civic, and the press, as well as most individuals who can command a public forum. It is more than a mere transient reaction to social change; it is institutionalized, and it has money and power at its disposal.

The White Citizens Councils, though private in character, are closely tied in with public officialdom. In some instances the Council leaders are also members of State legislatures. Many leaders of the White Citizens Councils, because of economic and political considerations, have a vested interest in maintaining the segregation status quo. Their prime target is the NAACP; their aim is to knock the NAACP out of business because it has been the principal source of litigation in attacking segregation. They recognize that so long as court cases can be brought to enjoin State officials from discriminating against Negroes, change is inevitable. On a secondary level, other organizations such as the Sourthern Regional Council, the Urban League, the YWCA, and some of the Jewish agencies, are under attack.

Mr. Fleming said resistance to integration is not a "holding action" designed merely to preserve the status quo; instead it is a crusading "rollback effort," challenging practices that have been followed for some 20 years.

Despite this open resistance, beneath the surface there is a deep-running current of change which is unstoppable. Because of the new status achieved by Negroes in the South during the last ten years, desegregation is inevitable. But Southerners who are willing to consider and digest the change must find moral assistance outside the South. The counter-force to the South's resistance must come from national leadership, the Federal Government, industry and the press, Mr. Fleming continued. Thus far, this national leadership has been wanting. Where change in the South has come, it is because southern conservative leadership has become concerned over the intolerant disregard of people's rights, and fearful that resistance will pull down all established institutions.

The Drive Against Private Organizations

The line between civil rights and civil liberties is gradually being erased in the South, as evidenced by the efforts to pin "subversive" labels on the NAACP and the Southern Regional Council in order to destroy their effectiveness, Mr. Segal said. Unions have also been the object of this "smear" drive. In an effort to defeat union organizing campaigns, some employers have sought to link the national unions with the NAACP. As a result a handful of local unions have withdrawn from the AFL-CIO; and some national unions, to avoid hindering their organizational drives in the South, are taking a neutral position on the school segregation issue. The race issue has also been used to spur the enactment of municipal ordinances to prevent union organization; and rights of free speech and assembly guaranteed by the First Amendment -- e.g., meeting places, radio time, etc. -- have been denied.

A hopeful sign is the work of the Southern Regional Council, which is trying to keep open the communication lines between whites and Negroes. Some unions, too, even in these difficult circumstances, are trying to do a job in the field of race relations. While acknowledging that the attacks are on the increase, Mr. Segal expressed the hope that, if unions in the South can do a little more and if the Southern Regional Council receives more support, the situation will improve.

The Government's Role in Defending Civil Rights

The Assistant Attorney General undertook (1) to explain why the Administration's civil rights bill will, if enacted, give to the Government for the first time the necessary legal tools and authority to secure the effective enforcement of Federally-guaranteed civil rights; and (2) to warn against attempts to "emasculate" the program by "deceptive appeals" for the protection of the right to trial by jury.

Under existing law, Mr. Olney said, the only course open to the Government is to institute criminal prosecution against State and local officials suspected of denying to Negroes their right to vote. Such criminal prosecution comes of necessity after the harm is done, and frequently results in acquittals based upon sympathy for the defendant rather than on a finding that he did not violate the law. The Administration's bill, which would authorize the Attorney General to bring civil suits for preventive relief in cases of threatened violation of voting rights and of other Federally-guaranteed civil rights, represents "the very minimum" needed to make the Constitutional guarantees against discrimination effective in actual practice. By means of a suit in equity, a registrar of voters who has been discriminating against Negroes might be enjoined from such discrimination far enough in advance of an election to permit the Negroes to register and to vote. The use of suits for preventive relief as a means of enforcing Federal law in this area would not be an innovation. Such proceedings have been used in antitrust cases and in cases arising under the Atomic Energy Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, and many others.

If such equity procedures are to be effective, however, Federal judges must have the necessary power to enforce their orders and decrees, Mr. Olney continued. For this reason it is essential not to be misled by "deceptive slogans" into supporting "trial-by-jury" legislative efforts, which he termed "a clever device to nullify the proposed civil rights legislation", and which he said would give a jury "the completely novel power to substitute their interpretation of the Federal Constitution and laws for that made in the very case before them by the Federal courts."

While Congress, by statute, has extended the right to jury trial in criminal contempt cases where the acts constituting the contempt would also constitute criminal offenses, Mr. Olney explained, this same statute expressly provides that there shall be no jury trial in cases where the contempt consists in disobedience of court orders entered in suits brought by the United States. There is no Constitutional right to jury trial in either civil or criminal contempt cases.

In concluding, Mr. Olney said that if the right to vote is to have any meaning, prompt action to enforce that right before, rather than after, an election is necessary. The requirement of a jury trial would provide numerous opportunities for delay beyond the time when the court order could have practical effect. Moreover, a jury could acquit a state official charged with violating a court order directing him to register Negro voters, not because they found he had not violated the court order but because the jury disapproved of the order and simply refused to enforce it.

Discussion

In the discussion session, Mr. Olney stated that, as a result of the recent Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in intrastate bus travel, an increasing number of cities have abandoned their Jim Crow laws either by repeal or by simple discontinuance.

Mr. Olney also said that before last November's election many Negroes who had registered and voted in previous elections had had their names stricken from the rolls in a number of Louisiana parishes. After the election, all these cases of mass disenfranchisement of Negro voters were presented to the grand jury. Although the proof was unmistakable, the grand jury refused to hand down any indictments; moreover, it advised the Department of Justice that it did not wish to hear any evidence in other cases which were still pending, although in the speaker's opinion there was enough evidence in all these cases to warrant indictment and to justify conviction. The experience in these cases, Mr. Olney observed, shows what would happen if the jury-trial provision were added to the civil rights bill.

To a question as to why the White Citizens Councils are not on the Attorney General's subversive list, as is the Klan, Mr. Olney replied that the Klan is listed because it had identified itself so closely with Nazi groups in the United States. The Klan and the White Citizens Councils are not identical. They may have some objectives in common, but their methods are entirely different, he held. Neither the Klan nor the White Citizens Councils, said Mr. Olney, are now engaged in open violation of the Federal criminal laws. If any members of these groups violate the law, they, not the organizations, will be prosecuted. Mr. Segal disagreed with Mr. Olney, and professed to see little difference in method between the klan and the White Citizens Councils. From the floor an opinion was voiced that the suggestion that the White Citizens Councils be placed on the Attorney General's subversive list was not unlike the efforts of some States to list the NAACP as subversive.

In response to a question about what religious groups are doing on the race issue, Mr. Fleming said that all the important church groups have, at the top levels, taken a public position that desegregation is in harmony with their religious principles, but acceptance of this position at local levels is a very difficult thing. While there is a tendency to be critical of the role of the churches, they have been a powerful, positive force for good, as evidenced by the statements of ministers and lay leaders.

Answering another question, Mr. Fleming commented that it is not generally believed in the South that the Federal Government "means business" on the race question. The Federal Government could do a lot more by putting its moral force behind the Supreme Court's decision, he said and the President, because of his prestige, has an especially important role to play. He should give his stamp of respectability to the decent forces in the South. His should be the counter-voice to the branding of southern moderates as Communists. A major statement on southern soil by the President would have a telling effect. Too, the Federal Government must make it clear that desegregation is the national policy and has to be followed. If this were done, it would help to bring about a solution of the South's problems.

Mr. Olney added that the proposed bipartisan civil rights commission, which the civil rights bill would set up, could help to provide the necessary leadership in this effort.

CHALLENGES TO EQUALITY, 1957

Representative Richard Bolling

Chairman : Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women

Reporter : Frank S. Ketcham, Congregational Christian Churches, Council for Social Action.

A Southern Case History : One Community and the Klan

In 1942 in Americus, Ga., Koinonia Community was founded by the Rev. Clarence Jordan, a former Baptist minister. The Greek work "Koinonia" means

"bringing together," and Koinonia Farm is an inter-racial project, an experiment in bringing together two races to live in brotherly love as human beings.

From its beginning, Koinonia worked on a practical as well as a theoretical basis. The group has carried on an active program of agricultural missionary work. They introduced commercial egg production into the County; now this section is one of Georgia's largest egg-producing centers. The Farm is conducted on the best scientific principles of soil conservation and is a demonstration of improved farming methods. For years Koinonia enjoyed excellent relations with all its neighbors, even though it is an integrated group located in a section of the deep South where intense racial prejudice is prevalent.

Today the Community is going through a reign of terror unbelievable in the United States of America in the year 1957. It has been harassed by legal actions, crippling economic boycotts, and physical violence in the form of bullets and dynamite.

"At Koinonia we have come to know the value of freedom," Mr. Jordan said. "Men don't have it taken away. They just forfeit it. One phrase I continually hear -- 'I am not free to say,' or 'I am not free to sell to you.' We try to go to the people who oppose us and to understand their motives. Almost without exception they say to us, 'I am not free to tell you who is bringing the pressure.' I hope our effort in Georgia will come to be a symbol of a stronghold of freedom."

The people who founded Koinonia are primarily experimenting in an area of great religious truths. Mr. Jordan combines both the scientist and the religious leader in his training and background. He is a graduate of the University of Georgia, where he majored in Agriculture, and he has studied for the Baptist ministry and holds a Ph.D. degree from Southern Baptist Seminary. His experiment is to apply the love of God and brotherhood to the practical scientific problems of an agricultural enterprise.

Mr. Jordan described some of Koinonia's experiences in its efforts to survive. "After it had been open for about a month, a Negro guest came to lunch with us. One of the neighbors dropped in. His mouth flew open at the sight of the Negro. The next day two neighboring gentlemen, who said they were representatives of the Klan and its 800 members in that region, came by and said, 'We don't allow the sun to set on people like that.' I said, 'I am glad to meet some gentlemen who have power over the sun -- I will be watching the sun with great interest.' They never appeared again -- I didn't know at the time that it would take them about 14 years to come back in other forms with a tremendous fury."

"We Are Not Free . . ."

About a year ago, Koinonia "began to feel the backlash of the Supreme Court decision. At first there were six months of stony silence throughout the South, with very little reaction. Then began the Citizens Councils, spreading from Mississippi to Alabama and Georgia. We felt it first rather gently, by the cancellation of our insurance policy. We asked the agent why; he said 'I am not free to say what is the trouble.' We turned to another company that kept it for about two weeks and cancelled, and then to another and another. At last, in desperation we tried Lloyds of London -- I had heard they would insure anything. But Lloyds said, 'You are an unusual risk,' and turned us down. Now we have no insurance."

The attack against Koinonia took three forms. First, economic; the actual boycott of refusing to sell. "We couldn't buy feed for our 4000 hens. We couldn't even sell our eggs -- not even to the big chain groceries -- but then, of course, the yolks were colored. Everywhere we heard, 'We are not free to deal with you.' Finally we had to liquidate almost all our flock."

Then critical materials -- gasoline, oil, etc. -- were cut off in the middle of the farm's harvest, and even butane gas to warm the houses and for heating water and cooking. "But these people had been our friends for many years. They are not easy. A struggle is going on within their souls."

Next, legal pressure was directed against Koinonia. It operates a summer camp which is interracial and takes children from the city "so the city kids can see what farm life is like." Last summer, a few days after the camp started, they were served with an injunction enjoining them from continuing "on account of sanitary reasons." A department of Health officer had inspected the camp a few days earlier and had found a few minor faults which he recommended be changed, and they had been corrected. But still the camp was not allowed to operate. "At the hearing it was held that the children from Atlanta would bring diseases with them, and people traveling by on the State highway might contract these diseases." The camp was moved across the border into Tennessee, with the hope that there it could continue, but the fathers of four children intervened. The Community raised pigs; this was said to be corrupting the morals of the children. "They might see baby pigs being born alive." A hearing ensued but was postponed; finally proceedings were dropped because the Summer was over and the case was ruled moot.

"Language We Should Understand . . ."

The next attack against Koinonia took the form of strong physical violence -- an auto driving by at night shooting bullets into the air, "speaking a language southern people should understand." "Then a pistol was fired into our little roadside market; it was not intended to hit anybody or to damage property -- but we knew what it was saying." Next came "a deeper voice" -- a heavy charge of dynamite exploded in front of the Community's market, damaging the equipment. Destruction of property had begun, but no attempts had yet been made to take life.

On Christmas night a high-powered rifle drilled a hole in their gasoline pump; on New Year's Day the entrance sign to their market was riddled with bullets. In the middle of January someone broke into the market and blew it to bits, causing a loss of about $7000, for which there was no insurance.

"Now our friends pleaded with us to leave while we are still alive. We were tempted, but there is something involved which is greater than our personal safety. We have found that we are not free to leave. . . Since then, machine guns have been turned on Koinonia. Our guests have been shot at. Children have barely missed being hit. A flashlight was shot out of our watchman's hand. (Incidentally, the only arms our watchmen carry are flashlights. We are committed to no violence.")

Finally, after crosses had been burned on Koinonia's land and on the property of friendly Negro neighbors, the Ku Klux Klan assembled from all over the southern part of Georgia and formed a motorcade; they drove to Koinonia and said they were interested in seeing the violence stopped, and this would come about only if the Community moved away. "They offered to help by buying our property. We told them that it was not for sale.

"We don't know what will happen to us but we deeply believe in spiritual values . . . We are confident that freedom and truth in the South will ultimately prevail."

The Congress and Civil Rights

Representative Richard Bolling (D., Missouri) followed Rev. Jordan's talk with a discussion of some of the current problems affecting civil rights legislation in the House and Senate. He analyzed the strategies used by both opponents and supporters of such legislation, and said that he believes there is a Republican movement to delay final enactment of any civil rights measure in this session of Congress, in order to spread the differences of Democratic Senators on the record in 1958.

The Congressman, a member of the House Rules Committee, outlined his impressions that a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats intends to do everything procedurally possible to postpone consideration of President Eisenhower's civil rights bill. He pointed out that every opportunity is being utilized by those opposed to such legislation, and by those who are interested in delaying it, to prevent the matter from coming to a vote in the Senate this year. This, he said, will be achieved by putting off action in the House until late in the session.

While he is confident that the House will ultimately vote on the measure before the recess, Mr. Bolling said, he is not at all sure that the stalling strategy will not accomplish its purpose. He urged his audience to attempt to understand the procedural maneuvers involved in order not to be deceived by surface manifestations of friendliness towards civil rights legislation, such as last-minute votes in its favor.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN HOUSING AND EMPLOYMENT

Program Personnel :-

Speakers	:	Frank T. Simpson, Executive Secretary, Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights
		Herbert Hill, Labor Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People
		Charles Abrams, Director, New York State Commission against Discrimination
Chairman	:	Boris Shishkin, Director, Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
Reporter	:	Sam Ishikawa, Japanese American Citizens League

Discrimination in Housing

Opening the final session of the conference, the chairman, Mr. Shishkin, said that historically trade unions have been dedicated to the fight against discrimination, and that there exists today in the labor movement an "aggressive" program towards this aim.

Discrimination in housing is the primary obstacle to progress towards equality of opportunity, Mr. Simpson said, in remarks based on the work of the Connecticut Commission on Civil Rights. The Negro's increased purchasing power and desire for better housing has not been matched by any increased or freer access to the housing market, and the rents that Negroes now pay for inferior housing are far above the costs of comparable housing where the market is free of discrimination and prejudice. He cited a tremendous increase in his Commission's complaint load in housing cases, and predicted that this trend will continue. Far-sighted real estate men, builders and contractors, he said, should welcome the adoption of legal standards defining discrimination. This would let them profit by serving those whose present rent payments should provide them with better homes of their own, and profit by increased sales as well.

Mr. Simpson reported on a study of racial integration in private residential neighborhoods conducted by the Research Division of the Connecticut Commission, and based on data gathered from both white and Negro families living in non-segregated neighborhoods. Its significant findings were : (1) that interracial stability can be achieved in such neighborhoods; (2) that one-half of the white families moved into the neighborhoods after a Negro family had established itself in the area; and (3) that integration proceeds fairly rapidly in the area of childhood play activities.

According to the Negro families interviewed, their troubles were not over after they had bought their homes. Thirty-seven percent met some kind of opposition; 15 percent were subjected to insulting remarks; and 14 percent had petitions circulated against them. There were, however, few acts of violence; three percent reported that windows were broken or fires set on the premises. There were no attempts at personal violence.

"The problems encountered by minority groups in buying or renting homes in non-segregated areas should be approached through the utilization of existing legislative remedies and the extension of legislation for fair housing," Mr. Simpson concluded. "Legislation, however, is only one phase of the problem. It alone cannot create the climate of opinion necessary to stimulate affirmative action on the part of builders and financers . . . It is up to the community, through education measures, to convince them that they will not lose money if they build open occupancy housing. This cannot be done without presenting to them something more tangible than expressions of good will. The need is evident. It is up to the community to realize the potentials of this new market."

Discrimination in Employment

Major changes that directly affect every wage earner, white and colored, are taking place in the industrial economy of the United States today, Mr. Hill said. These technological changes, sometimes called automation, have a special meaning for Negro workers and a direct relationship to the well-being of the entire Negro community.

The fact that there is a great concentration of Negro workers in the ranks of the unskilled and semi-skilled means that the increasing introduction of improved production methods will result in wholesale job displacement for them. Already one can cite many instances where a highly-trained white man and new machine have replaced many unskilled Negro workers.

Mr. Hill emphasized that if we do not succeed in making possible the realization of the Negro potential, America society will be denied urgently-needed manpower skills and the Negro will be forced into an even more marginal position in the American economy, even though economic opportunities expand for other groups in the community. He also stressed the need to eliminate current restrictions that prevent the admission of qualified Negroes into apprenticeship training programs, and added that other forms of vocational training must now be given greater attention by industrial management, as well as by organizaed labor and by State and Federal governments.

The disparity in the economic status between Negro and white wage earners, and the Negroes' vulnerability in terms of economic distress, are clearly indicated by the facts on income distribution. In 1953, the typical Negro worker earned an average of $364 in wages; the white worker earned $956, or 2½ times as much. By 1954 the income of the average Negro worker had risen to $1,589, while the average white earned $3,174. In 1954, 17.6 percent of all white families in the United States had an annual income of $2000 or less, but non-white families in the same income bracket totalled 42.3 percent.

Negro workers welcome the AFL-CIO's policy declarations against discrimination in trade unions and the merged labor movement's support of civil rights, Mr. Hill said, adding that in the South trade union attitudes toward Negro workers are invariably torn between the traditional humanitarian and democratic ideals of the American labor movement and the regional bias against integration and equality of opportunity. In the southeastern states, there has been a disturbing inability of Negro workers to register any significant employment gains since the end of World War II in the great new industrial development which is transforming both the countryside and the old social patterns of southern life.

Racial conflicts directly affect the South and the future of industrialization there because the essential social requirement for industrial growth in any under-developed area is order and stability within the community. Already these tensions and conflicts have seriously interrupted the South's transition from an economically stagnant and socially depressed area into a vital part of the nation's industrial life.

The Role of the State Agency

Charles Abrams, discussing the work of State agencies against discrimination, pictured the civil rights scene today as far different from what it was 24 years ago. No longer, he said, is the minority that "one-third of the nation" that then was "ill-fed, ill-clad, and ill-housed"; today it is "the Negro, the Puerto Rican and the Mexican."

One big change is in the character of the labor supply which feeds our industrial growth. Today's immigrants are largely identifiable as a class; they cannot change their color by changing from dungarees to grey flannel suits. Another change is the new emphasis in judgements on social status. In the past, social status was determined by the size of a man's house, but now it is by the character of the neighborhood where he lives. "The flight to the suburbs is being speeded not out of a desire for fresh air and space, but as an escape from the Negroes, the Puerto Ricans and the Mexicans pouring into American cities."

These new social pressures have in turn enforced political pressures for the exclusion of minorities. Zoning that in 1910 was aimed at improving neighborhoods became racial zoning aimed at banning minorities; the racial covenant conceived a century ago as a device for excluding charnel houses, stables and brothels gained judicial protection in the 1930's as a device for keeping out racial groups; FHA-aided housing designed to promote home ownership was conditioned between 1935 and 1949 by exhortations urging Negro exclusion and neighborhood segregation, and this is often still the rule in the field.

Mr. Abrams described the post-war period as a time when the trend toward perversion of government powers was temporarily halted. In this period a number of States took steps to protect their minorities in the right to employment. New York State's law against discrimination was the first of 15 such laws, and the forerunner of a score of municipal programs. In 1953 discrimination in public accommodations was brought within the Commission's scope; thereafter publicly-assisted housing was included, and last July, FHA and VA-aided housing came under its jurisdiction.

But by 1955, pre-war attitudes were being restored, and by 1956, six Southern States had openly "nullified" the Supreme Court decree, and at their national conventions both major parties retreated from their earlier positions opposing discrimination.

Reporting on the great strides made by the New York Commission against Discrimination, Mr. Abrams said that employment agencies are steadily being brought into better compliance with the law, through an agreement with the New York City licence commissioner to suspend licences when discriminatory practices have been proved. Hundreds of Negroes are now being accepted into private urban renewal projects -- and this policy has not prevented New York State from establishing a national investment record in such projects. Restrictions in labor unions, one of the toughest areas of resistance, are being met through a recent agreement on cooperation between the State AFL-CIO and the Commission.

A very serious problem is the cultural poverty of the new minority, and the slow rate of advancement of their children. Mr. Abrams said that these derived from (1) bottlenecks in the training of minority group workers due to discriminatory practices in trade schools and failure of the apprenticeship system; (2) resistance of foremen in industry; (3) improper or inadequate counseling services in schools; (4) refusal of some unions to accept minority workers; (5) the fact that much of the minority population is transient; and (6) prejudice at the level of personnel managers.

Another major deterrent to progress, the speaker continued, is the ideological poverty of experts in both the social and political fields. Among their failures he enumerated the lack of concrete definitions of such terms as "desegregation" and "deliberate speed;" the absence of a clear conception of the individual's rights and freedoms; civic groups' extraordinary dependence upon civil rights laws, to the virtual exclusion of other effective devices; a lack of determination of limits to local autonomy; and confusion about the role of the Federal government in the implementation of the desegregation decisions.

"It remains to be seen, "Mr. Abrams concluded, "whether we can adjust the fundamental morality of a 1789 Constitution drawn for a rural individualistic society to a society dominated by three pyramids of Business, Labor and Government. If we can, the example may impress the world as much as did our original proclamation of freedom, right and justice in 1789."

FROM THE CHAIRMAN'S SUMMARY

Herman Edelsberg of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, chairman of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House and of the conference, concluded the program with a brief comment on the Clearing House work.

"In the nine years of its existence, the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has served as one of the Nation's principal forums on the urgent human rights issues of our decade," he said. "Here representatives of leading national organizations could take a long and searching look at complex and many-sided problems. Here they could exchange views with other organization leaders who shared with them two convictions -- a belief in the American democratic way of life and in the value to that way of life of free and informed discussion.

"Beyond these basic agreed convictions, we have benefited from the richness of diverse viewpoints. We have approached the great variety of thorny issues discussed at our conferences, and our monthly meetings, without commitment to any political dogma, liberal or conservative. A wholesome skepticism of "sacred cows" -- and donkeys and elephants -- has gone hand in hand with a sympathy for the underdog, a sympathy rooted in realism.

"Time permits only the sketchiest mention of the range of those who have contributed to the development of our program, which can be illustrated by the organizational affiliations of our past chairmen : E. Raymond Wilson of the Friends Committee on National Legislation; Mike M. Masaoka of the Japanese American Citizens League; Paul Sifton of the United Automobile Workers; and Dr. Earl F. Adams of the National Council of Churches, whose loss we mourn so deeply.

"Nor does time allow more than the briefest outline of the range of our interests -- from genocide treaties to censorship, from segregation to security risks. To note only two : the discussions of the displaced persons and immigration problems benefited from the participation of Mike Masaoka, who, as much as any person, was responsible for erasing from our laws the offensive racist bar to oriental immigration and naturalization. The debate over where the balance should be drawn between national security and individual liberty was given perspective by former Senator Harry Cain's first Washington speech on the security program at our 1955 conference. It was

Cain, then a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board, who reminded the country that 'a whole clique of spies could not do as much damage to us as could our failure as a government to have confidence in the people.'

"One hundred and sixteen agencies -- religious, civic, educational, labor, governmental departments and embassies -- are represented at the conference this year, the largest number in our history. And, since we are a cooperative effort, it would not be immodest or unseemly to say that this growth is a tribute to the usefulness of our endeavors -- to the resourceful contribution of our Executive Director, Mary Alice Baldinger -- and to the continuing devoted interest of our associated organizations."

This is an official thank-you, for the Clearing House, for our Program Committee, and for me, for your help with our conference last week, and for the excellence of your talk.

All the comments I've heard on your speech have been extremely favorable -- naturally.

I wish we'd had some time to talk to each other -- but I suppose a day for that will come eventually.

In the interim, I'll send you copies of the conference report as soon as it's published (probably before the end of this month).

With best regards, and all my thanks,

Report on the 1957 Conference : Kenneth Birkhead, who served with Dr. Ralph Fuchs of the AAUP as co-chairman for the 1957 Clearing House conference, reported that this year had exceeded any past conference in the number of people attending -- nearly 300 -- and in the registration of 116 agencies.

Total conference receipts were $ 2598. Hotel costs were $ 1592.27, and other expenditures -- secretarial help, printing, mimeographing, mailing, office supplies, etc. -- were $ 1875.97, for a conference total of $ 3468.24. In accord with his agreement with the Clearing House for cooperation between its conference and the Conference on Industrial Security, Ben Segal paid $ 958.06 of the costs of arranging the meetings.

Minutes May 8, 1957.

All of the material for inclusion in the conference report has been received from the Committee (Bob Frase, chairman and editor; Dave Brody, Warren Griffiths, Betty Douglas, Frank Ketcham and Mike Masaoka and Sam Ishikawa). Herman Edelsberg has arranged to have production on the report handled by the Anti-Defamtion League at cost, resulting in a saving to the Clearing House of approximately $200. The report should be in the mail around May 15.

Mr. Birkhead expressed deep appreciation to all of the conference committees for their help with the meetings.

Guest Speakers : Fletcher Knebel of Cowles Publications, author of the widely-syndicated column, "Potomac Fever," and co-author of "Eight Klans Bring New Terror to the South" in the April 30 issue of LOOK magazine, spoke on the conclusions he had reached about the potentials of the Ku Klux Klan during the time he spent in the South doing preparatory research. Is the Resurgent Klan a Danger? was his topic.

Dear Miss Baldinger:

Under separate cover I am sending you the grand jury presentments against Koinonia Farm and the Farm's public answer. Also included with them will be several other related pieces such as our chronology of events and copies of news clips.

The Atlanta Journal, after waiting nearly a year, finally ran an extended series on Koinonia - these six articles were of good quality. The paper's editorial policy has been weak regarding the strictly civil liberties issues involved.

Let me know if you think there is further information which you would like to have.

Sincerely,

Dear Emory Via :

I am writing to ask a favor. Fred Fuges tells me that you might be able to let me have copies of the grand jury's presentment against Koinonia, and Koinonia's reply.

We want to have rather a full scale discussion of this at our next Clearing House meeting, so you can see why I need them.

If you can spare them, I'll be most grateful.

Censorship at the Source: Government Secrecy

The Problem

In a democracy we take for granted the right to know what our government is doing; how our tax money is being spent; and whether our nation is being run in the best interests of the people who live in it. At the same time, we have been willing to accept the need for limiting this right in the interests of national security, particularly in this time of atomic threat and "cold war."

This gives rise to a basic problem of liberty vs security. And as with all such problems, we are confronted with a choice between risks. There is no clear-cut answer—no easy solution which will at the same time safeguard our individual rights and insure our nation's safety. How much information should our government withhold in the interests of security? At what point does such secrecy menace our right to know and, in the long run, our security as a free nation? With changing needs and times, these problems must be constantly re-examined to find the best way to meet the demands both of security and freedom of information.

But in recent years, particularly since the end of World War II, there has emerged in American government an alarming tendency to withhold from the public more and more information unrelated to national security. This trend toward secrecy has become evident on all levels of government—federal, state and local; and it has touched all functions of government—legislative, executive and judicial. It has been reported as particularly marked in the executive agencies of the Federal Government. Much information is being withheld not only from the public, but even from Congress. Congressional committees complain of increasing difficulty in getting from many executive agencies facts and figures they need for legislative purposes and to find out how the citizen's tax dollar is being spent.

At the same time, the committees of Congress stand among the accused as well as the accusers. For the prevailing impulse in the nation's capital to transact public business in secret is reflected also in an increased number of closed "executive" sessions by Congressional committees.

Charges of undue government secrecy, news suppression and control have come from such organizations as the American Society of Newspaper Editors, the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the National Education Association. These have been backed up by a special House Subcommittee on Government Information, which has been studying the problem intensively for the past two years and by the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, which has been looking into the constitutional aspects of government secrecy.

A number of responsible independent studies have piled up additional evidence. And a recent report on freedom of the press by the International Press Institute listed only four nations as having complete press freedom —Great Britain, Sweden, Denmark and Belgium. The United States was omitted because of government news control and suppression.

HOW TO USE PLATFORM

Platform is a Public Affairs discussion and information bulletin.

The main 4-page section is designed as discussion material, consisting of information, discussion questions and a reading list, on one study topic. This month, we look at one aspect of the problem of censorship not covered in our study guide, Censorship: Safeguard or Threat? This is the problem of censorship at the source or government secrecy.

Use this material for a short one-session discussion or for a more intensive, longer study based on the suggested readings and investigation of local resources.

Platform Briefs give in concise form up-to-date information on some other issues of current Council interest.

Those who gather the news have naturally been most directly concerned with the problem of government secrecy as an obstacle to their jobs and as a danger to press freedom. But this is obviously not just a newsman's problem. The right to a free press was not written into the Constitution for the benefit of a particular industry. It is a right guaranteed to the people as an instrument for control of their government—control by knowing.

How Did It Happen?

Studies of the trend toward secrecy in government point up two main currents which have narrowed the flow of information.

1) The expanding powers and functions of government in our time is a basic cause. Complexity and size make it difficult for the press and public to scrutinize all government operations. This has fostered what the House Subcommittee on Government Information summed up as a "papa knows best" attitude on the part of government officials. Deciding that only they can understand the intricacies of their work, many officials have lost sight of their accountability to the public whom they serve. This attitude was pointed up in testimony before the subcommittee by many federal agency officials, who insisted that they restricted information "in the public interest."

2) The trend has been fortified by wartime secrecy and censorship which carried over into a continuing "cold war," breeding a nationwide pattern of suspicion and suppression of information. Loyalty and security investigations of government personnel have placed a barrier of fear in the way of public information. It has become safer to tell less. One government agency has actually written into its regulations: "When in doubt don't give it out."

Over-classification of government documents and records has been an inevitable result of such a restrictive atmosphere. It has also served the purpose of bureaucratic self-protection under the guise of security needs—a way for some to avoid criticism, controversy and embarrassment.

The Evidence

The Subcommittee on Government Information, headed by Rep. John E. Moss of California, was set up in June 1955 by the House Government Operations Committee. A questionnaire on information practices and policies was sent by the subcommittee to all government agencies, asking them to cite authority for any restrictions they practiced—to detail exactly what kind of information they refused to divulge and why. The replies revealed widespread uncertainty and confusion on legal limits for withholding or releasing non-classified information.

In the questionnaire and in subsequent testimony before the subcommittee, most agency heads defended existing practices and justified withholding broad categories of information on the basis of their interpretation of existing statutes and executive directives. Some officials flatly stated their "inherent right" to withhold information from the public. Many contended that the release of unclassified public documents was a matter for their judgement rather than a right of the citizen. There were even those who expressed surprise that they were asked to justify restrictions. Only a few saw the need for clarification of government information policies.

Press Testimony

A press panel of thirteen leading journalists who testified before the committee unanimously concurred that a growing attitude of secrecy prevailed in government agencies. As one disturbing example of this attitude, J. Russell Wiggins, executive editor of the Washington Post, pointed to a Defense Department directive which orders department officials to release only information constituting a "constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Defense Department." Such a policy can be used, as Mr. Wiggins and other competent observers have stated, to withhold any information which might expose the department to criticism or reveal official mistakes or even wrongdoing.

Another significant instance of executive branch extension of confidential areas of government operation was cited by Clark Mollenhoff, representing the Washington Bureau of several top mid-Western newspapers. This was the letter sent during the 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings from President Eisenhower to Defense Secretary Wilson, forbidding Army counsel John Adams to testify about conversations held with the deputy attorney-general and with the President's assistant. This letter has been used as a precedent by seventeen government departments for denying to the press and to Congress reports on conversations and other documents leading to significant public decisions.

Other testimony by members of the press pointed up the following techniques used to restrict the free flow of government information:

(1) Overclassification of information without real security reasons. The rate of classification is now even higher than during World War II. Nearly a million government employees today wield rubber stamps of secrecy. To get around the current executive order for control of security material, which deleted the previous broad "restricted" category, some 30 additional classification phrases have come into use. These cover data which do not fall into the three executive-ordered security categories—"top secret," "secret" and "confidential."

(2) "News management" by government press officers who at certain times release only information that will serve a particular diplomatic or even political purpose and pressure newsmen to write "favorable" stories. James Reston, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, cited "a conscious effort to give to the news at the Geneva Conference an optimistic flavor." The opposite note was struck after the conference, he further testified, when it was decided "to frown a little bit" so that the people of the Western countries would not let down their guard.

(3) Lethargy about review and declassification of historically significant reports and documents which no longer need to be secret.

The journalists did not limit their charges to the executive branch of the government. They pointed also to the increasing number of closed meetings of Congressional committees and to the recently imposed ban on broadcasting or televising committee sessions. James Reston called particular attention to the current Senate practice of confirming diplomatic appointments after questioning appointees in secret committee sessions, rather than in public hearings as in the past.

The Scientists Speak

A panel of leading scientists and technological experts testifying before the Moss subcommittee charged excessive and damaging government restrictions on scientific information. These restrictions, according to this testimony as well as expert opinion from many other sources, place a serious obstacle in the way of important scientific and technological development for better peacetime living.

New ideas are inhibited by security regulations which cut off much of the exchange of information with scientists of other lands and even among scientists in various fields in our own country. They even get in the way of progress for defense purposes, these expert witnesses testified. Because of "red-tape" and "unnecessary security classifications," leading scientists and universities are refusing government research contracts.

For example, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology recently refused a request by the Atomic Energy Commission to undertake much-needed research in the field of thermonuclear power, because the university felt that the work could not be done effectively without a free exchange of ideas impossible under security restrictions. Over-classification approaching the absurd was illustrated in testimony about the classification of a technical report compiled by a young engineer preparing himself for a new job. He had used published material in scientific and technical journals as the basis of his report, yet his compilation was classified by the government.

Strategic Information

With the establishment of the Office of Strategic Information in the Department of Commerce in November 1954, a new barrier was added to block the flow of technical and scientific knowledge. The purpose of this agency is to control the publication of unclassified information that might be useful to a potential enemy. The definition of "strategic" information is extremely vague. It has been charged that the agency has applied restrictions to a broad range of data necessary to this nation's technological progress, which is being withheld from the American people on grounds that it might possibly one day benefit a potential enemy.

In reply, the government officials responsible for the program maintain that decisions must be made on a case by case basis and that a proper balance must be struck. In each case, they maintain, it must be determined if release of the information will be of more value to us or to a potential enemy, and consideration must be given to the net effect of publication of this knowledge on such factors as industrial and military power—our own and that of a potential enemy.

Across the Nation

A decided trend toward information restriction has also become apparent on the state and local scene. An intensive study by a well-known specialist in newspaper law, Harold L. Cross, commissioned by the American Society of Newspaper Editors, has revealed that "the general trend of recent legislation and regulations is to set up new and increased secrecies." Mr. Cross has drawn this conclusion after detailed investigation into state and municipal statutes, regulations, court decisions and legislative, administrative and judicial proceedings.

He and other observers report that city councils, tax commissions, school boards and other municipal bodies are meeting more frequently in sessions closed to the press and public. Secret record-keeping is on the increase. More state legislative business is being transacted in closed committee meetings instead of being hammered out by legislatures in full public view. And with the increasing complexity of state and local government responsibilities, legislative powers are being delegated to executive departments, bureaus, commissions and independent agencies which quietly draw up complicated little-known rules and regulations which have the force of law.

Some Progress and Some Remedies

As a result of Congressional investigation, public pressure and "watchdog" activity by the Moss subcommittee, positive steps have been taken by some Federal Government agencies to remove unnecessary information restrictions. The subcommittee's "watchdog" function consists of following up complaints from the press and the public. These are brought to the attention of the agencies concerned, and have helped to clarify the policies of some agencies and increase the flow of public information. Other government bodies have taken no action to improve their information practices.

Despite some progress, the subcommittee recently reported a continuing "restrictive maze" and general "paternalistic government attitude" toward the release of information. It urges continued study of the problem and further administrative and Congressional action to reduce secrecy.

Toward this end the subcommittee, backed up by leading press and other expert opinion, has recommended: (1) Clarification of statutes most widely used by government agencies as the basis of withholding information. Bills have been introduced in both houses of Congress to amend the statute most often cited by agency heads for this purpose (Title 5, U.S. Code, Section 22). Designed as a "housekeeping" statute, this measure authorizes executive departments to make rules for "the custody, use and preservation" of records. The amendment (which would not affect military or other classified data protected by specific statutes and executive directives) clarifies the intent of 5 U.S.C. 22 by adding the following: "This section does not authorize withholding information from the public or limiting availability of records . . ."

(2) Passage by Congress of a uniform law on information practices requiring full disclosure except where specifically restricted by statute or proper executive authority. Judicial review is urged, with "the burden of proof on the official who withholds information."

(3) Enunciation by the President and high level officials of a clearly stated information policy, backed up by efforts to achieve on every level the freest possible flow of information to the public.

(4) "Constant vigilance and repeated challenge" by the American people and their press to clear all avenues of government information. Public awareness of the problem of government secrecy and its implications is essential. In the final analysis, the people themselves must protect their right in a democracy to know what their government is planning and doing. A government "deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed" cannot deny to the governed the right to know how it is carrying out its duties.

Discussion Questions

1. Discuss the inherent dangers to democracy of the trend toward increasing and widespread restrictions on information about government activities.

2. Some say that too much secrecy can be, in the long run, more of a menace to our freedom—and even to survival—than the possible danger of revealing much of the "strategic" and other wide areas of information kept secret by our government today. Discuss this statement.

3. The U. S. military establishment today costs the taxpayer two-thirds of every tax dollar and uses the services of about 75 percent of all Federal employees. For security reasons, the Defense Department reveals very little about this vast operation to the American people. Discuss the implications and risks of this situation, considering both our security needs and the principle of government by consent.

4. The State Department has refused to issue passports to Red China to American newspapermen as long as the Chinese government continues to hold American hostages. Discuss the implications of this policy in terms of the American people's right to full information and freedom of the press.

5. Do you think newsreel and television cameras should be admitted to sessions of Congress, Congressional committee hearings, state legislatures, city councils and other public deliberations open to the press? Discuss the reasons for your opinion.

6. Do the committees of your state legislature meet most often in open or closed sessions? What are the reasons for the closed sessions? How about meetings of your city council, tax commission, school board? Do you think closed sessions are justified?

7. It is obvious that the people's right to know can be realized only through a free, unbiased press that brings complete and accurate information on public matters. Discuss the responsibility of the press in a democracy as part of the question of public access to government information. What are some of the obstacles today that get in the way of carrying out this responsibility?

THE MIDDLE EAST

The Suez Canal is just about restored to normal use for the world's shipping, but the state of political conditions in the area is by no means as good.

It is insistently clear that what Nasser has maintained all along, namely his determination to run the Canal and defeat Israel, is just what Nasser has meant. United States policy on the Canal now seems to be to try to keep some sort of international hand in on Nasser's oar, but not to do much as regards Israel's right to use the Canal. Where this will lead has yet to be seen. Israel has made it clear that it expects United States support on free passage of the Canal.

It seems now that the problem of control and running of the Canal and Egyptian-Israel relations may be brought again before the Security Council. If this happens, some more effective stand than before must be taken by the Council. At present, Nasser acts in defiance of the major Security Council decisions. He disregards the Council decision that the Canal must be kept separate from Egyptian politics and that the Canal tolls must be fixed by agreement between Egypt and the Canal users. Moreover, Egypt continues to maintain a "state of war" against Israel and to blockade the Canal against Israeli shipping, with threats to sink any Israeli ship attempting to use the Canal. This is in open defiance of both the armistice agreements and the Security Council's decisions.

It is possible that sufficient pressure could be brought against Nasser in the United Nations to bring about his compliance with international agreements. It is clear that wherever the effort is made it must be much stronger than heretofore if it is to be effective in bringing peace to the Middle East.

FOREIGN AID

The Administration's proposal for a long-range economic aid fund for underdeveloped countries may be turned into a false Spring with a chill breath from Congress, but in its building stage it provides some fresh hope for foreign economic aid.

The proposal, which the President has given priority in his program, is based on the urgent recommendation made by every group (see Platform for March 1957) that has studied the foreign aid program, that the year-to-year character of the program be changed so as to allow for planning and long-term development. As presently functioning, each year the Administration must request from Congress first, the authorization for the aid program, and then request the particular appropriations. Not only does this involve annual stress and strain, but it prevents the establishment of any long-range development programs since it is not known from year to year whether the authorization will be renewed. Moreover, there is an additional limiting factor in that the Administration must come to Congress for direction both as to country and to projects for which funds are to be granted.

The Administration's proposed foreign aid program would make two major innovations. It would separate military aid from economic aid, putting the former in the domestic budget of the Pentagon. This is a change that would have the very salutary and long-desired effect of setting the huge military appropriations off by themselves and emphasizing the relatively small amounts being spent for direct economic assistance to the underdeveloped countries. When the American people and Congress have these small economic aid sums before them there is much more likelihood of support for an expanded program.

Second, the Administration would, except for emergency situations, end economic grant aid and replace it with loans based on a long-term economic development fund. One of the big questions about Congressional approval of the plan lies in this area because Congress is being asked to give the Administration a long-term authorization for this proposed fund such as Congress has not given before. The number of years of the authorization and the amount of capital involved has not been specified as yet, although Secretary Dulles spoke of a fund able to make loans of $750,000,000 a year, and a four year authorization is in the wind.

The Administration's mutual security program proposals would make possible the kind of economic aid so urgently needed to eliminate dire poverty and establish decent standards of living and economic stability in the underdeveloped countries. The way now lies through Congress. Write your Congressman and Senators to tell them how urgent you feel the need is for the long-term authorization and greatly increased sums which would be available for economic aid under the Administration's program.

DISARMAMENT

A British cartoonist recently depicted MacMillan, Khruschev, and Eisenhower, each with hydrogen bomb in hand, declaiming dramatically as the smoke of the explosion envelops them, "I'll stop my tests if you'll stop yours—I'll stop if . . ." It is a sardonic but effective picture of "disarmament."

The United Nations Subcommittee on Disarmament has been meeting in London since the middle of March. It has been charged by the General Assembly with giving specific attention to the proposals for exchange of blueprints and aerial inspection (see Platform—December 1956), registering nuclear bomb tests with the United Nations, and the inclusion of intercontinental ballistic missiles in arms control plans.

It is fair to say that not much has happened so far at the London meetings although there remains an air of optimism particularly in the releases of the United States. The U.S. delegation has proposed a 25 per cent reduction in non-nuclear armament in two stages if the other nations would make similar cuts. The other subcommittee members, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and Canada, would have to agree first to a United States proposal for a first-stage 10 per cent cut in conventional arms, armed forces and military spending.

The United States made the offer of the 10 per cent reduction in the past, but the proposal for the second stage of reductions is new. It is a kind of inducement toward agreement on the first stage. The United States is hopeful that the 10 per cent reduction will be agreed on. The Soviet delegation has merely replied with a general statement of hope for future agreement, but no change on the critical question of international inspection.

When we turn to nuclear weapons the area of disagreement stretches out endlessly. It is not possible to foresee the effect on other European nations within NATO of Britain's decision to rely on nuclear weapons, but it will surely lead to a reexamination by all countries involved of the nature of their defense structures.

Even in the area of scientific research as to the effect of radioactive fallout from nuclear explosions, there is a lack of agreement. Some geneticists maintain that every dose of radiation contains the risk of genetic harm, while others maintain that the risks from nuclear explosions remain below the safety level. Japan, being geographically in the area of many of the nuclear testing areas, has requested the United States, Soviet Union, and Great Britain to cease both hydrogen and atomic tests. There is also a strong move for some UN action on this score.

IMMIGRATION

Basic revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act has been urged by leading public officials and major voluntary organizations since the law was passed five years ago. President Eisenhower has stated his opposition to the national origins quota system and has urged Congress to modify the law in relation to this and to other discriminatory aspects of the law.

Last month, a number of organizations representing all major religious groups and many nationality and public interest organizations, issued a statement urging Congress to act immediately. This was released through the American Immigration Conference of which National Council of Jewish Women is a member.

Community activity, including meetings, publicity and letters to congressmen are essential. Council Sections are urged to act independently and with other community groups to press for action now.

The text of the statement follows:

"President Eisenhower is to be commended on his message to Congress calling for "prompt action" for revision and improvement of American immigration policy. Adoption of the President's recommendations would be in accord with a humane immigration policy consistent with our national tradition.

"We believe action without delay is imperative.

"The President proposes a reasonable increase in immigration quotas, a practical approach to the utilization of unused quotas and the elimination of mortgages on future quotas. These proposals are, in our judgment, wise and represent an important step toward the elimination of discrimination from our immigration law.

"We commend the President's proposal for a permanent plan for admitting escapees from Communism. We hold that this, however, should be expanded to include any victims of religious or political persecution.

"We urge cooperation of both parties in Congress to bring about prompt action."

NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CLEARING HOUSE

Recommendations and Report of the Committee on Nominations for 1957-58

Recommendations: The Nominating Committee wishes to present the following recommendations to the Administrative Committee and the Clearing House ---

(1) That in the future, prior to the appointment of a Nominating Committee, the Clearing House should send all associated groups a notice that the committee will be appointed at the May meeting, and a request that they submit suggestions for the committee's consideration. (Although lack of time made this impracticable for the present year, the Committee felt that its work would have been facilitated had such a procedure been followed.)

(2) That the Administrative Committee review the Advisory Board, with an aim to its expansion. The Committee offers for possible consideration the names of Dean Erwin Griswold of the Harvard Law School; former Senator Harry P. Cain; and Professor Walter Gellhorn of Columbia.

(3) That since the constitution permits the Administrative Committee to appoint to itself three members-at-large, without regard to organizational affiliation, and since only two of these posts are currently filled, the Administrative Committee should consider filling the third place.

(4) That the Administrative Committee either propose an amendment to the by-laws or adopt a policy statement to the effect that in the future nominations to offices of the Clearing House or to positions on the Administrative Committee be limited to persons residing in the Washington, D. C. metropolitan area.

Report: Before it considered any nominations, your Committee reviewed the entire list of organiations and individuals who have been represented on the governing body of the Clearing House from 1949 up to now.

It also reviewed the constitutiob of the Clearing House, which provides that:

(1) Officers and members of the Administrative Committee shall be elected annually for a term of one year and shall not serve in any office for more than three successive years.

(2) Elected office in the Clearing House is limited to a chairman, four vice chairmen, secretary, treasurer, and six elected Administrative Committee members.

(3) The Nominating Committee is to present its proposed slate at the June Clearing House meeting. This slate is to be circulated to associated organizations immediately thereafter, and additional nominations may be submitted by them through July 15. The constitution also provides that such additional nominations must be approved by the Nominating Committee before they are placed on the ballot; and that election shall be by mail ballot in August, and term of office shall begin in September.

The Committee decided to renominate the present officers and Administrative Committee members who have served less than three years and who are expected to remain in Washington. Renominations were not made when it was known that the individuals concerned were planning to leave their present positions.

In the case of the chairmanship, we faced a problem of interpretation, since the present chairman was elected last December to fill the vacancy created by Dr. Adams' untimely death. It was our unanimous opinion that since Herman Edelsberg has served as chairman in an interim capacity, and for less than a full term, he is eligible for renomination.

The Nominating Committee therefore recommends the following slate of officers for 1957-58:

Chairman: Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith

Vice Chairmen:

Intellectual Freedom: Virginia Kinnaird, Nat'l Education Assoc., Defense Comm.

Civil Liberties: Kenneth Birkhead, American Veterans Committee

Civil Rights: Boris Shishkin, AFL-CIO

Human Rights: Dr. Robert E. Van Deusen, National Lutheran Council

Secretary: Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women

Treasurer: Nathaniel H. Goodrich, American Jewish Committee

Administrative Committee:

Leonard Aries, National Conference of Christians and Jews

Arthur J. Goldberg, United Steelworkers of America

Martha Mills, League of Women Voters

Clarence Mitchell, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Julia Thompson, American Nurses Association

Edward Snyder, Friends Committee on National Legislation

For the Committee: Robert W. Frase, American Book Publishers Council, Chairman
Lucile Ellison, National Education Association, Defense Commission
Kenneth Meiklejohn, Int'l Ladies Garment Workers Union, AFL-CIO
Francis Pohlhaus, Nat'l Assoc. for the Advancement of Colored People
Bernard Weitzer, Jewish War Veterans of the U. S. A.

Nominations for 1957-58 : Mr. Edelsberg called attention to the fact that the proposed slate of officers and Administrative Committee members for 1957-58, which was submitted at the June meeting by Robert W. No additional nominations had been received as of the meeting date, he added, and the slate will be held open through July 15.

CIVIL RIGHTS PROSPECTS AND PROPOSED CHANGES IN RULE 22

Congressional action on civil rights is further advanced in the 85th Congress than it has been at the same point in any Congress during the 12 years since President Franklin D. Roosevelt's wartime FEPC was killed by the Russell rider attached to a wartime appropriations bill.

Republican Party leadership (President Eisenhower, Vice President Nixon, Senate Minority Leader Knowland, House Minority Leader Martin and Representative Keating, ranking member of the House Judiciary Committee) and liberal Democrats, have succeeded in putting the minimum civil rights bill on the Senate Calendar. At the end of the 84th Congress, the same bill was detoured away from the Calendar to what Senator Douglas calls the dungeons of Senator Eastland's Judiciary Committee. It died there with the adjournment of the 84th Congress July 27, 1956.

As it went to the Senate, the bill does three things:

(1) It creates a six-member bi-partisan commission to investigate alleged violations of voting and other civil rights and to consider the need for more federal legislation. The commission would go out of existence in two years.

(2) It provides for an additional Assistant Attorney General to head a civil rights division in the Justice Department.

(3) Most important, it permits the Attorney General to go into federal courts to seek injunctions to prevent or stop violations of voting and other civil rights. If the court order is ignored, the offender could be tried for contempt of court. With the Government a party to the suit, he would be tried by the federal judge alone, not by a jury.

Although in the House the civil rights coalition defeated an attempt to nullify the minimum civil rights bill by adding a so-called jury trial amendment, in the Senate, Southern opponents are stepping up their campaign to persuade liberals in both parties to support moves to put this rider on the bill, if possible by agreement in advance of a cloture vote as a condition for getting the 64 cloture votes needed to break a filibuster.

By agreement among Senators Douglas, Knowland and Johnson, a motion to take the bill, HR 6127, from the Senate Calendar and to make it pending business of the Senate is scheduled to be made July 8. A filibuster is expected to begin, with a second to follow if the first is broken and the bill is actually made the pending business. Civil rights supporters are now attempting to get the 19 additional votes needed to break a filibuster.

On June 10, Senator Douglas made a speech which he put in the Congressional Record, pp. 7675 - 7688, in which he gave facts and tables showing (1) ways in which Negroes are kept off juries in the South; (2) the small percentage of Negroes voting in Southern States; and (3) the interrelation between the franchise and jury rolls. The Senator corrected some statistical errors on June 17 at p. 8286. Reprints of his corrected text are available from his office.

Cloture Hearings

Senator Herman E. Talmadge (D., Ga.) and Senator Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.) make up a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration which is holding hearings on a number of bills by Senator Douglas (S. Res. 17), Senators Knowland and Johnson (S. Res. 30), and others to change Rule 22. Hearing dates scheduled included June 24, 25 and 28 and July 2 and 9.

On the first day of the hearings, Senator Douglas presented a thorough recapitulation of this history of Rule 22, including efforts to change it. Senator Javits has said he is anxious to have a thorough record made by witnesses and by statements.

PROPOSALS FOR CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION LAW

Both the Administration's bill and the Celler bill for basic revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act continue to languish in committee with no immediate prospect for action--not even hearings--on either.

Congressman Walter, however, has introduced a nine-point bill, H.R. 8123, which would make a number of useful and minor reforms in the immigration law. It would lift the mortgages on immigration quotas imposed by the Displaced Persons Act; would permit the entry of 18,000 relatives of aliens who came to this country under the Refugee Relief Act; would permit entry for two years of an unlimited number of alien orphans under age 14 for adoption, etc. A substantially similar bill, S. 2369, was introduced in the Senate on June 24, by Senator Dirksen. Unlike the Walter bill, however, it includes a much-needed provision for granting permanent residence to those Hungarian refugees who were admitted to this country under the emergency parole provision of the law.

Both bills are similar to one that passed the Senate in the closing hours of the last Congress, largely through the efforts of Senators Lyndon Johnson, Watkins and Dirksen and former Senator Clements. That bill, however, unlike the current Dirksen and Walter bills, contained a modest pooling-of-quotas provision. It provided for the redistribution of 18,500 unused quotas annually to countries with quotas of less than 7,000. It died in the House.

Earlier this session, the House Judiciary Committee employed a seldom-used technique of appending general immigration amendments to Senate-approved private immigration bills. Two such amended bills have already passed the House: S. 247 (to forgive certain refugees who misrepresented their birthplace because of a fear of forcible repatriation to Communist-dominated countries); and S. 461 (to grant permanent immigration status to certain skilled specialists already in this country). Three private bills containing other general amendments are now pending before the full House Judiciary Committee: S. 126, S. 253, and S. 623. All these amendments have been included in the Walter-Dirksen bills.

Congressman Walter is pushing for passage of his package program. He hopes to have action on it expedited by having it tacked on to one of the private bills. It is anticipated, however, that some Senators may seek to include additional reforms, like the provision for Hungarian refugees included in the Dirksen bill and a modest pooling provision such as that passed by the Senate last year. Unless Senate leader Johnson and Speaker Rayburn are more persuasive than they were last year--and there is some hope they may be--Walter can be expected to oppose the pooling provision and block its passage.

(NOTE: The National Community Relations Advisory Council has made available for Clearing House distribution copies of its Legal and Legislative Information Bulletin, analyzing the major proposals before the 85th Congress for basic revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act, which should be useful for reference purposes at least for the duration of the present Congress. NEW BRICKER RESOLUTION GETS SENATE HEARING

The merits of Senator Bricker's newest version of a constitutional amendment to modify the treaty-making powers of the President (S.J. Res. 3, 85th Congress) were argued before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee which opened hearings on June 25. Senator Bricker was the only witness in support of the proposal; Senator Hennings (D., Mo.) appeared in opposition. Although the hearings were recessed subject to the call of the chair, it is unlikely that any more will be held, unless there is pressure for immediate action on the resolution. (It has been reported that Senator Dirksen (R., Ill.), a member of the subcommittee, had urged the chairman, Senator Kefauver (D., Tenn.), to report the resolution to the full Committee at the end of the hearing. The suggestion was not accepted, on the ground that the resolution is a new proposal and therefore should be subject to further study and comment. The record of the hearings will be open for two weeks for the inclusion of statements by interested groups or individuals.)

Both Senators leaned heavily on the Supreme Court's recent decision in Reid v. Covert for support of their own viewpoints. Said Senator Hennings: "If there was ever any need for an amendment because of doubt as to the supremacy of the Constitution over treaties -- and I don't think there ever was the slightest doubt -- that need has now completely vanished in the light of (this) opinion. . . I challenge the proponents of the amendment -- those few who remain after this devastatingly clear opinion -- to point to a single phrase in any of the opinions in the case that gives the slightest credence to their contention that a constitutional amendment is necessary."

Senator Bricker, on the other hand, quoted excerpts from the same decision to reinforce his position for the need of an amendment: ". . . the most recent pronouncement of the Supreme Court is, 'no agreement with a foreign nation can confer power on the Congress, or on any branch of government, which is free from the restraints of the Constitution.' . . . The Court's observations on treaty law repudiate the argument of some opponents of my amendment that constitutional restraints on the treaty-making power are incompatible with the effective conduct of foreign policy in an atomic age."

Other developments in this field are believed by some to have eliminated any need for the Bricker Amendment. Discussing the action taken by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and approved by the Senate, with regard to the treaty permitting the U. S. to become a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Arthur Krock wrote in the New York Times on June 18:

"The statement of its 'understanding' with the Executive that the Senate is about to include in its resolution approving the treaty by which the United States is to become a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency is the first employment of a simple method whereby the causes for loading down treaties with 'reservations' and the principal argument for the Bricker Resolution are simultaneously removed. . . .

"Beginning in November, 1953, and many times thereafter, it was pointed out by this department that the method now employed by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations was constantly available, and that by two changes in Senate Rule XXXVII the genuine concern of Senator Bricker and his supporters could reasonably be allayed. One of these changes has since been effected: that there must be a roll-call on any vote by which treaties are approved or rejected. But the Senate has not yet made the other change in the rule, though it was followed in principle in the atomic energy treaty resolution recommended by Senator Green's committee. . . Should the Senate make a precedent of the Green resolution, it could get the same results on an item-by-item basis. But inserting in Rule XXXVII the provision as outlined here would remove the last prop under the Bricker proposal as long as the rule endured."

The so-called Bricker Resolution has been introduced in four successive Congresses, but as time passes Congressional support for it seems to be decreasing. When it was introduced in the 82nd Congress its sponsorship included a majority of the members of the Senate. This year, however, Senator Bricker is its sole sponsor. Several versions of the proposal have been introduced this year in the House -- eight, to be exact -- but they have not even been referred to subcommittee and it is extremely doubtful that they will be considered in this Session.

One of these resolutions, sponsored by Congressman Noah Mason (R., Ill.) is, in his words, as "strong as the original Bricker Amendment," which, he continued, "has been watered down so much to meet the objections of the President and the State Department that even if passed it would not prove an effective check upon the Executive. The present Bricker amendment is a very poor substitute, in my opinion, for the original amendment submitted by Senator Bricker."

This view is not shared by Senator Hennings, who termed the new version of the amendment a "very dangerous proposal." For a careful analysis of the current proposal the following materials are recommended:

1) Senator Hennings' and Senator Bricker's statements on S. J. Res. 3, presented before the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on June 25, 1957, and available from their respective offices.

2) Report dated May 1, 1957, of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, from its offices, 42 West 44th Street, New York.

3) "Views of Deans of Law Schools on the Bricker Amendment;" a pamphlet available from the Committee to Defend the Constitution by Preserving the Treaty-Making Powers, 29 Broadway, New York 6.

In a related development the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved a bill (S. 603) introduced by Senator Knowland (R., Calif.) that would require the international agreements, other than treaties, be submitted to the Senate within 60 days after they are executed. This is identical with a bill passed by the Senate in the 84th Congress. For a detailed discussion of this proposal see Civil Liberties Bulletin No. 46, July, 1956, page 5.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION IS ISSUE IN EXAMINATION OF PASSPORT POLICY

Freedom of information is the immediate issue at stake in congressional studies of the State Department's ban on passports for news correspondents for Communist China. Representatives of the press and other information media hold that the American people have a right to first-hand, non-Communist reports on conditions there, and that the availability of such information is in the national interest.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee has begun hearings on S. Con. Res. 21, introduced by Senator Thomas C. Hennings (D., Mo.) which would declare it the sense of the Congress that the State Department should issue a new passport to William Worthy of the Baltimore Afro-American, whose request has been refused because he went to China last winter.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee has held hearings on State's denial of passports to correspondents wishing to visit Communist China, and has before it a bill, H. Con. Res. 153, introduced by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.) which calls on the State Department to issue a passport to "any duly accredited newspaper man or woman, or radio or television reporter assigned by the information medium by which employed to perform reportorial duties in any country or area abroad."

While Secretary of State John Foster Dulles is currently re-examining this policy, there is no indication so far that he will change it. On June 26,

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt reported in her column that her wish to make a news-gathering trip to Communist China had been blocked by State's refusal of her request for validation of her passport for travel there.

"CHARITY RACKETS" BILL
CLARIFIED BY AMENDMENT

H.R. 3400, the District of Columbia "charity racket" bill to regulate solicitation of funds in phoney charity drives, had features that some civil rights organizations found objectionable. Among these were the authority given the Commissioners to examine and publish any organizational records, the absolute prohibition against telephone solicitation by paid personnel, the complicated procedure set up to regulate solicitations, and the failure to differentiate between paid and volunteer solicitors.

In the Senate subcommittee to which the House-passed bill was referred, some of these objections were recognized and amendments were adopted. These would limit inspection of records to "financial" records, prohibit the publication of membership or contribution lists, exempt religious organizations from coverage, and allow telephone solicitation by staff members of soliciting organizations.

On June 27, the Senate's changes were agreed to by the House and the bill as amended was sent to the President for signature.

BILLS AFFECTING AMERICAN INDIANS
IN THE 85th CONGRESS

At the beginning of the 85th Congress it appeared likely that important legislation affecting American Indians would be promptly enacted. Early in the session, various members in both Houses reintroduced the most important measures held over from the preceding Congress. Senator Murray introduced S. Con. Res. 3 calling for a Point-4 Program for Indians. In reality this would be a restatement of Congressional policy, now supposedly stated in H. Con. Res. 108 of the 83rd Congress, which called for the termination of federal supervision of Indians at the earliest possible date and specifically named certain states and tribes for which "termination" should be arranged immediately. S. Con. Res. 3, which looks to a long-range improvement and development program, is in substance a repudiation of "108". In the House identical resolutions, H. Con. Res. 155 and 160, were introduced by Representatives Metcalf and McGovern, respectively.

The 83rd Congress also passed P. L. 280, which provided for the transfer of civil and criminal jurisdiction over Indians to certain named states and further gave the consent of the United States to the assumption of jurisdiction by any other state. When President Eisenhower signed the bill, he issued a statement saying that he signed with reluctance and he urged the Congress to amend or strike out two objectionable sections. In the 84th Congress several amending bills were introduced but all failed. Again in the 85th Congress, early in the session, amending bills of two kinds were introduced. The administration continued to insist that the transfer of jurisdiction to the states should be made without requiring Indian consent. Most of the Indian tribes and national organizations working for Indian welfare supported other bills which would make the transfer effective only when agreed to by the various Indian tribes. The pending bills in this field are S. 210, S. 331, H. R. 3493, and H. R. 3790.

A third major bill, again identical with a bill in the 84th Congress, is H. R. 2787, which would set up a method and authorize appropriations to deal with the complicated problem of Indian heirship lands. A large percentage of the individually allotted lands now held by Indians is held in undivided interests in the second, third, or even later generations after the original owner. Under existing law the consent of all the heirs is necessary to a lease or sale. Although the text of this bill has been before the Interior Department for 2-1/2 years, it has not yet made a report to the Congress and it seems unlikely that any report will be made in the near future.

Although the Congress has not formally stated a new policy, it is clear that the attitude of the Senate and House committees is not the same as it was three or four years ago. It has been necessary to amend the Klamath and Menominee termination acts because some provisions of those statutes are unworkable or unfair to the Indians. Several amending bills have extended the time in which plans may be worked out and have also provided for federal contribution to the costs of termination. These costs include social-economic surveys and timber cruises.

Senator Langer with 20 other Senators sponsored a bill, S. 574, which was intended to promote industrial development on or near Indian reservations. It would authorize a fund of $200,000,000 to be lent to tribes, corporations or individuals. Although this bill has strong bipartisan sponsorship, its passage seems doubtful. Indians are also interested in the Area Redevelopment bill, S. 964, sponsored by Senator Douglas and 18 other Senators. As originally introduced in the 84th Congress, (S. 2663) this bill would have excluded Indians, but after good hearings, at which many Indians testified, the bill was amended to make Indian tribes eligible. The amended language is retained in this year's bill.

Beyond proposals in the fields of health and medicine, most of the other Indian bills in the present Congress deal with the affairs of particular tribes. One of these is worthy of notice, because its enactment might set a precedent for a new federal-state relationship in dealing with Indian affairs. This is the Humphrey-Marshall bill, (S. 1595, H. R. 6943) which would establish an autonomous Indian administration for the State of Minnesota. It would be a federal corporation with wide powers. It would have on its Board of Directors representatives of the State, of the Federal Government, and of the Indians of Minnesota.

AJCONGRESS ISSUES DOCUMENTED REPORT ON EGYPTIAN CAMPAIGN AGAINST JEWS

The American Jewish Congress has renewed its appeal to President Eisenhower to intervene with the Masser regime to halt the Egyptian government's policy of oppression against its Jewish population, has called on the United States delegation to take the lead in the General Assembly in pressing for action against Egypt's violations of fundamental human rights, and has urged the U. S. government to offer haven to Jewish expellees from Egypt. These three actions are advocated in a report entitled "The Black Record: Nasser's Persecution of Egyptian Jewry," a 48-page survey of the tragedy that has engulfed the Egyptian Jewish community, which warns that "unless the free world acts decisively and immediately, the Jewish community of Egypt is doomed."

"The Black Record" charges Egypt with carrying out a well-planned and systematic program based on Hitler's pattern, aimed at the destruction of its Jewish populace, and based on "a deliberate and long-planned policy" that is still in operation. On November 1, within 72 hours of the outbreak of fighting in the Sinai Peninsula, the Egyptian government promulgated a series of decrees which, among other things, laid the groundwork for the seizure of hostages; denationalization of Jews; internments and expulsions; and sequestration of property. "These decrees," the report says," "could not have been conceived, written and printed in the three or four days that intervened between the opening of military hostilities and their publication in official journals. They were obviously the product of considerable study and preparation . . . and their very perfection indicates that these acts reflect not an improvised response but a thorough plan."

The contention of Egyptian government spokesmen that the on-going campaign has been directed solely against "Zionist agents" is dismissed by "The Black Record" as a semantic ruse designed to divert world opinion from its essential character. The fact is, the study states, that the Zionist movement has had little influence among Egyptian Jews. These constitute only a tiny minority of 50,000 in the total population of 22 million, but the number of them affected by the acts of internment, expulsion and sequestration is so large as to preclude any belief that the target of Egypt's wrath is solely the "Zionists" who allegedly menace Egypt's security, the document points out.

Expulsion Figures High

To document its charges, the survey cites a mass of data, including eye-witness accounts by victims of the persecution, reports by reputable journalists and agencies, diplomats and official Egyptian documents. An appendix listing the arrivals of refugee Jews from Egypt shows that between November 22, 1956, and January 23, 1957, the total number of expellees was 8,435, or almost one-fifth of the entire Jewish community of the country. That total has since been increased substantially.

Rather than ceasing after the UN cease-fire and the termination of hostilities, the persecutions "took on such intensity that their ultimate import could not be mistaken," the report says. That these persecutions "continue and give no sign of abating" was emphasized by the AJCongress is making the report public, pointing out that an additional 15,000 Egyptian Jews were already awaiting transportation facilities to leave Egypt, and that the International Red Cross had reported that 4,500 Jews were being carried on the rolls of the rabbinical councils in Cairo and Alexandria as "entirely destitute." August Lindt, U. N. High Commissioner for Refugees, announced shortly before the survey was issued that in the next six months he expects 13,800 Egyptians to arrive in Europe as refugees. The great majority of these will be Jews.

Three-Point Program

Demonstrating that Egypt's anti-Jewish program is a contravention of the Geneva Convention of 1949, of which Egypt is a signatory, and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted in 1948 by the UN General Assembly, "The Black Record" deplores the UN's failure to take any public action with respect to Egyptian Jewry, and contrasts this lack with the UN's adoption of ten different resolutions relating to the oppression of the gallant Hungarian revolutionaries. The study also expressed disappointment at the failure of the American government to press for action to end the persecutions, and noted that civic groups, church bodies, and labor and professional organizations have urged the U. S. to take more effective diplomatic action.

The booklet concludes with the following recommendations:

"1. The President of the United States should remind the Government of Egypt directly of its obligation as a member of the United Nations and of the civilized community to abandon its present course . . . and to cease and desist from its acts of arrest, economic strangulation, persecution and deportation.

"2. The U. S. delegation to the United Nations should take the lead in the General Assembly in calling for action consistent with the Charter of the United Nations and with the several international compacts to which Egypt is a signatory that expressly guarantee respect for fundamental human rights.

"3. The Government of the United States should extend this country's tradition of sanctuary and haven to the Egyptian refugees. It should use the existing authority exercised by the Attorney General under the immigration laws on behalf of Hungarian refugees in a similar fashion on behalf of those Jews and stateless persons in Egypt who have been deported or compelled to leave."

Copies of "The Black Record" are available from the American Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York 28.

RECENT SUPREME COURT DECISIONS AFFECTING CIVIL LIBERTIES

In the past few weeks the Supreme Court has handed down a number of decisions of far-reaching import in the field of civil liberties. They include:

Censorship: On July 24 the Court --

1) upheld, 6-3, the Federal obscenity statute prohibitng the mailing of indecent literature. The First Amendment's guarantees of freedom of speech and press do not extend to the protection of obscene matter, the Court ruled, holding that "All ideas having even the slightest redeeming social importance. . . have the full protection of the guarantees . . . but implicit in the history of the First Amendment is the rejection of obscenity as without social importance." The Court said that the portrayal of sex in art, literature or scientific works is not in itself sufficient reason to deny material the constitutional protection of free speech and press, but that the test is whether material "appeals to prurient interest;"

2) likewise sustained, 7-2, a California law against keeping for sale or advertising obscene or indecent books;

3) and sustained, 5-4, a New York statute authorizing the police to seize obscene books summarily, and then obtain a Court order authorizing their destruction. The Court said this did not violate the due process clause of the Constitution.

Delay in Arraignment: In another June 24 decision, the Court freed a man convicted as a rapist, on the ground that in holding him for 7-1/2 hours while questioning and eliciting a confession from him, the police had violated Rule 5 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, which requires that an arrested person must be brought before a committing magistrate "without unnecessary delay." His confession was therefore not admissible as evidence against him, the Court rules.

Congressional Investigating Powers: On June 17, in a 6-1 decision with Justice Clark dissenting, the Court reversed the congressional contempt conviction of John T. Watkins, holding that (1) the limitation placed by the First Amendment on congressional investigating powers, (2) the lack of power by a congressional committee to "expose for the sake of exposure" and without a clearly-defined legislative purpose, and (3) the indefiniteness of the authorizing resolution of the House Un-American Activities Committee, combined to render the propriety of the Committee's inquiry into Watkins' political associations and beliefs so vague that he could not determine with certainty whether or not the questions were relevant to any legitimate congressional purpose. Therefore he cannot be convicted for an act the consequence of which was not predictable.

State Investigations: In a separate opinion on the same date, the Court also reversed a New Hampshire Supreme Court contempt conviction against Prof. Paul M. Sweezy, author-lecturer at the University of New Hampshire, for not answering questions put to him in an investigation conducted by the State's Attorney General. Following the Watkins decision, the Court held that the jurisdiction of the investigator was not clear, due to too broad a grant of power to investigate by the State Legislature to the Attorney General. In a concurring opinion, Justices Frankfurter and Harlan held flatly that Sweezy's rights under the First Amendment had been violated.

Discretionary Firing Power: In an 8-0 decision, also on June 17, the Supreme Court held that Dean Acheson, then Secretary of State, had acted incorrently in discharging John Stewart Service as a security risk in 1951. The Court said that the State Department had violated its own regulations safeguarding the employee's rights, in dismissing Service under the McCarran Rider (which authorized the Secretary of State to dismiss employees when it was deemed necessary "in the interest of the United States") after the Deputy Under Secretary of State had approved the Department's Loyalty Security Board's prior action in clearing him.

Smith Act Cases: By another June 17 decision the Court upset the Smith Act conviction of five California Communists, and ordered new trials for nine others in a 4-3 majority. The decision rested on two bases:

1) The Government had misconstrued the word "organize" in the Smith Act to mean a continuing process that goes on throughout the life of an organization. The Court held that a stricter construction of "organize" must be made, which dictates the meaning in terms of "to establish or to found." Since the Communist Party was organized in its present form not later than 1945, the three-year Statute of Limitations applied.

2) The trial court judge's instructions to the jury were defective in that they failed to point out that under the Act, advocacy of the violent overthrow of our Government must be advocacy of action, now or in the future, made with the intention of inciting people to that end, and not merely a theoretical urging.

Disclosure of Government Records: On June 3, the Supreme Court ordered a new trial for Clinton E. Jencks, holding that the Government must either dismiss the charges against him, or make available to him for the preparation of his defense FBI reports about which Government witnesses had given oral testimony. Jencks had been convicted of filing a false non-Communist affidavit in 1950, when he was president of a local of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, a union expelled by the CIO as being Communist-dominated.

The Fifth Amendment and Assumption of Guilt: By a unanimous ruling on May 30, the Supreme Court granted a new trial to Max Halperin, a New York lawyer, because the trial judge had permitted the prosecuting attorney to bring out the fact that Halperin had refused on Fifth Amendment grounds to answer questions put to him in the course of a Grand Jury investigation of corruption in the Bureau of Internal Revenue; and because the judge had instructed the jury that, in determining what weight should be given to Halperin's testimony, it could take into consideration his invoking of his constitutional privilege.

American Civil Liberties Union.

CLEARING HOUSE WILL DISTRIBUTE CIVIL LIBERTIES FILM PRINTS

The Clearing House is grateful to the Carrie Chapman Catt Memorial Fund, which has offered it several interesting film prints that were formerly distributed by the Freedom Agenda program, and that became available with the closing of the Freedom Agenda offices. The pictures deal provocatively with questions of freedom of thought and speech, and are designed to be a basis for group discussion. We will be glad to loan them to any national or local organization or citizens' group, at a rental charge of $3 for out-of-town, or $2 in the metropolitan Washington area, to cover postage and handling.

The films are: Freedom to Learn, Freedom to Read, Omnibus, the J. Robert Oppenheimer - Ed Murrow interview, The Open Mind, What Do You Say?, What Do You Think?, and The Challenge.

ORGANIZATIONAL PROGRAMS AND PEOPLE

Dr. Ralph F. Fuchs, who has been a member of the Clearing House Administrative Committee during the past year and who served with Kenneth Birkhead of AVC as co-chairman of our 1957 conference, will leave Washington and his position as General Secretary to the American Association of University Professors late in August. He has been AAUP General Secretary since September 1, 1955, succeeding the late Ralph E. Himstead, who was also active in Clearing House affairs. Dr. Fuchs will be succeeded by Dr. Robert K. Carr, Parker Professor Law and Political Science at Dartmouth College, who is well-known as the Executive Secretary of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights, which issued its report, "To Secure These Rights," in 1947, and as the author of a number of publications in the civil liberties field. This has been Ralph's third extended stay in the Capital. He says he is leaving his Washington activities and associations with extreme regret; but the classrooms and law books of Indiana University, from which he has been on leave-of-absence, possess an overwhelming attraction for him after the two years he has been away.

In mid-June Katherine Jansson resigned her post as Washington representative of the American Association for the United Nations, which she had held for nearly seven years. Mrs. Jansson was a vice chairman of the Clearing House in 1955 and 1956. Her successor at the AAUN office is Mrs. Lynn Kirk, who has been assistant to the director of the Cooperative League of the USA for several years.

Nearly one out of four hotels in the United States practice religious discrimination in the admission of guests, according to a survey conducted by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The survey team tried to examine the policies of 3,014 hotels in the U. S., Canada, Mexico, Hawaii, Alaska and the Caribbean, but was able to get current specific information for only 1,065 of them. Of these, 237 or 22.2 percent were shown to discriminate against Jews. . . Another ADL study indicates a sharp decline in religious and racial discrimination in college fraternities, with veterans who entered college after World War II leading the student movement to eliminate discrimination.

The Rev. Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer has been elected general director of the Washington Office of the National Council of Churches, succeeding the late Dr. Earl F. Adams, who was chairman of the Clearing House. Dr. Buschmeyer will take over his new post on September 1. Since 1949 he has been associate general secretary of the Congregational Christian Churches and executive director of that denomination's Department of the Ministry. He has travelled widely in the interests of the ecumenical movement, serving as a key participant in World Council of Churches conferences. A native Californian, Dr. Buschmeyer received degrees in religious education and in sacred theology from Boston University, and holds honorary doctorates in literature and theology from the University of New Hampshire and the Pacific School of Religion.

Something new has been added -- a bright shiny diamond to Julia Bennett's left hand. Her engagement to John M. Armistead, a Knoxville, Tenn., attorney, was announced in June. As director of the American Library Association's Washington office, Julia has been responsible for ALA liaison with the Federal legislative and executive branches since 1951. In 1954 and 1955 she was the Clearing House's secretary, and currently she is its vice chairman on intellectual freedom. She has resigned her ALA post effective November 1.

Leonard P. Aries, director of the Washington office of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, has been named director of the organization's National Commission on Labor-Management Organizations, and started his new work on July 1. A government lawyer before he joined the NCCJ in 1953, Len is a member of the Clearing House Administrative Committee.

The appointment of Charles S. Zimmerman, vice president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, as chairman of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, was recently announced by AFL-CIO President George Meany. Mr. Zimmerman has played a leading role in many human rights activities in labor and civic affairs. He is chairman of the executive board of the labor advisory committee of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, and a member of the New York Mayor's Commission on Inter-Group Relations. He is also chairman of the Anti-Discrimination Department of the Jewish Labor Committee, and is active in the work of the Urban League and the NAACP. The AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee was established by the constitution of the merged labor movement, and has as its objective the extension of equal rights to all workers, regardless of race, creed or color. Mr. Zimmerman succeeds James B. Carey, President of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, in the post.

Sidney Hollander, who is a member of the Clearing House Advisory Board, was honored as Maryland's "Mr. Civil Liberties" by the Maryland Branch of the American Civil Liberties Union when it made its "1957 Report on Civil Liberties" in the State and the Nation.

Margaret Garrity, former race relations secretary for the National Catholic Welfare Conference here, has been appointed regional director of the newly-established Chicago regional office of the President's Committee on Government Contracts. The office will serve the Committee as a working liaison with government contracting agencies, contractors, labor organizations and social agencies concerned with the elimination of discrimination in employment, in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Maggie, who as secretary of the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems was a member of the Clearing House Administrative Committee in 1955, has set up an office at Room 1021, Bankers Building, 105 West Adams St., Chicago.

The Federation of American Scientists is losing Dorothy Higinbotham, who's been administrative secretary at its national office here for the past ten years, and whose marriage to Theodore Osgood, a Foreign Service officer with the State Department, took place in late June. While Dottie is willing to work part-time for the next several months, the FAS is looking for additional help in its Washington office, and would welcome suggestions.

Richard C. Shipman has joined the Washington office of the National Farmers Union, where his assignment covers all work relating to citizenship, including civil rights and liberties. He is a former vice president of the Farmers Union in Montana, where he ran a ranch.

MATERIALS IN THE CLEARING HOUSE FIELDS

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON GOVERNMENT SECURITY: This 800-page report to the President and Congress was made public on June 23, after a year and a half of study by the 12-member Commission which was headed by Loyd Wright. (Mr. Wright discussed the Commission's work at the June Clearing House meeting.) The Commission was set up by Congress in 1955 to "investigate the entire Government security program" with an aim to developing "a sound Government program" to establish procedures, to vigorously enforce "effective and realistic security laws" and to assure a "careful, consistent and efficient administration of policy in a manner which will protect the national security and preserve basic American rights." The sweeping report covers all present security programs, as well as international organizations, passports, civil air transport, immigration and nationality, and criminal statutes, and concludes with proposals for legislation covering a Federal security act, loyalty of military personnel, immigration and passport security act, interception of wire and radio communications, and unauthorized disclosure of defense information, and for executive orders dealing with port security, airport security and international organizations. One of its major recommendations is for a Central Security Office within the Executive Branch. The wide public discussion which followed its release will become intensified as it is studied and as legislative and executive moves to implement its recommendations develop. The Commission (441 G St., N. W., Washington 25, D. C.) has been making a limited number of copies available to national organizations. It can also be secured from the Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at $2.50 a copy.

SCHOOL CALENDAR-- September '57 - August '58: Issued annually by the American Jewish Committee, this desk calendar lists all important patriotic and religious observances and explains the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish holy days. Although it was originally designed for school use only, it has become increasingly popular with non-school people, and it is an invaluable help in planning inter-organizational work. 20¢ a single copy, quantity prices on request, from the AJC's Community Relations Service, 386 Fourth Ave., New York 16.

ASSAULT UPON FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION: This study by the Council for Social Action of the American Jewish Congress is the first comprehensive document covering "The Southern Attack on the NAACP." Its first half consists of a state-by-state description of moves and techniques used by Southern state governments in an effort to proscribe the NAACP's activities or to outlaw it, in the past two years; the second half is an analysis of these legal and quasi-legal devices and of their effects on basic constitutional liberties and their implications for other community organizations, documenting the foreword comment of Eugene Carson Blake, President of the National Council of Churches: "These 'legal' attempts to make it impossible for Negroes and others to associate freely to secure their rights under the law of our land are a threat to the liberties of all Americans of all races." 35¢ a copy in bulk orders, 50¢ an individual copy, from the American Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th St., New York 28.

Dear Harold:

This is to acknowledge and thank you for the $25 subscription from the Southern Regional Council which arrived here last week.

I have some idea of your financial problems (which must rather resemble my own on a far larger scale) and so I appreciate your thoughtfulness and cooperation all the more.

I'm grateful, too, for your suggestion about the state organizations, and will follow through on it after the first of October.

Thank you again, and all the best,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Mary Alice:

I am afraid that the minimum amout of $25.00 is the best we can do, and I am enclosing check in that amount. I wish it could be more, but perhaps this small sum from the poverty stricken South will stir the consciences of some of our wealthy Northern cousins.

As to the state organizations which George Mitchell suggested that you add to your mailing list: they are autonomous organizations and as of October 1st will be completely independent of the Southern Regional Council. While they are hard pressed financially, you might want to send each one of them a letter similar to the one which you wrote me.

All best regards.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

August 15, 1957.

Mr. Harold Fleming, Director,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Ave., North East,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Harold:

I am wondering if it would be possible for the Southern Regional Council to begin making any subscription payment to the Clearing House?

We are having a rather difficult time this year. While the number of cooperating organizations keeps growing -- both in our annual conferences and in our year-round program -- this brings a concomitant increase in demands on us for materials and services, and in our expenses.

But this year the Robert Marshall Civil Liberties Trust, which contributed $2500 in 1956, has told us that its Trustees think the organizations themselves should assume greater responsibility for maintaining the Clearing House, and it has accordingly reduced its contribution for 1957 to $500.

Because of this, the Administrative Committee has decided that we must ask every group that receives our mailings to do what it can towards helping to cover the actual production costs of our mailings and services.

Back in 1951, the Administrative Committee set $25 per name per year as the amount needed to do this. George Mitchell some time ago asked us to add your office and nine of your regional offices to our mail list, and we were glad to do so without charge, as a part of our informational work in our fields.

I am quite sure that we couldn't expect the Southern Regional Council to subscribe for all of these at the rate the Administrative Committee has suggested.

But if you can make any token payment, it will be much appreciated. I'm attaching a copy of our 1956 financial report to show you how much we need any help you can give us.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

FIRST CIVIL RIGHTS BILL IN 82 YEARS IS PASSED BY CONGRESS

Late Thursday night, August 29, 1957, the Senate passed the "compromise" civil rights bill (HR 6127) as it had been agreed to by the leadership of both Houses of Congress and both parties. Thus the first piece of civil rights legislation in 82 years was on its way to the President for signature.

It is perhaps too soon to make an objective evaluation of the new law. The organizations that worked most actively from the very beginning of the 85th Congress to get a really meaningful bill accepted and worked for the Administration package proposal as a "minimum but meaningful" one. The final product is less than that proposal and there are therefore honest differences of opinion as to whether it is still "meaningful". These groups did conclude, as will be detailed below, that even the Senate version of the bill was worth having if the alternative were no bill at all. Actually, the final bill is somewhat better than the Senate version. (See below.)

One thing is crystal clear. The bill was probably the best that could be obtained as long as the threat of King Filibuster hovered over the Senate and as long as few believed that the necessary 64 votes were available for cloture. To say that a miracle was accomplished because there was no filibuster is to ignore the obvious facts. The two major deficiencies of the new law are there because the Senate did not care take on a fight to break threatened filibusters. The Southern bloc used this threat to eliminate Part III and to write in a jury trial amendment. When Senator Thurmond spoke for 24 hours in a grandstand performance, the other Southerners failed to join in because their earlier threat to filibuster had already given them their major objectives. To have joined Thurmond then was to threaten the very filibuster rule which had helped them so much. Russell and Long and others frankly stated that this was the reason why they did not join Thurmond in his speaking orgy.

Bringing the Bill to the Senate Floor

After House passage of HR 6127, the basic problem was that of assuring action on the Senate floor. The Eastland Judiciary Committee had well demonstrated its inability to act. The only hope was to have the Senate take up the House bill without referring it to committee. Bipartisan support for this action was led by Senators Knowland and Douglas. After serious and angry debate, the bill was placed on the calendar and kept from the Eastland graveyard. Voting to do this were 34 Republicans and 11 Democrats. For sending it to committee were 34 Democrats and 5 Republicans. A number of Democratic Senators who normally are in the civil rights bloc went along with Wayne Morse's argument that "orderly procedure" required sending the bill to committee.

Elimination of Part III

As originally passed by the House on June 18, HR 6127 contained a Part III which would have given the Justice Department the power to seek injunctions to enforce civil rights other than voting rights. This would have included, among other things, the whole question of segregation in schools and elsewhere. When the bill came over to the Senate, Senator Russell launched a major assault against this provision. He argued that federal troops would be used to force the intermingling of the races. It was charged that the authors of the bill had concealed this provision from the public, the absurdity of which charge is demonstrated by merely looking at the title of the bill, let alone the fact that both Houses had had extensive hearings and the House had passed it after many days of debate. The final blow came when the President himself expressed dismay at the provision. He later expressed lukewarm support for the entire bill, but the damage had been done. After first passing unanimously a Knowland-Humphrey amendment to "de-bayonet the bill," the Senate then voted to eliminate the heart of Part III. The vote was 58 to 38. Voting to retain the provision were 25 Republicans and 13 Democrats; voting to scuttle it were 34 Democrats and 18 Republicans. Southern Democrats found allies principally along Northwestern Democrats and right-wing Republicans. Attempts to work out a compromise Part III had failed. Later, a half-hearted effort was made to restore part of Part III, but it was too late.

Jury Trial Added by Senate

By a vote of 158 to 251, the House had rejected a trial-by-jury amendment. After the elimination of Part III in the Senate, it was hoped that that body would resist the jury trial amendment. But the threat of filibuster led the Democratic leadership to exert heavy pressure for some kind of such amendment. Senators O'Mahoney, Kefauver and Church, after many previous versions, finally emerged with an amendment which limited the jury trial to criminal contempt only, made it apply to all statutes involving the use of injunctions, and added a new idea, a provision which might permit more Negroes to serve on federal juries. This latter provision, of possible value in general, really did nothing to help the bill since even one white juror could insist upon acquittal or a hung jury. But the strategy was effective, and finally the Senate approved the amendment by a vote of 51 to 42. Voting for the amendment were 39 Democrats and 12 Republicans; voting against were 33 Republicans and 9 Democrats. On final passage of the weakened bill, the vote was 72 to 18.

Saving the Bill from Politics

The Senate version of the bill was, of course, very disappointong to civil rights advocates. It was hoped that the House would improve it somehow. But it was the practically unanimous judgment of all friends of civil rights that even the Senate bill as passed would be better than no bill. Initial statements by some Republican leaders indicated that the bill might be scuttled for this session in the hope that next year, a political year, a better bill might emerge. Civil rights forces sharply dissented. They therefore called for action this year on the best possible bill, and urged both political parties "to place the goal of some progress in this area ahead of any fancied political advantage." After a while, others started to insist on action this year.

The bill then went back to the House where the Rules Committee, headed by Representative Smith of Virginia, became a problem. During the delays caused by his intransigence, a compromise jury trial amendment was finally worked out and agreed to by the leadership of both parties and both Houses. A Rules Committee meeting was then held and the bill went through both Houses without further trouble.

Under the compromise amendment, jury trials would be permitted only if the judge elected to grant one or if he himself levied a penalty of more than 45 days or more than $400 fine. Furthermore, the provision was limited to voting cases only. There is general agreement that this final compromise is a real improvement over the Senate version.

What Does the Bill Do?

The new law is basically a right-to-vote bill. It will give the Federal government the power to seek injunctions to enforce voting rights. Violations of such injunctions will presumably be followed up with contempt action. Only time will tell how truly effective will be the civil contempt procedures, and how much the jury trial provision will hamper criminal contempt actions. In addition to this substantive provision, the law will create a six-man Civil Rights Commission to investigate all civil rights problems, and will set up a special civil rights section in the Department of Justice headed by a special Assistant Attorney General.

Changes Needed in Rule 22

As indicated above, passage of HR 6127 only underscores the need for changes in the cloture rule. Even though only Thurmond filibustered conspicuously, the threat was always there, and a weakened bill is the result. Hearings on Rules changes have been held by a special subcommittee consisting of Senators Talmadge and Javits. As was to be expected, no agreement resulted. On the last day of the session, Senators Neuburger, Douglas, Humphrey, McNamara and Clark issued a joint statement to "confirm our long-standing view that Rule XXII is in need of drastic modification. A majority of Senators should have the opportunity to act when they are ready to act."

CONGRESSIONAL ACTIVITIES IN THE CIVIL LIBERTIES AREA

On August 8, at the behest of Attorney General Brownell, the Senate passed S. 1411, to amend Public Law 733, clarifying its suspension provisions by providing that the suspension of an employee faced with security charges, prior to hearing or termination, should be discretionary -- that is, there would be nothing to require such suspension.

When this bill reached the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the Committee added new language which went far beyond the purview of the Senate bill, and which would have the effect of overruling the Supreme Court's decision in Cole vs. Young (which held that President Eisenhower acted without statutory authority when he issued his Executive Order No. 10450 imposing the standard that a Federal employee's employment must be "clearly consistent with the interest of national security" to Federal employees occupying positions not affecting national security). The Committee amended the bill with the substance of Rep. Francis E. Walter's H. R. 981, equating "national security" with "national safety" (although it omitted the term "welfare" which was also used in the Walter bill's original definition of "security") and bringing all employees, in non-sensitive as well as sensitive positions, within the security program.

Another amendment approved by the Committee would provide for appeal to the Civil Service Commission by an employee adversely affected by the Security Program. The Commission's decision in the case would be binding on the head of the department or agency involved.

In its report (House Report 1201) the Committee acknowledges that its approved bill, if passed, should be considered "stopgap" legislation pending further consideration of the recommendations of the President's Commission on Government Security. A minority report by Reps. Chet Holifield (D., Calif.) and Charles O. Porter (D., Ore.) disputed the need for the proposal, and also urged that the Congress give careful study to the report of the Loyd Wright Commission before taking any action.

Commission Recommendations

The Wright Commission's proposals in the area of employee security are embodied in bills introduced in the Senate by Senators Cotton (R., N. H.) and Stennis (D., Miss.) (S. 2414) and in the House by Congressmen Murray (D., Tenn.) and Rees (R., Kan.) (H. R. 8322 and 8323). Provisions of these proposals, on which hearings are contemplated in the next sessions, are as follows:

1) The establishment of a Central Security Office which would consist of a three-man review board and examiners who would hear and review loyalty charges propounded by the individual agencies. This office would also have monitory and supervisory duties in connection with a large-scale security program.

2) The setting up of a Loyalty Program to cover all government employees. The program's criterion for dismissal of employees, as well as in the hiring of applicants, would be the existence of a reasonable doubt as to their loyalty.

3) The setting up of a hearing apparatus before the Central Security Office examiners which would be accorded to applicants with a greater measure than presently exists of subpoena, confrontation and cross-examination rights against government informant witnesses.

Special House Subcommittee on Supreme Court Decisions

The House Judiciary Committee has set up a special subcommittee to hold hearings on the effect of certain Supreme Court decisions on executive and legislative functioning. Its membership is: Edwin W. Willis (D., La.) chairman; Earl Chudoff (D., Pa.), Byron G. Rogers (D., Col.), Arch A. Moore (R., W. Va.) and William C. Cramer (R., Fla.)

The Willis Subcommittee has set for itself the task of reviewing the effects of three decisions: Mallory v. U. S. (77 S.Ct. 1356); Jencks v. U. S. (77 S. Ct. 1007) (FBI Files); and Watkins v. U. S. (77 S. Ct. 1173) (powers of congressional committees.)

So far hearings have been held only on the Mallory case, in which the Supreme Court reversed a capital conviction for rape because the defendant's confession was obtained while he was being held by the D. C. police for an undue amount of time before arraignment. The only testimony presented to date has been that of police and enforcement witnesses such as the chief of police of Los Angeles and U. S. Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney III. They have made the claim that the Mallory decision hampers proper law enforcement which at times must require some delay before arraignment.

Omnibus Security Bill

Congressman Walter on August 19 introduced for consideration next session H. R. 9352, an omnibus security proposal entitled the National Security Act. This was referred to the House Un-American Activities Committee, of which Mr. Walter is chairman.

It is an extensive 141-page bill touching on all phases of security, and including many proposals which have been heretofore made. Among them are:

1) Amendment to the Foreign Agents Registration Act to cover registration of propaganda and senders of such propaganda outside of the United States when transmitted to the United States. Another amendment would require registration of persons engaged in private and non-political financial or mercantile activities in behalf of foreign principals.

2) A provision extending the scope of contempt of Congress to include "misbehavior" before congressional committees.

3) Imposition of criminal penalty for procurement of a social security card in a false or fictitious name.

4) Provision for the enforcement of State statutes in the area of sedition, the effect of which would be to overrule the Nelson case.

5) A provision barring Communist lawyers from practicing before congressional committees and executive agencies.

6) A further penalty for disclosing defense information.

7) Creation of an office of Controller of Communist Propaganda in the Customs Bureau.

8) A provision permitting wiretapping in enforcement of anti-subversive laws.

It also includes recommendations made by the Wright Commission and similar to those in the Murray, Rees and Cotton-Stennis bills. It is expected that the Un-American Activities Committee will hold extensive hearings on the Walter bill in the next session.

"JENCKS BILL" UPSETS
SUPREME COURT DECISION

On September 3 the President signed the bill approved by Congress on August 29 to upset the United States Supreme Court decision in the case of Jencks v. United States. In that case the Supreme Court held that a United States district judge had erred in refusing Jencks' request that prior statements to the government, made by a witness whom the government had called against him, be made available to him for use on cross-examination. The Court directed that Jencks be granted a new trial.

This bill was one of many measures introduced in the last two Congresses to reverse decisions of the Supreme Court in the area of basic civil liberties. None of the other measures has passed the Congress. The reason the Jencks bill - which was introduced only on June 6, 1957, three days after the Court's decision in the Jencks case - got so far so fast was that it had the wholehearted and active support of the powerful FBI lobby.

As the bill was originally drafted in the Justice Department, it limited the prior relevant statements of a witness that must be made available to the defendant to those "which are signed by him or otherwise adopted or approved by him as correct". Senator O'Mahoney and Representative Keating were the chief protagonists for the legislation. Soon after the bill's introduction, Senator O'Mahoney moved it out of his subcommittee. Requests for hearings were ignored. The only witnesses to appear on the subject were federal government witnesses presenting the viewpoint of the police agencies. On July 1, the measure was approved without hearings or change by the full Judiciary Committee. During the course of the following seven weeks Senator O'Mahoney changed his mind on this legislation no less than four times, and introduced that many versions of a bill in the Senate as substitutes for his and the Justice Department's original measure. The fourth version is the one which finally came before the Senate. It presented a decidedly more liberal approach than the original bill.

The basic question on the measure was whether or not the reports of a government agent as to what the witness had told him relating to the matter he had testified about at the trial would be available to the defendant at the trial. The FBI did not want these limited portions of its agents' reports made available. It wanted the material to be made available limited to statements that the witness had either written out himself, or had seen and signed or approved, or had given orally for verbatim transcription, or which were available on recordings in the possession of the government.

The Senate rejected the FBI request for a reversal of the Jencks decision when it voted down two Administration amendments. As the bill went from the Senate to the House, it preserved all other discovery provisions of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure and made all prior statements of the government's witness to a government agent relevant to his direct testimony available to the defendant for use on cross-examination.

In the House, a strongly-worded plea from the Deputy Attorney General, quoting at length from a plea made to him by J. Edgar Hoover, the Director of the FBI, was read into the record as part of the debate. The House passed the original Justice Department bill by an overwhelming margin. Attempts to save the Senate-passed measure met with crushing defeat, and the two versions went to a Senate-House Conference. Following a luncheon meeting between the chief conferees and officials of the Justice Department, the Senate retreated and accepted the substance of the House bill.

The new law provides: "in any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report in the possession of the United States which was made by a government witness or prospective government witness to an agent of the government shall be the subject of subpoena, discovery, or inspection until such witness has testified on direct examination in the trial of the case" ... "On motion of the defendant the court shall order the government to produce any statement of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified". If the United States claims that parts of the statement do not relate to the subject matter, it shall give the statement to the judge rather than to the defendant directly and the judge shall excise such portions of the statement as do not relate to the subject matter, and then make the related portions available to the defendant. If the government elects not to comply with the order of the court to make the information available to the defendant, "the court shall strike from the record the testimony of the witness, and the trial shall proceed unless the court in its discretion shall determine that the interests of justice require that a mistrial be declared." The relevant statements which would be made available are "stenographic, mechanical, electrical or other recordings or a transcription thereof which is substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by the witness to an agent of the government and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement."

Just what will be the practical effect of the new law cannot be declared with certainty. It would appear as though government police agencies could avoid the requirement of making any statement available by merely altering their method of taking statements so that persons interviewed would not sign statements, or have their statements taken down in detail by the agent in their presence, and by avoidance of the use of quotation marks in reports of interviews. Permitting the judge to merely strike the testimony of the government witness from the record, rather than requiring the ordering of a mistrial, might well be contrary to the requirements of due process. Certainly this new law will cause confusion resulting in years of review by the courts before its constitutionality and effects can be determined.

COMPROMISE IMMIGRATION BILL
EASES HARDSHIP CASES

For the first time since the enactment of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Congress adopted a bill embodying a series of amendments and changes which have a liberalizing effect in certain areas. It is hoped that the President will sign the bill and enact it into law, notwithstanding some criticism that it represents only a minor change and falls far short both of the program submitted by the President and of changes sought by other legislators.

The successful bill is S. 2792, introduced by Senator Kennedy on August 14, 1957, with the co-sponsorship of Senators Watkins, Humphrey, Dirksen, Pastore, Lausche, Clark, Neuberger, and Jackson. Even for its sponsors, the bill represents less than what they hoped for originally. It is the third in a series of bills Senator Kennedy introduced. Earlier in the session he drafted and proposed the adoption of S. 2222 and S. 2410. The bill that was adopted and S. 2410 each in turn proposed less than the bill it succeeded. Senator Kennedy's apparent purpose in introducing the three bills in this stepdown fashion was to insure the ability of the House and the Senate to agree on more than the single, piecemeal amendments that have been adopted on occasion in the past. He wanted to avoid last year's situation when a bill embodying a series of amendments failed to pass on the last day of Congress because of disagreements between the two Houses.

The bill contributes a real measure of relief for many years to come insofar as it cancels the mortgages that were imposed on the quotas of certain countries under the Displaced Persons Act and other legislation. Lifting these mortgages will result in approximately 8,000 additional quota numbers being available each year.

Refugee-Escapees

S. 2792 also reallocates some 18,000 quota numbers that were unused when the Refugee Relief Act expired. Approximately 4,000 are specifically allocated to refugees from certain countries; the balance of 14,000 will be generally available to refugee-escapees. Refugee-escapees are defined as those who have fled or in the future are forced to flee any country because of persecution, or fear of persecution, because of race, religion or political opinion. The country from which they flee must either be Communist dominated or occupied, or within the general area of the Middle East. To be eligible, the bill requires that such aliens show that they cannot return to such countries because of race, religion or political opinion. Under this provision, refugees who within the past year have had to flee from either Hungary or Egypt will be eligible for the 14,000 non-specifically allocated visas.

Other provisions of the bill authorize the entry, during the next two years, of an unlimited number of orphans adopted by U. S. citizens, and seek to effect the reuniting of families by giving first preference entitlement to spouses and children of skilled aliens previously admitted, and waiving the disability of certain relatives of U. S. citizens or lawfully resident aliens who are afflicted with tuberculosis. Another section which has the effect of reuniting families permits the immediate entry of aliens in first, second, or third preference categories who applied for entry before July 1 of this year. Other provisions forgive certain misrepresentations, grant discretionary authority to waive fingerprinting, adjust the status of certain skilled specialists, and provide asylum for defecting diplomats.

Other sections clarify existing definitions of children and stepchildren to include illegitimate children and adoptees who are under 14, and provide that short periods of overseas residence by children admitted for permanent residence shall not constitute a break in U. S. residence.

Review of Policy Anticipated

All other bills that sought to effect major changes in the basic immigration law failed to receive favorable committee attention in either house. One of Senator Kennedy's earlier bills provided for a reallocation each year of quotas unused in preceding years. This would have been a modification of the operation of the national origins quota system. It was not included, however, in S. 2792. The increased number of authorized admissions and a more generalized pooling of quotas which were part of the President's program got nowhere. Neither did proposals to regularize the status of Hungarian refugees. Both the House and Senate committees held hearings on bills introduced to implement the President's program and other bills, but the only bills reported favorably were Senator Kennedy's S. 2792 and Congressman Walter's H. R. 8123. There was substantial similarity in the two bills and the House ultimately accepted the Senate version.

All bills introduced remain before the Congress for further consideration in 1958. It is assumed that the Administration will continue to press for further favorable consideration of the President's program. Senator Kennedy's statement when S. 2792 was adopted implies that he and his co-sponsors will continue their efforts for a more fundamental review of immigration policy. Since Senator Kennedy has in the past introduced a proposal for a committee to study the national origins quota system, it is not unlikely that the fundamental review of immigration policy contemplated by him and his colleagues will take that form. The general area of controversy on immigration legislation, as evidenced by testimony before committees of the House and Senate, continues to be the wisdom or lack of wisdom, as different people see it, of the national origins quota system. A revival of Senator Kennedy's earlier efforts to secure a study of the system may well be a prelude to the possibility that any fundamental changes can be enacted in immigration policy.

CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION
IN THE STATES THIS YEAR

1957 was a very productive year for state civil rights laws. Colorado and Wisconsin strengthened their existing FEP laws, Colorado by extending the enforcement provisions to private employment heretofore exempt from such provisions, and Wisconsin by adding enforcement machinery to its existing educational-type FEP law. In addition, Colorado brought violations of its civil rights law with respect to places of public accommodation under the jurisdiction of its existing Anti-Discrimination Commission.

Massachusetts, New Jersey, Oregon and Washington passed laws to prohibit discrimination in the sale or rental of publicly-aided housing. All of these states vested jurisdiction over these new anti-discrimination laws in their existing commissions against discrimination. In addition, Oregon and Washington, like Colorado, strengthened their statutes prohibiting discrimination in places of public accommodation by vesting enforcement jurisdiction in their existing anti-discrimination commissions. Minnesota, while failing to pass a bill which would have prohibited discrimination in publicly-aided housing, enacted a law which declared discrimination in housing to be contrary to the public policy of the state, and which created a commission to study and investigate discrimination in the sale of rental of housing accommodations.

California, Illinois and New York passed laws to discourage discrimination in certain narrow fields. Illinois amended its state school code to require school districts to certify that they do not discriminate in the employment of teachers as a condition to securing state aid. California authorized the State Board of Education to establish a commission to assist and advise local school districts in problems relating to racial, religious or other discrimination in the employment of certificated employees. New York enacted a statute prohibiting discrimination in the apprenticeship training program under the joint sponsorship of labor unions and management groups.

Vermont passed a law prohibiting racial or religious discrimination in places of public accommodation. Colorado and South Dakota repealed their statutory prohibitions of interracial marriages, while Missouri repealed its statute providing for segregated schools and eliminated color as a factor in computing school attendance. Missouri also established a state commission on human relations. Wyoming enacted a statute which provides that "no person of good deportment shall be denied the right of life, liberty, pursuit of happiness, or the necessities of life because of race, color, creed or national origin."

Just released by the American Jewish Committee is a memorandum covering state developments as of August 31, 1957, by which date almost all state legislatures had adjourned, and classifying action under the headings Education, Employment, Housing, Public Accommodations, and Miscellaneous. Copies may be secured by writing the AJC, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

THE BRICKER AMENDMENT,
85th CONGRESS

S.J.RES. 3, the latest version of the Bricker Amendment, to limit the President's treaty making power, was introduced by Senator Bricker January 7, 1957.

After the Supreme Court ruled June 10, 1957, in the case of Reid v. Covert, that "no agreement with a foreign nation can confer power on the Congress, or on any branch of government, which is free from the restraint of the Constitution;" Senator Bricker declared that his amendment was still necessary, since a minority of the Court, four, had handed down this opinion. Other authorities on constitutional law interpreted the ruling to mean that this decision had reaffirmed the supremacy of the Constitution, thus making the proposals contained in the Bricker Amendment unnecessary.

At Senator Bricker's request, a one-day hearing on the Amendment was held by the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee June 25. He and Senator Hennings (D., Mo.) were the only witnesses heard, although the record was kept open for ten days so that other statements might be included.

No further action was taken and S.J.Res. 3 is pending in the Subcommittee. Senator Bricker has said that although the language of this Resolution differs from that of others he had submitted, its intent is the same.

-- And a Related Development

When the legislation providing for U. S. participation in the International Atomic Energy Agency was before the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, Senator Bricker offered an amendment making it necessary for all future contributions of fissionable material to the Agency, after the original contribution which the President had authorized, to be authorized by Congress. The Administration at first opposed this provision, but when some members of the Committee, in considering writing up the bill, asked for further Administration testimony on this point, an Assistant Secretary of State told them that the Administration had decided it could live with this provision. It was written into the bill and accepted by the Senate. The House refused to accept the provision, and passed the bill without it. However, the Senate again insisted on including it, and it was accepted by the Conference. It is now written into the law. (P.L. 85-177).

AMERICAN INDIAN LEGISLATION
IN THE 85th CONGRESS

As was noted in the June-July issue of this Bulletin, the first session of the 85th Congress saw the introduction of major bills which, if enacted, would have materially changed the official government policy towards American Indians. Regrettably, not one of the measures passed.

S. Con. Res. 3, calling for a Point-4 Program for Indians, would restate Congressional policy to provide for a comprehensive program for helping the Indians, in response to their own plans and requests, as a substitute for the policy, expressed in H. Con. Res. 108 of the 83rd Congress, of termination of Federal responsibility as soon as possible. Hearings on this resolution were held by the Neuberger subcommittee, with some 70 witnesses, most of them Indians, appearing in support; but the Department of the Interior objected to the resolution on the alleged ground that it would narrow the Department's programs. No hearings were held on the parallel House resolutions, H. Con. Res. 155 and 160.

At the hearings on S. Con. Res. 3, testimony was also heard on S. 809, sponsored by Langer and 20 other Senators. (Note: This was wrongly listed in the previous Bulletin as S. 574.) This bill would establish a loan fund of $200,000,000 to stimulate industrial development on or near Indian reservations. Interior reported that it "agrees with the basic purpose of the bill" but that it already has "much of the authority that is contemplated by the bill," and added that before the Department's "present program can be accelerated some basic data needs to be accumulated." It held that the bill was not the answer to "the many perplexing problems that are involved," for "it would only serve to raise false hopes in the Indians."

On the various bills to amend P. L. 280, 83rd Congress, which authorized the States to take over civil and criminal jurisdiction, the Administration, from President Eisenhower down, is still insisting that consultation with the Indians is all that is needed; that it is somehow unpatriotic, perhaps unconstitutional, for Indians to ask that their consent be obtained before their rights to local self-government be destroyed. There seems to be very little hope that the Administration will change its formula.

The last of the major bills dealing with Indian land problems, drafted originally by attorneys representing many of the tribes and private organizations, was introduced in both Houses in the 84th Congress. The Department's opposition was quickly apparent and when that Congress adjourned its report had not yet been submitted. The same bill was introduced early last January (H. R. 2787, by Mr. Berry) but the Committee did not even ask the Department for a report. A draft of a revised bill, submitted informally by Department staff to the attorneys, has not received approval of the Department.

In the first session of this Congress, the Committees considered or held hearings on many bills on which final action was not taken. Of 15 bills finally passed and signed by the President, six warrant special comment:

1) P.L. 31 (S.998) would permit a tribe or individual Indian to sue in Federal court for the reconveyance of land transferred to a non-Indian with a reverter clause providing forfeiture for failure to observe the provisions of the grant.

2) P.L. 86 (H.R. 3836) sponsored by the Department, repealed Section 1157 of Title 18 of the U. S. Code, requiring that Indian-owned cattle held in trust could be sold or mortgaged only with the consent of the United States given through the designated local officials; in substance the repeal puts an end to the trust status of Indian cattle, regardless of the source of the funds used to buy them. This is a dangerous change, and may prove to be a bad one.

3) P.L. 132 (S.469) amending the Klamath Termination Act, deferred until the end of the second session of the 85th Congress the beginning of sales of land and timber to pay off the individual Indians who want cash for their tribal interests. Selfish Indians, stubborn bureaucrats, and short-sighted members of Congress have produced a situation which is unsound from a business standpoint; wasteful, as seen by conservationists; and probably harmful, in the long run, to the Indians whom the Congress intends to benefit. The extension of time which this permits will enable the Congress to act on S. 2047, by Senators Neuberger and Morse, which would authorize the acquisition by the United States of all the Klamath tribal lands.

4) P.L. 137 (H.R. 5953) although of local interest, because it authorizes the Public Health Service to provide sewer and water facilities only for the Indian colony at Elko, Nevada, may be significant because a similar bill of general application has been recommended by the Public Health Service, but has not been passed.

5) P.L. 151 (H.R. 8053) authorizes the Surgeon General to use funds available for the construction of Indian health facilities to cooperate with other agencies or organizations to provide for community hospitals. These would be more effective and less costly than duplicate facilities otherwise needed, and they would continue to be available for Hill-Burton grants.

6) P.L. 192 (S. 1417) extends the existence of the Osage Tribe to January 1, 1984, seemingly in contradiction to the policy laid down by H. Con. Res. 108, 83rd Congress, calling for prompt termination of Federal supervision.

ALASKA AND HAWAII STATEHOOD BILLS

As the First Session of the 85th Congress adjourned, bills for Statehood for Alaska and Hawaii had been reported by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and were on the Senate Calendar awaiting action next year.

On the House side, the Alaska Statehood bill was reported by the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee and was on the House Calendar. Early action is anticipated next year.

The Hawaii Statehood bill had not been reported by the Subcommittee on Territories of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, but action is expected early next session.

The political strategy of statehood advocates seems to be to secure passage of the Alaska Statehood bill first, and then to follow it up with that for Hawaiian Statehood. On the other hand, opponents of statehood seem determined to try to tie the two Statehood bills together again, particularly in the Senate, and then to either return them to the Committee or to defeat them outright. If this strategy fails, they will try to defeat each of the bills separately.

NAACP INVESTIGATION LEADS TO STATE PROBE OF MIGRANT LABOR CAMPS

The shocking conditions in migrant labor camps were revealed by an investigation made recently by NAACP Labor Secretary Herbert Hill in several camps in New York State. As a result of Mr. Hill's actions, the State Industrial Commission is conducting an investigation and will sponsor corrective legislation when the State Legislature meets next year.

This situation reemphasizes the necessity of Federal action to protect farm laborers moving in interstate commerce.

MATERIALS IN THE CLEARING HOUSE FIELDS

ANALYSES OF SUPREME COURT CASES -- The Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress has prepared two valuable analyses of the civil rights and liberties cases before the Supreme Court -- the first, a summary of the decisions issued by the Court in the 1956-57 term, and the second, a similar treatment of the cases now pending. In the Civil Rights and Civil Liberties Decisions, a thoughtful introduction studies the personal and social backgrounds of the Court's recent trend toward libertarian interpretation of constitutional guarantees. This is followed by a detailed analysis of the decisions in the areas of internal security, censorship, the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, Federal and State criminal convictions, military personnel, deportation, civil rights, and questions of church and state. The analysis of Pending Cases which will come before the Court in the next term is based on the docket as of July 31, 1957, and summarizes the civil rights and civil liberties considerations they will place in issue. Among these are the rights of aliens, the right to obtain a passport to travel abroad, the army's loyalty program, and the question of whether the State of Alabama can constitutionally compel the NAACP to publish its membership lists. Copies of both publications are available on request to the American Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York 28.

MEMORANDUM on the June 15 Executive Order which amends the Selective Service Regulations including appeals taken by conscientious objectors. Analysis of the possible effects and the advantages and disadvantages of the E.O., and what it may mean in streamlining appeal procedures. Available without charge from the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, 401 Third St., N. W., Room 403, Washington 1, D. C.

INTEGRATION IN ACTION -- A pamphlet reprint of New York Times' reporter Benjamin Fine's series of on-the-spot studies of integration in representative Southern schools, and of student, teacher and community attitudes. 15¢ a copy; quantity prices on request; and RACISM IN SUBURBIA - A Constructive Answer: A reprint of Galal Kernahan's article in The Christian Century on the way citizens of Garden Grove, Calif., dealt with the situation that developed when doctor-athlete Sammy Lee, an American of Korean descent, bought a house there; 5¢ a copy. Both of these pamphlets are issued by the Community Relations Service, American Jewish Committee, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Next Meeting : Thursday, November 14, at the Community Room.

Memorial Service for Miss Eastman : Mrs. Margolin announced that a memorial service for Miss Elizabeth Eastman is to be held at 11 a.m., Monday, November 4, at the Y.W.C.A. Miss Eastman, who died in September after a long illness, had been active in many organizations here and had represented the Common Council for American Unity in the Clearing House.

1958 Clearing House Conference Planning : Reporting on plans towards the 1958 Civil Liberties Conference, which will mark the tenth anniversary of the Clearing House, the chairman noted that in spite of a strong fund-raising effort, the Clearing House has not been able to offset the Robert Marshall Civil Liberties Trust's reduction of its contribution from $250 for 1956 to $ 500 for 1957.

Because of this, he said, the Clearing House had queried the Fund for the Republic on the possibility of cooperation in making appropriate arrangements for the conference. Fund officers had suggested that if a section of the program were to be devoted to discussion of the Fund's Basic Issues studies, the Fund might in turn cover costs of that portion of the conference. The Administrative committee, Mr. Edelsberg added, had approved such cooperation at its October meeting, at which a subcommittee consisting of himself, Alan Barth and Kenneth Birkhead had been appointed to confer further with Fund officials.

The meeting approved proceeding on the basis of the Fund's suggestion.

Conference Program Committee : Also approved was the chairman's appointment of the following Program Committee for the conference: Kenneth Birkhead, AVC; H. H. Bookbinder, AFL-CIO; N. H. Goodrich, American Jewish Committee; John Gunther, ADA; Virginia Kinnaird, NEA Defense Commission; Clarence Mitchell, NAACP; Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women; Philip Schiff, National Jewish Welfare Board; Paul Sifton, United Automobile Workers, and Charles M. Smith, National Council of Churches.

Guest Speaker : Alfred Friendly, managing editor of The Washington Post and Times Herald, discussed "The Implications of Little Rock."

Current Reports : The meeting heard and discussed the following reports, which will be summarized in the next Bulletin: Bills affecting civil liberties which will be before the second session of Congress, by Mr. Ferman; the prospects for civil rights, by Mr. Mitchell; and the Girard case, by Mr. Slayman.

Current Materials : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of the materials distributed at this meeting: A statement on misuse of the National Guard, from the Textile Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO; "Assault upon Freedom of Association," from the American Jewish Congress; and "The New Civil Rights Law," from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Next Meeting : Wednesday, December 4, at 2 o'clock at the Community Room.

Tenth Annual Civil Liberties Conference : The Clearing House will hold its tenth annual conference at the Hotel Statler on Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7, 1958.

Mr. Edelsberg announced the appointment of Paul Sifton, United Automobile Workers, and Charles Smith, National Council of Churches, as co-chairmen for the Program Committee, whose other members are Kenneth Birkhead, AVC; Hyman Bookbinder, AFL-CIO; N. H. Goodrich, American Jewish Committee; John Gunther, ADA; Virginia Kinnaird, NEA; Clarence Mitchell, NAACP; Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women; and Philip Schiff, National Jewish Welfare Board.

Conference Cooperation with Fund for the Republic : Noting that the October Clearing House meeting had approved a suggestion for cooperation in the conference program advanced by Frank Kelly, vice president of the Fund for the Republic, in response to a Clearing House inquiry, the chairman reported briefly on a subsequent discussion with Mr. Kelly by an Administrative Committee subcommittee composed of himself, Alan Barth and Kenneth Birkhead.

Mr. Kelly, he said, had suggested that the conference should remain entirely the Clearing House conference (as it did in 1957 when there was cooperation with Ben Segal) but that the Fund might assume responsibility for financing a section of the program to be devoted to its Basic Issues studies. He proposed a session on "The Individual and the Common Defense," with Dr. I.I. Rabi, chairman of the President's Science Advisory Committee and 1944 Nobel Prize winner, and Walter Millis, Fund staff representative in this area, as speakers; and a dinner session at which a Fund board member might outline the Basic Issues Program in introducing its president, Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, for a major talk on civil liberties in this time of continuing international tensions.

Consensus of the meeting, as expressed by Mr. Schiff, was approval of Mr. Kelly's suggestions and a request for their full consideration by the Program Committee at its November 15 session.

Guest Speaker : Watson Davis, director of Science Service and editor of Science News Letter, spoke on "Is Science Really Hush-hush?"

Current Reports : The meeting heard and discussed the following reports, which will be summarized in the next Bulletin: The Immigration Outlook, by Mr. Bookbinder, and Bigotry in Northern Virginia, by Mr. Korey. There was also informal discussion of the civil rights area, led by the chairman

Current Materials : The office will send out on request, while they last, copies of the materials distributed at this meeting — "The Civil Rights Law -- What It Is and What It Does," and "Labor Battles Discrimination," both from the AFL-CIO; and "School Integration — Progress and Problems" from the National Council of Jewish Women.

February 4, 1958.

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House invites you to attend its tenth annual conference on civil liberties, at the Hotel Statler in Washington on Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7.

The program for the conference is attached. It centers on two of today's major human relations problems -- the outlook for individual liberties as our civilization enters the space age, and the outlook for the achievement of equality and dignity, under the Nation's laws, for everyone.

In the decade since the Clearing House was founded, the patterns of our civil rights and liberties have undergone many changes, and our great voluntary citizens' organizations have become increasingly concerned with their own responsibilities in these fields. This is shown, in part, by the fact that in 1948, 19 agencies established the Clearing House in an effort to meet their own need for a continuing exchange of knowledge and information about civil liberties issues -- and in 1957, 116 groups participated in study of them at our ninth-year meetings.

We expect that as we meet at this tenth-birthday conference, even more organizations will want to take part in full and informed group consideration of the problems we face today.

We hope that yours will be among them, and that you will promptly fill out and return the registration form which accompanies this invitation. If you would like us to invite any of your locals or affiliates, please send their names and addresses to the Clearing House office, which will be glad to comply.

Sincerely yours,

Paul Sifton

Dear ~~Mr. Fleming:~~ Harold:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House is currently completing plans for its tenth annual conference on civil liberties, to be held here on March 6 and 7.

Our Literature Committee is arranging for distribution at the conference of key pieces of literature in the areas of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, international human rights, and related issues. We know that your organization has issued some excellent materials, and we invite you to bring them to the attention of our conferees.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we will appreciate your sending a maximum of 150 copies each of cost-free literature, preferably that which has been published within the past year. We do not have the facilities for posters or displays, and we will not be able to undertake responsibility for materials for which a charge must be collected. However, if you have bibliographies of your publications, we will be glad to include them on our literature tables; we have found these to be much in demand in the past.

We ask that your materials be mailed so as to arrive on or before Thursday, February 27, to:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House,
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.,
Washington 6, D. C.

Since this conference will mark the tenth anniversary of the Clearing House, we hope to make our literature tables -- which are a very important feature of our annual meetings -- notably valuable and varied in the materials they present. We will welcome your cooperation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the attention of this wide inter-organizational audience.

Sincerely yours,

Lucile Ellison

NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CLEARING HOUSE

Attendance: The National Civil Liberties Clearing House held its regular meeting on Wednesday, February 5, 1958, at the Washington Post Community Room, with the following attendance (which was smaller than usual because of the religious and social welfare conferences meeting concurrently): Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League, presiding; Olya Margolin, National Council of Jewish Women; Rosalie Whelan, National Council of Catholic Women; A. Burns Chalmers, American Friends Service Committee; Dr. Warren C. Middleton, American Association of University Professors; Otto H. Weill, American Jewish Congress; Mrs. Alfred Cipriani and Mrs. Clarence Fisher, D.C. League of Women Voters; J. Francis Pohlhaus, NAACP; Kenneth Birkhead, American Veterans Committee; David A. Brody and William Korey, Anti-Defamation League; Irving Ferman, American Civil Liberties Union; Robert W. Frase, American Book Publishers Council; Frances Neely, Friends Committee on National Legislation; H.H. Bookbinder, AFL-CIO; Virginia Kinnaird and Dr. E.W. Davis, National Education Association Defense Commission; Mrs. James W. Irwin, National Board, YWCA; Martha Mills, League of Women Voters; Katherine Jansson; Mary Alice Baldinger and Frieda Cohen for the office.

Tenth Annual Conference: Programs for the Clearing House conference, to be held March 6 and 7, were distributed, and the chairman called attention to the fact that organizations may have representation by their locals and affiliates, as well as their national officers and staff workers.

He urged interested organizations to notify their local units of the conference, and to send them the conference programs and registration forms, which the office will be glad to supply. Seating for the dinner meeting, March 6, may be somewhat limited, but we will be able to accommodate a much larger number of conferees at the March 7 sessions on civil rights, and at the luncheon that day, at which Senators Douglas and Javits will be speaking.

Next Meeting: Because of the conference, the monthly meeting for March will be skipped, and the Clearing House will meet again on the first Wednesday in April (April 2).

Guest Speakers for the afternoon were Walter Maloney, assistant counsel to the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, and Sidney Kelly, administrative assistant to Senator Javits.

The Jenner Bill (S. 2646) was discussed by Mr. Maloney, who said that it is designed to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court by forbidding it the right to review five classes of cases, all involving subjects with which the Court has dealt recently. The subject matter on which it would prevent Supreme Court consideration includes (a) cases involving contempt of Congress or of a congressional committee; (b) cases involving security and loyalty programs in federal agencies; (c) state laws involving subversive activities within the state; (d) cases involving subversive activities and their control by local school boards; and (e) state laws and regulations governing admissions to the bar.

The Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee, chaired by Senator Eastland, held a one-day hearing on the bill at which its sponsor, Senator Jenner, and a staff member of the subcommittee were the only witnesses. The full Judiciary Committee considered the bill on February 3, and after an objection by Senator Hennings referred it back to the Internal Security Subcommittee, with instructions to hold hearings at which both proponents and opponents of the measure would have an opportunity to testify, and to report the bill back to the parent committee on March 10, 1958. Senator Eastland, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, announced on the Senate floor, that such hearings would be held, and that those wishing to testify should notify the subcommittee staff. The hearings are tentatively scheduled to begin on February 19.

The Filibuster and Cloture was Mr. Kelly's topic. Discussing the uses and abuses of full debate in the Senate, he pointed out the anomaly of a rule "which permits two-thirds of the Senators voting to expel a member, but requires an absolute two-thirds of the total membership to make that same member shut up." He also analyzed the effects of and the outlook for current moves to revise the cloture rule (specifically, Senator Douglas' S. Res. 17, which would permit cloture by two-thirds of those voting after two days — a number that could range from two-thirds of a quorum to two-thirds of the membership — and by a majority of the full membership after 15 calendar days); and summarized the reports of the Javits-Talmadge subcommittee which studied this subject.

Other current reports which were presented and discussed, and which will be summarized in the next Clearing House Bulletin, were:

1) The civil rights situation — J. Francis Pohlhaus, NAACP

2) Civil liberties aspects of toll and free telivision — Irving Ferman, ACLU
(Mr. Ferman also commented informally on the censorship area)

3) Labor and individual liberties — H.H. Bookbinder, AFL-CIO

— Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League, Chairman

— Mary Alice Baldinger, Executive Director

Dear Mary Alice:

A word of explanation and regret to you on the eve of the annual Clearing House Conference. To my great distress, I will not be able to be there because of another long-standing commitment. The excellence of your program makes me all the more frustrated.

All good wishes for a highly successful conference and my best regards.

Dear Friend:

A note to remind you -- the tenth annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held at the Hotel Statler here on Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7, is less than two weeks away.

Most of the invited organizations have already sent in the names of their representatives, and we anticipate that this will be the largest and most stimulating conference that the Clearing House has ever held.

However, there are a number of groups which we know plan to be represented, but whose registrations have not yet been received.

We are attaching an extra copy of the registration form for the convenience of these agencies, in case the previous one, which was sent out with the conference program early this month, may have been mislaid.

If you have already sent in your reservations, please disregard this letter. If you have not, the Clearing House staff will be most grateful if you will fill out the accompanying form and return it at your earliest convenience.

We look forward to having you with us.

Sincerely,

Herman Edelsberg

Mr. Harold C. Fleming,
Executive Director,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Avenue, North East,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Harold:

I'm making my mid-Summer check of our books, and think I ought to remind you that the Southern Regional Council's subscription to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House is about to run out.

You will remember that in August of last year you sent us a subscription of $25 for 1957-58.

I do hope that you will be able to make a similar subscription payment for 1958-59. You can see by the attached financial report for 1957 how extremely helpful payments like the Southern Regional Council's are in enabling us to carry on with the Clearing House program.

Incidentally, have you got any plans to visit Washington this Fall? If you have, and if our timing can be arranged, there is nothing I'd like better than to have you talk informally and off the record to our Clearing House people. We do not hold meetings in August and September; the next general meeting should be set for Wednesday, October 1, and the one after that for Wednesday, November 5. But we have a little leeway in juggling dates around, and if you are likely to be here near either of those times, I'm sure we could arrange an accommodation. And of course, there's always the possibility of calling a special meeting, as we sometimes do. Will you let me know?

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Mr. Anthony:

This is to acknowledge and to thank you for the subscription of $25 for 1958-59 which the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has received from you.

We're very grateful indeed for the SRC's interest in and help with the Clearing House program.

I'm grateful, too, to know that Harold will keep the Clearing House's October 1 and November 5 meeting dates in mind and will let us know if it seems likely he'll be around these parts for either of them. I shall keep my fingers crossed. It will be a great break for us if he's able to talk to us on either of those days.

And will you ask him please to keep in mind, too, that in the event he should be in Washington on any other days, and free for an hour or two in the afternoon, we can always very easily schedule an extra meeting?

Sincerely,

HOUSE-PASSED "CURB-THE-COURT" BILL WOULD GIVE STATE LAWS PRECEDENCE IN MANY AREAS

On July 17 the House of Representatives passed H. R. 3, "a bill to establish rules of interpretation governing questions of the effects of acts of Congress on State laws."

The essence of the bill is contained in the section which reads: "No Act of Congress shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of Congress to occupy the field in which such Act operates, to the exclusion of all State laws on the same subject matter, unless such Act contains an express provision to that effect, or unless there is a direct and positive conflict between such Act and a State law so that the two cannot be reconciled or consistently stand together."

This bill in various forms has been before the Congress for several sessions, though never before passed. Its current revival was the response of conservative Congressmen to a Supreme Court decision (Pennsylvania v. Nelson) upholding the reversal of a conviction under State anti-subversive laws, on the grounds that Federal anti-subversive legislation had already "preempted" (i.e., effectively asserted exclusive jurisdiction over) this field. For this holding the Court relied chiefly on the fact that the Smith Act contained specific provisions proscribing the advocacy of the overthrow of any government -- whether Federal, State or local -- and that Congress had full knowledge of the numerous existing State statutes dealing with the subject of sedition.

This decision aroused the Congressional enthusiasts for states-rights, segregation and the hunt for "un-American activities," and added fuel to the fires they have been trying to build under the Supreme Court. The bill was put forward by Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.), principal author of the Smith Act, to negate the effect of Pennsylvania v. Nelson. However, it would do much more than this. It is not limited to conflicts between Federal and State anti-subversion statutes, but would lay down a general rule that acts of Congress shall not be construed to assert exclusive jurisdiction over any field (to the exclusion of State action) unless the Congress has expressly preempted the field or unless there is direct and irreconcilable conflict between an act of Congress and State laws in the same field.

Such a doctrine applied to anti-subversive legislation would be mischievous enough. But the greater danger of H. R. 3 lies in its general application. Because it would apply to the entire body of past Federal legislation, its total effects cannot be foreseen. Few Federal statutes expressly claim exclusive Federal jurisdiction over a field in which Congress may Constitutionally legislate; under H. R. 3, States might claim concurrent jurisdiction in many fields. This could create conflict and confusion between Federal and State labor legislation and other subjects dealing directly or indirectly with the Federal jurisdiction over interstate commerce -- such as rail and road transportation, regulation of business practices, food and drug standards, etc.

The bill is designed to circumscribe the powers of the Federal Government and aggrandize those of the States, and open the door to State action less protective of civil liberties, more restrictive of labor organization, and less restrictive of business practices than Federal law.

The bill was passed by the House, 241 to 155, in an orgy of anti-Supreme Court feeling. The large majority was immune to arguments of law or reason. During the course of the debate an amendment was added specifically applying the doctrine to anti-subversion legislation, to be sure that it negated the effect of Pennsylvania v. Nelson.

Substantially the same provisions as those of H. R. 3 were included in the original Jenner bill, S. 2646, earlier in this session. The Senate Judiciary Committee refused to approve the provision in its broad form and, in approving S. 2646 narrowed this provision to apply only to the conflict between Federal and State anti-subversive legislation. In this form it is awaiting clearance of the Democratic Policy Committee to go to the floor of the Senate. The Policy Committee has voted not to bring it up, but as of this writing efforts are being made to revive it.

Among the far-reaching possibilites of a bill like H. R. 3 would be to open the door to State laws, in the name of "anti-subversion," curbing organizations and activities favoring racial desegregation or integration. Pennsylvania v. Nelson now prohibits this; but even a version of H. R. 3 narrowed to admit concurrent Federal and State jurisdiction over subversion (like the one pending in the Senate) would give the Southern States a powerful weapon of harassment against civil rights and civil liberties organizations.

-- Edward D. Hollander,
Americans for Democratic Action.

LOYALTY-SECURITY PROGRAM WOULD BE EXTENDED BY HOUSE-PASSED BILL

S. 1411 as amended, a bill which would re-extend the loyalty-security programs to nonsensitive positions, was passed by the House and returned to the Senate on July 11 by a roll-call vote of 295-46. The bill had been reported out by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on August 20, 1957, and placed on the Union Calendar; it remained there in a "state of limbo". However, 11 months later it suddenly started on a rapid legislative journey: on July 8, 1958, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee asked the House Rules Committee to grant a rule; on July 9, the rule was granted; on July 10 the bill appeared on the legislative calendar and was passed after brief debate by an overwhelming vote.

Following the House action, it was referred back to the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, rather than to a conference committee, since the House version was entirely different from the bill that the Senate passed last year, although it still carried the same bill number.

Background

The bill passed originally by the Senate had been introduced by the Chairman of the Senate Committee, Olin Johnston (D., S. C.) in response to a request by the Attorney General. It was a simple measure which would have permitted suspected employees to remain on the job while investigations and hearings were being conducted -- i. e., it would have made summary suspensions discretionary rather than mandatory. After the Senate action it was referred to the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on August 8, 1957. Meanwhile, the House committee had been holding hearings on H. R. 981, which was introduced by Rep. Francis Walter (D., Pa.) after the Supreme Court's decision in Cole vs. Young that provisions of P. L. 733, 81st Congress, which empowered an agency head to suspend employees for security reasons, did not apply to "non-sensitive positions." The Walter bill held all government employees to be employed in "an activity of the government involving national security," thus re-extending the coverage of the federal loyalty-security programs to both sensitive and non-sensitive positions.

The House committee reported out S. 1411 (House Report 1201, Majority and Minority Views) after amending it by striking out the Senate's language and substituting the provisions of H. R. 981. Certain procedural safeguards were also added, in response to criticisms of the Walter bill by government employee witnesses who appeared at the hearings.

House Debate

The overwhelming House vote for the amended bill took place despite the fact that a letter from the Department of Justice, received by Rep. Dennison (R., Ohio) on the same day as the debate, stated that the Department believes that "the interests of the individual employee as well as of the government would best be served by deferring any legislative action relating to this program until the Executive Branch has completed its study of the recommendations of the Commission on Government Security." The letter indicated that the study is nearing completion.

During the debate, the supporters of the bill kept bringing up the question of Communists in government and making light of or ignoring the fact that there are procedures now in effect to remove subversives or other undesirable employees from government service. So much was made of this point that when the vote was taken opponents of the measure had almost been pushed into the position of appearing to vote to keep Communists in government jobs if they voted against it. (For the full debate, see the July 10 Congressional Record, pages 12180-12195.

Senate Hearing

A subcommittee of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee held a hearing on the House-passed measure on July 18, with Senator Morton (R., Ky.), the only member present, in the chair. Chairman Ellsworth of the Civil Service Commission and representatives of employees groups appeared as witnesses. The Justice Department has asked to be heard later. All the witnesses opposed the House version. Mr. Ellsworth, speaking for the Administration, urged that no further action be taken on the bill. Further hearings may be held. Likelihood is that the Senate will stick by its original bill and instruct its conferees not to accept the House amendments.

SENATE ACTION ANTICIPATED ON "MALLORY BILL"

The "Mallory Bill" passed by the House on July 2 is one of four related measures -- the others being S. 2970 by Senator Eastland, 3325 by Morse, and 3355 by Butler -- now undergoing study by the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on Improvements in the Federal Criminal Code, which held hearings on July 17 and has further testimony scheduled for July 30. The bills in effect would overturn the Supreme Court's year-old reversal of the death-penalty rape conviction of Andrew Mallory on the ground that he had been held too long between his arrest and police efforts to locate a committing magistrate. The Court threw out the confession which he made in the interim.

H. R. 1147, sponsored by Rep. Edwin E. Willis (D., La.), was approved by a House vote of 294 to 79. It provides that before an arrested person is questioned he must be told that he need not make a statement and that any statement he makes may be used against him; and that delay in arraignment shall not by itself serve to invalidate a confession. The ACLU, ADA and other liberal groups opposed the Willis bill on the ground that it would in effect preclude any possible penalty for police violations of Rule 5 of the Federal Code of Criminal Procedure, which requires that a person be arraigned without unnecessary delay. Here again we find the old problem of who is to police the police, and how.

Since Senator O'Mahoney, the Subcommittee's chairman, and the majority of its members have stated that they feel "clarifying legislation" is necessary, it seems likely that a bill similar to the House version will be reported out.

Senate Committee Eliminates Change of Venue
Provision in Anti-Obscenity Measure

On July 15 the Senate Judiciary Committee favorably reported H. R. 6239, the "Post Office venue" bill sponsored by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.). Aimed at curbing alleged obscene material, the House-approved measure would make the act of mailing pornographic literature a continuing offense and would permit the prosecution of persons mailing such material in any judicial district through which the mailed matter passes, as well as at the point of mailing.

However, this "in transit" provision was eliminated by the Senate committee, which held that the unrestricted "forum-shopping" it would permit the government -- i. e., the right to initiate prosectuion in a selected district where a jury would presumably be likely to impose more stringent standards of obscenity -- can lead to abuses and is therefore against public policy. (The Constitution provides that crimes shall be tried in the State where they are committed.)

The Senate version now provides for prosecution of violators at the place of delivery as well as at the point of deposit, and sets up a new offense, with penalties for violators up to $10,000 plus ten years, when non-mailable material is knowingly directed to persons under 19 years of age. The bill will probably come up on the Senate consent calendar at an early date. There is some possibility that since it must go back to the House, it may not be enacted this session.

American Civil Liberties Union.

CONGRESS REVIEWS SUPREME COURT'S PASSPORT DECISION: ACTION THIS SESSION SEEMS UNLIKELY

The Supreme Court decision of June 16, 1958 drastically restricted the State Department's reasons for refusing to issue passports. In the Kent, Briehl and Dayton cases the Court held invalid the present State Department regulations which prohibit issuance of passports to suspected Communists, Communist sympathizers and those whose travel abroad would be "inimical to the interests of the United States."

The Supreme Court said the regulations are not authorized by the present law. It did not reach the question of whether it would be unconstitutional to deny a passport because of political beliefs or association. The Court did, however, note that freedom of movement is "deeply engrained in our history," and that "the right of exit is a personal right included within the word 'liberty' as used in the fifth amendment."

Following the decisions the State Department drafted legislation which essentially would enact the regulations into statutory law. (S. 4110, Senator Green [by request]; H.R. 13318, Keating.)

Passport bills are now pending before five Committees: Senate Foreign Relations and Judiciary and House Foreign Affairs, Judiciary and UnAmerican Activities. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which has held two days of hearings, seems to have taken the lead in considering passport legislation. It is generally felt that there are too many opponents of the Administration measure on this Committee and that no bill will be reported out of it this session. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey and six others have an excellent bill (S. 4137) which permits much greater freedom of travel. Senator J. W. Fulbright's bill (S. 2770), while not so far-reaching, is more liberal than the State Department version.

Senator James O. Eastland has a restrictive bill (S. 4030) which is before his Judiciary Committee. While the Judiciary Committee might report this bill to the floor, it seems doubtful at the moment that it could win Senate approval in the light of the Foreign Relations Committee situation and the declared intent of Senator Wayne Morse to ensure that no legislation passes without extremely searching examination.

Friends Committee on National Legislation.

SUPPORT BY JUSTICE DEPARTMENT LACKING FOR BILLS FOR FBI JURISDICTION IN BOMBINGS

Subcommittee No. 3 of the House Judiciary Committee held hearings on June 18 on the Loser-Celler-Griffiths-Roosevelt bills (H. R. 11806, 12116, 12667 and 12831) -- identical measures which would add a new sub-section to the United States Criminal Code making it a Federal crime to (1) import into the United States or to transport in interstate commerce any explosive "with the knowledge or intent" that it will be used in violation of Federal or State law; and (2) to possess, in violation of any State or Federal law, any explosive imported into the United States or transported in interstate commerce. This would mean that any persons who carried dynamite across a state line in order to detonate it in violation of a State law would also be violating a Federal law. Similarly, any person found in possession of dynamite within a State in violation of its law would likewise be guilty of a Federal crime if the explosive was carried across State lines.

If enacted, the bills would give the FBI jurisdiction whenever an illegal bombing takes place, to investigate the crime and also to determine whether the explosive was carried across state lines -- the search for the criminals would be assisted by the most efficient investigating unit in the country. The results of the FBI investigation would presumably be turned over to state police if there was no indication of a Federal crime.

Testifying in behalf of the American Jewish Congress and the other agencies comprising the National Community Relations Advisory Council, Will Maslow urged the establishment of a "jurisdictional basis" for action by the FBI and the Department of Justice in cases of bombing of religious institutions; he objected, however, to the bills' provision creating a rebuttable presumption, from illegal possession or use of dynamite within a State, that it had been transported in interstate commerce, because the constitutionality of such a provision is open to question. He also urged revision to make clearer the intention to exempt innocent or unknowing violations.

In the past ten months, since September 1957, there have been nine incidents of dynamitings or attempted dynamitings of Jewish synagogues, community centers, and Negro schools in the States of Tennessee, North Carolina, Alabama and Florida. And despite intensive local police investigation, none of the perpetrators of these crimes has been caught, nor is there any real hope that any of the crimes will be solved in the near future. The threat of further bombings in Southern States where racial tensions are great continues unabated. Therefore legislation empowering Federal intervention in an apparent interstate conspiracy of violence seems a necessity.

The Department of Justice had filed no report on the proposed bills by the time of the hearings, although requested to do so by the Subcommittee. The reasons for the Department's silence are not known. When FBI investigation was demanded after the most recent bombings, the Department took the position that "there is no basis at present for action by the FBI" and that "full immediate action will be taken if any jurisdictional basis therefor is established" (Letter of Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh to Congressman Celler, April 30, 1958). The purpose of the four bills is to establish such a "jurisdictional basis." But indications are that the Department now opposes such legislation; for on June 25 Assistant Attorney General White of the Civil Rights Division said in a speech which was said to reflect the Department's general views on this problem:

> "Yet there are grave questions of policy involved in such a basic change in the responsibility for law enforcement, which would extend the Federal police power to a crime peculiarly local in nature -- the violent destruction of property in the community. Although such an extension of Federal authority could be supported under the commerce clause, it might have an effect foreign to its purpose. All of these bombings appear to have their origin in racial or religious prejudice. Such occurrences should unite the communities concerned in their response to violence and bigotry. A shift of the enforcement responsibility to the Federal government could be used by local officers as an excuse for relaxing their own efforts or for evading their responsibility."

These reasons hardly seem tenable. The crimes in question are not "peculiarly local in nature"; they expressly involve the inter-state transportation of explosives for a purpose that has national concern -- the intimidation of religious groups in the exercise of their rights of freedom of religion, speech, conscience and belief. Moreover, there is involved no "shift of enforcement responsibility to the Federal government," but rather a supplementation of local enforcement responsibility with concurrent Federal responsibility.

As for the idea that the addition of Federal jurisdiction might serve as an excuse for local officers to evade their responsibility, the opposite has been indicated by actual developments on the problem of the bombings. The local police chiefs and mayors of 29 Southern cities met on May 3 on the invitation of the Mayors of Jacksonville and Nashville to exchange information and to plan concerted action. This conference was called at a time when the local authorities still had reason to expect FBI participation in their plan of action. Far from seeking to evade their responsibilities, the Southern communities involved are determined to punish these outrages and have themselves openly requested Federal assistance in this effort. With such solicitation of Federal help by the local Southern communities, and with clear authority for the proposed legislation in the commerce clause, it is difficult to understand the Department's apparent persistence in opposing legislation to give it jurisdiction to act in such cases.

-- Sanford H. Bolz,
American Jewish Congress.

CIVIL RIGHTS IN CONGRESS AND IN THE COURTS

Hearings on civil rights bills were conducted by a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee headed by Congressman Celler on June 25, 26 and 27 and July 9, 10 and 11. It is not expected that further hearings will be held this session. The subcommittee is now in a position to act on the bills. Principal measures under consideration are H. R. 10107, by Mr. Celler, similar to Part III which was stricken from the Civil Rights Act of 1957; H. R. 10672, also by Celler, which in addition to enacting Part III would provide technical and financial assistance to communities attempting to desegregate their schools (this is a companion bill to S. 3257 by Douglas and other Senators); and H. R. 12723, by Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R., N. Y.) which would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

Court Action

The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has decided to have a hearing before the full court of seven members on the appeal from Judge Lemley's decision postponing integration in the schools of Little Rock. The hearing is scheduled for August 4.

At this writing (July 25) the NAACP is trying a voting case in the Federal District Court in Jackson, Mississippi. The case challenges Mississippi voting laws and practices as being racially discriminatory. It is this type of case that the Justice Department was authorized to file under the Civil Rights Act of 1957, which became effective in September of last year. As yet, the Department has not taken any action under the Act.

Counsel, Washington Bureau, NAACP.

Appointed in June after the resignation of Kenneth M. Birkhead, "Lech" is a long-time leader in AVC affairs. He and his family live in Potomac, Md.

1957 saw a sharp drop in membership of the NAACP, the organization stated in its 49th annual report, issued in connection with its national convention at Cleveland in mid-July. The report attributed the loss of 37,723 members to stepped-up legal attacks on Southern NAACP units, to measures passed by Southern legislatures prohibiting teachers and other employees from NAACP membership, and to demands for publication of the names of NAACP officers and members in Little Rock, Ark., and other communities.

Arthur J. Dr. Fidler came to the AAUP's staff in 1956 from the faculty of the University of Alabama, where he taught American literature and English composition for 26 tears. . . . Dr. Louis Joughin, who has been assistant director of the American Civil Liberties Union since 1954 and has served as executive head of the ACLU's Academic Freedom Committee, will join the AAUP's staff on September 1. . . . Dear Mary Alice:

It was good to have your recent letter. I have waiting this long to reply in the hope that I might get enough considered judgment on the Louisiana statute to be helpful to you.

Actually, at least for the time being, the statute does not affect us. The reason is that we are between local affiliates in Louisiana. Our former affiliate, the Louisiana Council on Human Relations, folded up from the pack with the understanding that a strong New Orleans Human Relations group would be organized. This is going to happen, but the New Orleans group will not be formally launched until after the turn of the year. The people we know there that will have to make this decision - and whose judgment we would rely on - are representatives of the other national organizations which participate in the Civil Liberties Clearing House. Since you will be getting their thinking in due course, I won't try to duplicate it from here. But if I do learn anything in the near future that would have an important bearing on this matter, I will pass it on to you. And I will be looking forward with interest to any analysis or advise that may be forthcoming from your next meeting. Unfortunately, we are approaching our own annual meeting early in November, so I am stuck here with all the paper work and folderol involved in preparation for the yearly policy-making. I wish I could be with you on November 5. God willing, I will make one of the meetings in the near future.

All the best.

Sincerely,

Mr. Harold Fleming,

Dear Harold:

A couple of the Clearing House organizations have had inquiries from their locals in Louisiana about what course they should take in relation to the State law there that requires them to file affidavits that none of their national officers belong or have belonged to any organization on the Attorney General's list, with criminal penalties for failure to comply.

I'm writing you because I assume the Council has run into this.

Could you find time to drop me a note as to what you are doing about it? Do you know what course other groups are taking on it? Is any organization so far planning to test its constitutionality, and if so, do you know by what means they intend to get it into the courts?

I'll be most grateful for whatever you can tell me.

Any chance of your being in Washington on November 5? We've got a Clearing House meeting that day -- and how we'd love to have Harold Fleming as a speaker!

Dear Friend:

This is to let you know that the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has scheduled April 16 and 17 as the dates for its eleventh annual conference, which will be held at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton here.

This year the conference will concentrate almost entirely on the problems of discrimination, segregation, and inequality in American life, with special emphasis, of course, on the situation in the schools.

Our program is not yet complete, but among those who are expected to be speaking to the Conference are Senator John F. Kennedy, Senator Hugh Scott, Marion A. Wright, past president of the Southern Regional Council; Dr. Herman H. Long of Fiske University in Nashville; and the Rev. James C. Brewer, pastor of the Norfolk, Va. Unitarian Church and president of the Norfolk Committee for Public Schools.

We are planning, too, to allow plenty of time at each session for discussion and participation from the floor.

We expect that officers, staff workers and members of over 100 organizations will attend the Conference. The complete program and registration forms will be sent you early in March. Meanwhile, we hope you will note the dates now and plan to participate.

Sincerely yours,

The Clearing House welcomes suggestions from associated organizations on topics for discussion at meetings or for inclusion in the Civil Liberties Bulletin. Please write or call the Executive Director, Mary Alice Baldinger.

ELEVENTH ANNUAL CLEARING HOUSE CONFERENCE IS SCHEDULED FOR APRIL 16 AND 17

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House will hold its eleventh annual Conference on Civil Liberties at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton in Washington on Thursday and Friday, April 16 and 17.

Plans for the meetings are nearly completed. The program committee hopes to break new ground with a study in depth of all the implications of the school desegregation crises, with speakers who combine insight, personal experience and ability to communicate their ideas interestingly. Related problems of individual rights and freedoms will also be discussed, as will the continuing attacks on the Supreme Court.

Among those who will be addressing the conference are Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, Representative John Lindsay of New York, the Rev. James C. Brewer, president of the Norfolk, Va., Committee for Public Schools; Walter Tobriner, president of the D. C. Board of Education; Dr. Alfred J. Marrow, chairman of New York City's Commission on Intergroup Relations; Marion A. Wright, past president of the Southern Regional Council; David L. Krupsaw, chairman of the Arlington, Va., County Board; and Dr. Herman Long of Nashville's Fisk University, who recently completed a two-year survey of attitudes towards integration.

The conference programs and registration forms will be sent out in early March.

Co-chairmen of the program committee are Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, general director of the Washington office of the National Council of Churches, and Thomas E. Harris, associate general counsel of the AFL-CIO. Serving with them as committee members are Sanford Bolz of the American Jewish Congress; Herman Edelsberg, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and chairman of the Clearing House; Irving Ferman, American Civil Liberties Union; Edward D. Hollander, Americans for Democratic Action; Clarence Mitchell, NAACP; Irma Piepho, National Council of Catholic Women; and Dr. Robert E. Van Deusen, National Lutheran Council.

SENATE HEARINGS WILL COVER WIDE RANGE OF CIVIL RIGHTS PROPOSALS

In the House, Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler has said that he will hold hearings "shortly" on civil rights proposals; but in the Senate, the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights has named a definite starting date and place for hearings -- Wednesday, March 18, in the Caucus Room of the old Senate Office Building. A comparison of the major approaches to civil rights legislation may therefore be useful. They are: S. 456, sponsored by Republicans Javits and Keating of New York; Case, N. J.; Cooper, Ky.; Scott, Pa.; and Allott, Colo.; S. 499, by Senators Lyndon Johnson (D., Tex.) and Thomas C. Hennings (D., Mo.); S. 810, by Senator Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) with the co-sponsorship of 11 Democratic and five Republican Senators; and the Administration program, embodied in seven separate bills introduced by Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.) and Barry Goldwater (R., Ariz.) -- S. 955 through S. 960, inclusive, and S. 942.

Support of the Supreme Court

The Douglas bill expressly endorses the principle of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decisions in schools, transportation and recreation, and recognizes the responsibility and authority of the Congress to uphold the authority of the Judicial Branch.

The Administration proposal includes a declaration of policy that the 1954 decision holding public school segregation unconstitutional is "the law of the land," that States must take steps to end segregation, and that the Federal Government is prepared to help solve their serious financial and educational problems.

The Johnson and Javits bills have no similar provisions.

Federal Aid

The Douglas bill provides for an extensive program of aid to the States and communities in helping them to desegregate, for technical assistance, and for grants for school building, equipment and personnel needs, if needed, covering a period of five years.

The Administration program provides for some technical assistance and some aid for professional personnel, on a more limited scale and for the next two fiscal years.

The Johnson and Javits bills have no similar provisions.

Enforcement of Compliance with the Supreme Court Decisions

The Douglas bill encourages the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to persuade and assist State and local communities to comply with the desegregation decisions, and, in the event this fails, as a last resort authorizes the formulation of plans by HEW, and then enforcement by the Attorney General.

The Administration and Johnson proposals do not carry such provisions.

The Javits bill, while it has no specific provision relating to school desegregation, could be used in some instances as indicated below.

Suits by Government

The Douglas and Javits bills would both authorize the Attorney General to take action to enforce equal protection of the laws, including educational rights, under procedures similar to those proposed by Part III of the 1957 civil rights bill before its amendment in the Senate. Under the Douglas bill, the Attorney General could initiate lawsuits to end any unconstitutional discrimination based on race, religion or national origin, against individuals who are found to be unable, for fear of reprisals or other reasons, to sue for themselves; the Attorney General could also intervene in private civil rights suits. The Javits bill would not allow the Attorney General to intervene in private suits, but would let him initiate action in behalf of the individual.

The Administration and Johnson proposals do not have such provisions.

Obstruction of Justice

The Douglas bill proposes preventive, rather than punitive, action in this area, by authorizing the Attorney General to commence injunction suits against persons who seek to obstruct Federal, State or local officials in desegregation cases, or to hinder the execution of court orders in such cases.

The Javits bill would authorize the Attorney General to institute preventive proceedings against anyone conspiring, through threats, violence, etc., to hinder State or local authorities from giving or securing equal protection of the laws. Such proceeding could be instituted upon the written request of the officials.

The Administration program makes it a crime for any person, private or official, to obstruct a Federal court school desegregation order by threats or force.

The Johnson bill has no provision of this sort.

Voting Records

The Administration program requires State voting registrars to maintain their records for three years and empowers the Justice Department to obtain such records under orders from any Federal district court.

The Johnson bill would permit subpoenaing of voting records under orders by special three-judge district courts.

The Douglas and Javits bills do not have such provisions.

Civil Rights Commission

The Administration bill would extend the life of this commission to September, 1961; the Johnson bill would extend it to January, 1961; the Douglas and Javits bills have no provision concerning this.

Anti-Bombing

The Administration bill makes it a Federal crime to cross State lines to escape prosecution for bombing a religious or educational building. The Johnson bill would make it a Federal crime to transmit explosives in interstate commerce for the purpose of damaging a business, educational, religious, charitable or civic building. The Douglas and Javits bills have no similar provisions.

Children of Military Personnel

The Administration proposal provides that if a public school that serves children of military personnel is closed to avoid desegregation, the Federal Government may provide schooling on the military base. Or, if a school constructed in the future, is built in whole or part with Federal funds, the Government may take it from the State and operate it, paying the State rent in line with the State's investment. The Douglas, Javits and Johnson bills have no similar provisions.

Equal Job Opportunity

The Administration proposes that Congress create a commission on equal job opportunity under Government contracts, similar to the Committee at present established by executive order, to work at persuading companies with Government contracts to hire without regard to race, creed or color. The Douglas, Javits and Johnson bills have no similar provisions.

Conciliation Service

The Johnson bill would set up a Federal community relations service to provide conciliation assistance in communities where there are disagreements or disputes concerning school desegregation or other interracial differences. The Douglas, Administration and Javits bills do not carry such a provision.

BILLS TO REVERSE COURT DECISIONS ARE REVIVED IN NEW CONGRESS

The desegregation decisions and a series of Federal court rulings protecting constitutional rights against infringement by Congress or the States and narrowly construing Federal statutes to avoid constitutional questions have made the courts the target of attempted Congressional reprisals for the past several years. In the 85th Congress, as in several preceding Congresses, these attempts took the form of bills aimed at reversing (in effect) certain civil liberties decisions or limiting the jurisdiction of the courts in certain kinds of cases. None of these bills passed the 85th Congress, though several passed the House and were headed off in the Senate by the narrowest of margins of time and circumstances at the very close of the 1958 session.

A number of the same or similar bills have been re-introduced in the 86th Congress; and more will be. Though they vary in form, they are best identified by the Supreme Court cases which they are designed to reverse or negate.

1. The Watkins bills, aimed at the decision in which the Court acquitted a witness of contempt of Congress, on the grounds that the legislative mandate and the procedures of the House Un-American Activities Committee were too vague to permit a witness to determine what questions were pertinent to its proper activities. The bills would, in effect, make Congressional committees the sole judge of the pertinence of questions put to witnesses.

2. The Cole bills, overruling the decision that the Federal employee security statute applied only to security-sensitive positions. The bills would amend the statute to provide that the employee security program should apply to all Federal positions.

3. The Yates bills, redefining "organize" and "teaching and advocating", as used in the Smith Act, to make "advocacy" punishable without regard to the immediate probable effect of advocacy, thus overruling certain cases in which the Court set aside convictions. (The House Judiciary Committee on February 17 approved H. R. 2369, by Rep. Francis Walter (D., Pa.), which redefines the term "organize" in the Smith Act, making it a continuing process which includes recruitment of new members and the expansion of re-grouping of existing units.)

4. The Mallory bills, to reverse a decision of the Court which invalidated a conviction on the grounds that the accused was held and questioned by the police too long before he was arraigned.

5. The Schware bills, which would limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal courts in cases of admission to the bar under State law. The Supreme Court reversed a State decision denying admission to an applicant on political grounds.

6. The passport bills, to authorize reinstatement of State Department regulations which permitted denial of passports on political grounds. The Supreme Court held that these regulations were not sanctioned by statute.

7. The Nelson bills, to reverse a decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court and the Supreme Court of the United States that Federal anti-subversive laws, by "preempting" the field of national security, invalidated State laws on the same subject. The Nelson decision has also evoked a general bill -- designated in successive Congresses as H.R. 3 -- specifying that in matters of overlapping Federal-State interest, the existence of a Federal law shall not preclude legislative action by the States unless the Federal law specifically asserts exclusive jurisdiction, or unless the two are in direct conflict. This would extend beyond re-validation of State anti-subversion laws; since it would apply to all Federal laws now on the books, it is impossible to foresee into what fields of interstate commerce, labor legislation, etc., it might invite States to legislate on matters heretofore preempted by Federal law. Its possibilities for mischief are yet unfathomed.

Opinions differ this year -- as they did last -- on the chances of passage of these bills. On the one hand, the turn of events in civil rights and civil liberties has done nothing to mollify the opposition of the "anti-Court" forces; if anything, the contrary is true. On the other hand, the elections of 1958 increased the liberal (presumably pro-Court) strength. H.R. 3 and bills to reverse Cole and Mallory passed the House last year by so wide a margin that even the additional liberal votes added by the 1958 elections would not have changed the result, unless the Democratic leadership threw its weight to the liberal side. The Senate votes being more evenly divided in 1958, the additional liberals might be enough to stop most of the anti-Court bills -- again, if the leadership was on the liberal side. It seems most likely that the anti-Court forces will try again.

Even if they do not pass, the fact that these bills are introduced, reported from the committee and seriously considered is itself significant. If the critics cannot reverse the courts, they can at least try to intimidate them. They can try to put the judges, and the Presidents who nominate them, and the nominees on notice that, in the future, nominations will be scrutinized for conformity to the prejudices of Senators who sit in judgment over confirmations. This is calculated to make Presidents cautious about "controversial" nominees, however well qualified, and to make prospective and aspiring judges cautious about holding "controversial" views and opinions. In both cases the independence of the judiciary will suffer.

LOOKING BACKWARDS: TRENDS IN CRITICISM OF THE SCHOOLS

The year of 1958 in educational history will probably be recorded as one of a great upsweep in criticism of our schools. The NEA Defense Commission provides an information service about educational criticisms and attacks along with a number of other services in championing the use of the democratic process in meeting problems of ethics, tenure, academic freedom, citizenship and of school crises calling for formal investigations. The Defense Commission tries to distinguish between welcomed constructive criticisms and destructive criticisms with propaganda undercurrents.

The criticism of "improving quality does not necessarily take more money" becomes a "vote no" cry when a bond issue or educational bill is up for vote. Powerful national groups strongly opposed to Federal support for schools because they favor local or State control are found later to be working openly to defeat local and State fiscal support legislation for schools.

Accompanying the previous attack is a strong drive to cut back the school's instructional program to the "3R's," the "fundamentals" or "intellectual training." Many of these critics tend to belittle vocational, office and home arts training as "fads and frills." Fortunately for the United States, only Russia has announced a cut-back of educational programs, whereas Britain, followed by other countries, is implementing plans for a comprehensive American type of high school on a grand scale.

There is a steady effort to undermine much of the educational philosophy and psychology from James to Dewey. The critics want to look backward to something resembling faculty psychology and philosophical determinism in order to guide them in going forward in education. The critics seem to be saying train the intellect, and let the feelings, emotions, physique and manual skills develop through trial and errors of the world outside of school.

"Let's Close The Public Schools Now" is a pamphlet reviving the old slogans returning education to the private school. This drive of old groups labeling public schools as "socialistic," "anti-capitalistic," "egalitarian" or "monopolistic" has been joined by the segregation extremists. Fortunately, here moderate segregationists and other citizens have joined in a more popular movement to "keep the public schools open." Americans long ago have been convinced, without benefit of racists or propagandists, that our system of education has a place for both public and private schools.

Censorship of textbooks and instructional materials has reappeared in several communities. The new emphasis espouses forming local textbook review committees and labeling publications and authors as subversive, socialistic, or communistic, instead of the former practice of removing or destroying such publications.

Communism, socialism and subversion were last on a long list of criticisms and problems in a recent national survey of problems bothering schools and teachers. Other recent attacks have stirred up many of the old negative self-styled "patriots" who are re-issuing, revising or varying old publication topics with new titles to undermine confidence of the public or to revive the threats of dangers. One recent text by a very conservative "patriot" claimed to be the "first book to present the pros and cons of communism vs. democracy" for the youth of our land. At first acclaimed by the far-rightist press as an answer to alleged weak or subversive teaching in high schools, now others, further to the right, are condemning it for its favorable statements about communism. If you do not use this book, you are condemned; if you use it, you are condemned in even stronger language.

There is an increase of the number of groups and volume of literature advocating instruction in the free enterprise system and "common-sense" economics. Unfortunately most of these tend to work closely with or actually endorse taxpayer groups and low-government-expenditure advocates. They condemn themselves by wanting to tie the schools to a 1947, 1950 or 1955 dollar while their enterprises are usually free enough to operate on a 1958 dollar.

Anti-Labor, Anti-Education Groups Linked

There is a trend of these critics to form or strengthen coalitions of conservatives. For instance, "We the People" is attracting others to its 60-plus organizations. It is earning the reputation of being a super-coalition with a potent political action program by gaining the participation of three other extensive coalitions of over 150 organizations.

Another trend is to divide and conquer the various supporters of modern education. Definite efforts are detected in the literature to drive a wedge between professional educators and such allies as the PTA, organized labor, religious groups, and school board associations. The new line to split labor's support from education is to tell educators that labor's vote will hurt school legislation. The transparency of these and similar claims becomes ludicrous when one realizes that most groups promoting anti-labor movements usually also distribute destructive educational materials.

Of the 984 listings in the "First National Directory of Rightist Groups" nearly 500 were identified as school-destructive critics or attack groups. One group spent more money on lobbying in Washington, D. C., than any other association, corporation or individual. One powerful office with a four-person staff has influential contacts all the way from the White House and the most powerful business associations to most important newspapers and magazines. A number of the more influential groups have mailing lists of 5,000-30,000 and spend $30,000 to over $500,000 annually. Outside of this hard-core of roughly 150 groups, most others are seldom heard from and can be ignored. None were ever known to favor Federal support or aid for education. Yet very comprehensive Gallop Polls repeatedly show 66-80% of all kinds of people in all sections of the U. S. in favor of Federal support. In the last Congress the vote for Federal support was nearly two-thirds of each House. Faith in democracy is restored when we see felt educational needs and facts about our schools win out over paid propagandists and stacked statistics.

IMMIGRATION MEASURES INDICATE WIDE DISSATISFACTION WITH OLD QUOTA SYSTEM

The numerous immigration reform bills introduced in the new Congress are evidence of the continuing widespread dissatisfaction with the rigid restrictions of the existing law with its fixed quotas for each country. Chief among the proposals introduced in the new Congress is the Celler bill (patterned on the old Senator Lehman bill) which would junk the national-origins-quota system and make an individual's worth and our country's needs, rather than the immigrant's place of birth, the test of admission. Senator Humphrey has also introduced a bill which would provide for the pooling of unused quotas, and would also eliminate the racially discriminatory Asiatic-Pacific triangle blood test.

In his State of Union message to Congress, President Eisenhower made no mention of immigration, and referred to it only briefly in his budget message.

At a press conference announcing the publication of a booklet entitled, "A Nation of Immigrants," written by Senator Kennedy for the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Kennedy announced a seven-point program for revision of our immigration laws. He added that he had discussed the plan with Congressman Walter with a view to introducing companion bills. The principal features of the Kennedy plan, which is not yet written into bill form, is the proposal that immigration be based on blood relationships with American citizens and resident aliens rather than the present national-origins-quota system. The number to be admitted, Kennedy said, had not yet been determined, but would be somewhere between the present quota ceiling of 154,000, about half of which go unused annually, and 250,000. In addition, Kennedy said he was considering setting up a formula for the admission of non-relatives whose immigration to the United States would be desirable.

One of the hopeful signs in the immigration picture is the fact that some of the newer members of the House Judiciary Committee, like Congressman Lindsay (R-NY) and Toll (D-Pa), are vigorous advocates of liberalization of our immigration laws. In the Senate, Senator Keating, who sponsored the Administration's immigration reform proposal in the House, has replaced Senator Butler on the Senate Judiciary Committee and can be expected to continue his efforts to secure liberalization of our immigration laws.

"LOYALTY OATH" FOR STUDENTS
MEETS RISING CRITICISM

Bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress to eliminate from the 1958 National Defense Education Act its controversial requirement that, in order to qualify for a loan or fellowship, a student must swear that he ". . does not believe in, and is not a member of and does not support any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods."

In the Senate, S. 819, sponsored by Senators John F. Kennedy and Joseph S. Clark, is pending before the Labor and Public Welfare Committee; and in the House, five related bills (H. R. 284, by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr.; H. R. 2437 by Rep. James Roosevelt; H. R. 2332 by Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen; H. R. 4038 by Rep. James C. Oliver; and H. R. 4066 by Rep. Edith Green) have been referred to the Education and Labor Committee's Subcommittee on Special Education, of which Rep. Carl Elliott of Alabama is chairman.

When he introduced his bill in late January, Senator Kennedy said that Congress had not given any consideration as to how the affidavit section of the Act would be policed, or to why students should be singled out for affirmation of their loyalty when nothing similar is required from those who receive old age, farm or other Federal benefits. The oath requirement, he added, might very well defeat the very purpose of the Act by excluding "the most inquiring minds," while it would not keep out actual Communists, who "would have no hesitancy about perjuring themselves."

The disclaimer affidavit, which was proposed by Senator Karl Mundt and accepted without much debate in last Summer's adjournment rush, is drawing increasing criticism from educators. Six schools have refused to accept money under the Act because of this provision -- Antioch, Bryn Mawr, Haverford, Princeton, Reed and Swarthmore. Others are accepting funds, but their officials are protesting the oath -- among them, Harvard, Yale, and the University of Wisconsin. HEW Secretary Arthur S. Flemming has also criticized it. Senator Mundt himself has been quoted by an aide as saying that he "would not oppose" its revision, though he would insist that there be retained some provision that would permit Federal funds to be withdrawn from students "who were found to be Communists ot subversives."

The American Association of University Professors has outlined its objections to the oath on three specific grounds: vagueness, in that the applicant is given no guidance as to the organizations meant, and no definition of the "support" he must disclaim; probable unconstitutionality; and the invidiousness of a requirement that carries with it inescapable and unwarranted derogatory implications for a whole class of persons and all its members. Stressing its particular concern with the application of the disclaimer to education, the AAUP said in a recent statement: "We are shocked and alarmed to find that students and teachers, when they are to receive funds, are placed in a special category and must enter a humiliating disclaimer. The Act seems to say to members of the education community, 'You are an important part of American life and you have an admitted real need, but let there be no mistake about the fact that you are a particularly suspect part of the population and will have to pass a special test that other citizens need not take.' This is a prejudgment of the teachers and students of America which we cannot believe the Congress intended to make."

Dear ~~Mr. Fleming:~~ Harold -

The Literature Committee for the eleventh annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, to be held here on April 16 and 17, is currently arranging for distribution at the conference of key pieces of literature in the areas of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, and international human rights.

We know that your organization has published some excellent materials, and we invite you to bring them to the attention of our conferees.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we ask you to send us a maximum of 100 copies each of three pieces of cost-free literature which you consider to be timely, attractive, and closely related to the issues which the conference will be discussing.

We do not have the facilities for posters or displays, and we cannot undertake responsibility for materials for which a charge must be collected. However, if you have bibliographies of your publications, we will be glad to include them on our literature tables; in the past these have proved much in demand.

We ask that your materials be mailed so as to arrive on or before Friday, April 10, to:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We will welcome your cooperation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the attention of the wide inter-organizational audience which the conference will offer.

Dear Harold:

By now you will have had our conference program through your regular Clearing House mailing; but I wanted to send you these few extra copies for your files.

Have you been wondering just what you'll be expected to do as a consultant on the 17th?

We now have a little memo from the Program Committee on this.

They ask that the consultants "open the discussion by briefly adding their own comments on any points they think have been omitted or should be added; point up what they think are the most important and provocative things the speakers have said; lead off the question-and-answer period with their own questions; accept questions from the floor themselves or add whatever they want to to the replies of others; and keep the floor discussion flowing and ~~xxxxxxx~~ channeled in productive directions."

How's that?

I think we're going to have a good conference and I'm awfully glad that you are going to be a part of it.

All the best,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Friend:

We cordially invite you to attend the eleventh annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House conference on civil rights and liberties, at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton in Washington, on Thursday and Friday, April 16 and 17.

The aim of the conference this year is to pinpoint the crucial factors in the desegregation issue; to bring out at first hand the lessons that responsible governmental and civic leaders are learning through their own experience in combatting discrimination; and to look to the future as today's problems lead into tomorrow's hard work.

The meetings will be plenary throughout, in order to allow full opportunity for participation by all of the conferees.

A copy of the program is enclosed, with a registration form. We hope that you will plan to attend, and we shall look forward to welcoming you and to having the benefit of your organization's experiences and views on these problems that so deeply affect us all.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Edelsberg:

It is a pleasure to send greetings to those attending the eleventh annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

This gathering is a symbol of democratic processes at work across the land. It shows that Americans are deeply concerned with the rights of their fellow citizens. We hope and intend to make, through orderly means, our system of liberty ever more perfect. Such efforts are of highest benefit to the national interest -- and to the strength of the free world.

I am delighted to add my best wishes for a fine conference.

SEGREGATION TODAY -- NORTH AND SOUTH

Speakers : Marion A. Wright, Vice President, The Southern Regional Council
Dr. Alfred J. Marrow, Chairman, New York City Commission on Intergroup Relations
Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

Consultants : Patrick Murphy Malin, Executive Director, American Civil Liberties Union
Francis C. Shane, Executive Secretary, Commission on Civil Rights, United Steelworkers of America

Chairman : Mike M. Masaoka, Washington Representative, Japanese American Citizens League

Reporter : Moe Hoffman, Washington Representative, National Jewish Welfare Board

In opening the eleventh annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, its chairman, Herman Edelsberg, Washington representative of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, said: "Last year on the occasion of our 10th anniversary, the Washington Post saw fit to congratulate us on 'a decade of significant accomplishment' and to salute us as a 'sentinel of freedom'. We hope this conference will justify their confidence.

"Over a hundred national organizations are represented here today to take a searching look at the complex issues of civil rights and civil liberties. Our speakers and our participants are leaders of organizations and men and women whose wide and expert learning is informed with deep conviction and tested by hard experience and successful accomplishment.

"The last decade has been marked by great progress in the area of civil rights, a progress unmatched in any previous decade in American history since the Civil War. We hope to see here how that progress was achieved, where we stand in 1959, and how further advances can be made."

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

One of the most oft-repeated arguments made by segregationists is that those who live outside the South should leave the South alone to solve its own problems. Marion A. Wright, vice president of the Southern Regional Council and a leading Southern liberal, declared that this statement mistakenly presupposes that the nation as a whole has no stake in the solution.

The question of desegregation of Southern schools, said Wright, is truly a national issue, not a local one. For this, he gave four basic reasons: First, the cruelty of a system that "shouts at the segregated Negro child in words and more eloquent deeds that he is 'unfit, unworthy, despised and rejected'," and that ignores the fact that the children who knock upon barred school doors are citizens, not of a State alone, but of the United States. Secondly, resistance to law and the breakdown of law and order anywhere in the United States is a concern to the entire nation.

Thirdly, official state-sponsored schemes to evade the law and thwart court decrees bring about a decay of public morals - - clearly a matter of national interest and concern. And finally, "McCarthyism is erupting in the South. . . In a deliberate and callous effort to stifle dissent, to throttle opposition, to penalize the exercise of thought and speech, men and women and organizations who have committed just one offense -- they have expressed their belief in observing the law -- are being crucified." No American can view such tyranny with indifference; these practices present a national peril.

Having met defeat on most legal fronts, Mr. Wright said, the segregationists are turning to the forum of public opinion, in the North, East and West, in a movement that is "well organized and well financed" and that seeks to "subvert the public opinion of the rest of the nation to the segregationist view," although this is referred to as "education in states' rights, limitation of judicial power, and other euphonious terms." What is actually involved is "a challenge to the national authority, to the Constitution itself."

"What, then, shall you do?" Mr. Wright asked. "First, resist and counter the soft seductions of the segregationist. On every occasion expose the fallacy of the argument that what happens to Negro children in a few Southern states is none of your business.

"Prove your sincerity by fighting discrimination in your own communities. . . . The Negro ghettoes of your cities, the attitudes of some of your hotels and amusement places, and your occasional Northern racial clashes do a great disservice to the desegregation cause in the South. So your crusade must be divested of any geographical implications, of any holier-than-thou attitudes.

"Help to marshal the full strength of the nation in support of the courts. The beguiling plea for a breathing spell, or a respite from affirmative action, which comes occasionally from respectable sources, must be rejected, because there is not a scintilla of evidence that such respites would be used to get on with the business of integrating the schools. Rather, the evidence is overwhelmingly to the effect that the time would be employed to gain Northern public and Congressional support.

"Finally, remember that the white Southern liberal fights your battle as well as his own. He does so in spite of powerful pressures from state and community, quite often -- and this is his personal tragedy -- at the cost of family division and loss of friends. He is apt to be a lonely figure. Give him at all times the consciousness that, in those areas not so stirred by the passions of the moment, he has understanding and sympathy."

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

An equally oft heard argument is that "you can't legislate morality" and "laws don't change prejudices." Dr. Alfred J. Marrow, Chairman of the New York City Commission on Intergroup Relations, stated that the experience of the New York City Commission has demonstrated "first and foremost....anti-discriminatory laws are workable and in fact irreplaceable as a device to advance our program of equal opportunity for all." Anti-discrimination legislation "has fixed higher moral and civic standards and helped us to attain them."

The Commission's experience has proved that a combination of public policy, law and an effective administrative agency can eliminate many discriminatory practices. In its program to eliminate community prejudices, the Commission has found that a neighborhood's problems cannot be solved without the active participation of the people who live and work in it. "We have learned that even biased members of a community will change their approach and attitude as they participate with others in a joint effort to improve their neighborhood."

Finally the Commission has also found that programs to improve intergroup relations cannot be developed without the benefit of technical and professional assistance. The findings of social scientists concerning the nature and causes of intergroup tensions and the methods by which these tensions may be released are invaluable guides.

Who Are The Moderates?

It is frequently said that the problem of school desegregation should be left to the "moderates." But who is a moderate? Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the NAACP, points out that when moderate men seek to avoid conflict and chaos they go to the courts -- the time-honored judges of disputes. "The first mark of a moderate [therefore] must be a conviction that the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court is the law and must be obeyed." The moderate must also be willing to explore ways and means of complying with the court's rulings.

Since the rights of citizens of the United States are at stake, when those rights are being flagrantly violated, the moderate is one who also invokes the federal power and seeks Congressional legislation to protect these rights. The moderates are those like the NAACP attorney in Virginia who concluded an agreement with the attorney for the City of Charlottesville, Va. on a school desegregation plan, saying in effect, "This is not completely as we would want it but the city is proceeding on a sound plan in good faith and Negro citizens will cooperate."

While the true moderates have been smothered under a blanket of social, political and economic pressures, they are slowly beginning to emerge in the South, and insist on respect for law.

In the same connection, Dr. Herman H. Long of the Race Relations Department, Board of Home Missions, Congregational Christian Churches, referred to the propaganda campaign currently being waged in the name of "moderation" which is aimed at retarding and defeating the desegregation process. This propaganda attributes our present racial difficulties to the NAACP leadership and it would have the Negro abate his efforts to achieve full civil rights and agree instead to a "cooling off period" in the hope that "reasonable" and "wise" men will eventually assert themselves. While the importance of good will cannot, of course, be minimized, it must not be purchased or achieved at the expense of a continuing denial of individual rights.

GOVERNMENT AND CIVIL RIGHTS: OUR FREEDOMS, OUR RIGHTS AND OUR FUTURE

Chairman : Herman Edelsberg, Director of the Washington Office of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and Chairman of the Clearing House

Speakers : Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts
Lawrence E. Walsh, U. S. Deputy Attorney General

Reporter : Tad Masaoka, Japanese American Citizens League

How best to safeguard and advance our constitutional rights and freedom in face of the Communist menance was the theme of an address by Senator John F. Kennedy (D-Mass). Would the American people today ratify the Constitution and adopt the Bill of Rights? Or have the dangers of external attack and internal subversion promoted by a foe more sinister than any our Founding Fathers knew so altered our world and our beliefs as to make these fundamental truths no longer applicable?

There are some who insist that individual rights must yield to the interests of national security, that there is a conflict between the two. Freedom and security, however, said Senator Kennedy, are opposite sides of the same coin, and the free expression of ideas is not more expendable, but far more essential in a period of challenge and crisis.

If we are to survive as a free nation we must keep our minds open to criticism and new ideas. It is this freedom which is the source of our inner strength, and it is in their lack of it, that the Communists will find the seed of their own destruction. The question which will have to be decided within the next decade is whether a free society can meet the single-minded advance of the Communist system. Senator Kennedy is confident that we can because there is no real conflict between freedom and security. Through centuries of crises, the American tradition has demonstrated, on the contrary, that freedom is the ally of security.

While in the last decade we have made tremendous strides in reasserting the principles of freedom that are the foundations of our democracy, we have also suffered some setbacks. There is still for example, the unworkable non-Communist affidavit requirement of the Taft-Hartley Act and the Congress has now been asked to achieve "a balance of ridicule" by applying it to employers as well as to union officials. Last year, too, Congress included a loyalty oath provision in the National Defense Education Act which would deny high school students scholarship loans unless they execute loyalty affidavits. There are still other inroads on our freedoms - new expansions instead of limitations on wire tapping; and a man can still be deported, denied a passport, and fired from the Government without the elementary safeguards of due process -- fair hearing, notice, the right to face accusers, etc. There is still much to be done, therefore if we are to achieve the freedom which is our heritage. "If we are to be the land of the free, then we must also be the home of the brave."

The obligation and responsibility of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government in securing equality of opportunity for all its citizens was discussed by Lawrence E. Walsh, Deputy Attorney General of the United States. The critical civil rights issue today of course is that of public school desegregation. While the news has not all been good, neither has it all been bad. One year after the May 17, 1954 decision, 140 school districts desegregated their classrooms. At the beginning of the 1958 school year the number had increased to 790. Within the last year the exponents of massive resistance in Virginia and elsewhere have received several significant setbacks and the voices of the moderates are gradually beginng to be heard. The slow steady march of progress will continue, Mr. Walsh predicted, more strongly than before.

There is a growing realization in the South today that an accommodation must ultimately be made to the Supreme Court decision. More and more the people affected are showing their acceptance of the principle that they must respect the lawfully determined rights of others. This change in attitude would seem to justify the Administration's policy of leaving to individual plaintiffs the job of bringing about compliance with the Supreme Court school desegregation decision. The Justice Department has only intervened where there have been disorders or threats of force. Thus it intervened in Hoxie, Arkansas where a mob tried to obstruct and prevent a school board from operating its schools on an integrated basis and again in Little Rock where a threat to the supremacy of the federal courts was involved. This policy of non-interference is one which was adopted after long deliberation and not without thorough consideration being given to the arguments of those who would have the government bring such suits on its own initiative. It was felt that in the present climate Federal intervention might prejudice rather than help bring about a reasonable solution. The issue would no longer be one between the individual plaintiff and the local school board but one between the school board and the federal government, and local sympathy would be on the side of the school board.

Finally Walsh said, the task of achieving compliance with the Supreme Court decision is one which calls for wisdom, understanding and determination. With this in mind the Administration has submitted to Congress a set of legislative proposals which are moderate and workable. One proposal would make it a crime for anyone to use force or threats of force to interfere with or obstruct any federal court order in school desegregation cases. This bill would enable the federal government to act promptly and effectively and avoid such tragedies as Little Rock, where force was used to frustrate a federal court order and the judicially determined rights of individual citizens. Another proposal would extend federal financial and technical assistance to school districts which may be faced with serious financial and educational problems in integrating their existing school systems. These proposals, the Administration believes will if adopted, do much to accelerate an attitude of acceptance of the Court's decision and provide the most effective means to insure greater progress in this difficult area.

In answer to a question, Senator Kennedy stated he agreed that ideally it would be preferable to have no Federal intervention. At the same time, however the burden of enforcing the school desegregation decision should not be left entirely to individual litigants -- the Federal Government should have authority to initiate such suits. For that reason Senator Kennedy said, he favored legislation such as Part III, which would confer that authority on the Attorney General.

How two cities desegregated their school systems -- and the lessons they hold for communities which must yet take the step toward desegregation -- was related by Walter N. Tobriner, President of the District of Columbia Board of Education, and David L. Krupsaw, Chairman of the Arlington (Va.) County Board. Both emphasized that desegregation can be achieved successfully and with dignity if public officials act firmly and are determined that disorder will not be tolerated.

Three peculiarly local factors, in Mr. Tobriner's opinion, contributed to the relative ease of transition to an integrated school system in Washington: (1) The fact that racial barriers had already started to crumble in the nation's capital, e.g., in government employment, in professional societies, in public amusement and in housing; (2) the publicly expressed determination of President Eisenhower that integration in the District be a model for the nation; and (3) the fact that desegregation could not be made a political issue since the District of Columbia is governed by appointed rather than elected officials. However, what made the transition more difficult than in any other city of comparable size in the country was the tremendous number of Negroes in the District -- over 60% of the school population at the time of integration was colored.

While the experience of each city is unique, nevertheless, there are several factors which contributed to the successful school changeover in the District of Columbia which have more than local significance. First was the promptness with which the Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools acted immediately after the Supreme Court decision. It announced that integration was to take place at the opening of school the following fall, and presented a detailed plan for desegregation rather than a mere generalized outline. Parents knew well in advance of school opening what the plan was, and they knew too that the Board of Education would act to carry out the plan.

Promptness of course is no longer possible in those States which have thus far resisted integration. The other factors however which made Washington desegregation a success -- firmness, certainty and effective police support -- may spell the difference for other communities between disorder and bloodshed on the one hand and peaceful desegregation on the other. If the experience of Washington is to be helpful, Mr. Tobriner concluded, school boards in communities which have not yet desegregated must come up with a definite and positive policy, establish a fixed timetable for successive steps and, most of all, the local police must help with their undivided support.

The chief reason why school desegregation was accomplished in Arlington without incident is the fact that the authorities made it clear that disturbances would not be tolerated. "The Arlington experience," Krupsaw said, "demonstrates conclusively that no disorders occur where public officials are honestly determined that there will be no breach of the peace."

The smooth transition to a desegregated school system was the result, however, of much more than just police planning. Conferences were held by white and Negro parents; workshops were held for the youngsters to prepare them for the emotional adjustment involved in the transfer to the white schools; volunteer white teachers worked as tutors; white parents arranged for the Negro children to meet some of the white children so that the Negro students would see a few familiar faces on the first day of school; student guides were assigned to help the newcomers through the hallways to the various classes; the principal of the heretofore all-white school talked to the student body telling them what would be expected of them and the Superintendent of Schools made it clear that any student creating a disturbance would be automatically suspended and would be re-admitted only after a conference with his parents.

Most Virginians, said Mr. Krupsaw, do not welcome integration, but more important, responsible Virginians and Arlingtonians wanted no Little Rock. Both the Governor of Virginia and Arlington officials made it clear that they were determined to keep peace and order. That determination spelled the difference between Little Rock and Arlington.

On February 2, 1959, six of Norfolk's secondary schools which had been closed since September under Virginia's massive resistance laws reopened under court order on an integrated basis. Why did Norfolk's citizens permit its schools to be closed? What happens to a community when schools are shut down?

Rev. James Brewer, Chairman of the Norfolk Committee for Public Schools and a leading Unitarian minister, declared that apathy was the single most important factor which led to the school closings in Norfolk. The great body of moderate citizens (who finally decided that public schools are an economic and educational necessity) simply did not at first offer their leadership. They refused to help saying "we are with you but if I am in the forefront it might hurt my organization or business. Come back when you have other community leaders and I'll be glad to help or join." Social pressures were also brought to prevent people who might otherwise be disposed to join in a movement to keep the schools open, from becoming too concerned or involved.

Few people also seemed to realize that under Virginia's massive resistance laws, Norfolk schools could be closed if an attempt was made to open them on a desegregated basis. Finally, there was the "it can't happen here" attitude -- somehow "someone" would prevent the schools from closing. But the schools did close and they remained closed for one whole semester.

During this five month period, 10,000 children were locked out of school. Less than 4,500 went to makeshift tutoring groups which met in private homes and in some church buildings. 1,600 transferred to other schools -- some nearby but most to schools located from Connecticut to California. Most of these students have not returned. 1,000 transferred to schools in South Norfolk where classes were held from four to nine p.m. However, for about 2,500 to 3,000 children, there was no school.

School closing disrupted family life; homes were broken. There was the strain of an additional financial burden to provide tuition for children to attend school elsewhere. Teachers looked for jobs elsewhere and business was affected. Industry questioned the wisdom of locating in a city and a state where there would be no public schools.

While the massive resistance laws have been declared unconstitutional, the forces of massive resistance are still far from dead. The extremists are still out to destroy Virginia's public schools. Gov. Almond has declared that public education must be saved in Virginia and has called upon Virginians to join him in the fight to save the schools. Only if the great body of moderate citizens show their determination not to abandon the public schools will public education in Virginia and elsewhere in the South be saved.

CONGRESS AND CIVIL RIGHTS

Speakers : Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania
Senator Frank E. Moss of Utah

Chairman : Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, General Director, Washington Office, National Council of Churches

Reporter : Sterling Tucker, Director, Washington Urban League

The role of Congress in encouraging respect for and observance of constitutional rights was discussed by Senator Hugh Scott (R-Pa) and Senator Frank E. Moss (D-Utah). Senator Scott felt that the Administration erred in not asking Congress as it did in 1956 and again in 1957, for authority to bring civil injunction suits to prevent violations of civil rights, including the right to desegregated schooling.

Giving the U.S. Attorney General the power to seek relief in the courts to prevent violations of civil rights, Scott declared, is preferable to having to rely on criminal prosecutions which can be brought only after the violation is committed and the harm is done. Part III of what subsequently became the Civil Rights Act of 1957 conferred such authority on the Attorney General as it passed the House of Representatives; but the Senate deleted that provision from the bill. As finally passed the bill restricted the authority of the Attorney General to bring such injunction suits to cases involving violations of voting rights.

Part III, said Scott would be a useful legal weapon in bringing about orderly compliance with the school desegregation decision. It would throw the weight of Congress behind that decision and would manifest the determination of Congress that the law be obeyed. It would not leave entirely to private litigants the job of enforcing their constitutional right to desegregated schooling.

Senator Moss pointed to the use of the filibuster in the Senate to kill civil rights bills, and stressed that as a practical matter whatever is done by Congress on civil rights depends on what is satisfactory to the Senate. The civil rights proposals which enjoy the widest support and therefore stand the best chance of being enacted are: (1) the bill to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission; (2) the anti-dynamiting bills and (3) the bill to strengthen the Attorney General's hand in voting rights cases by requiring state officials to preserve voting records and giving the federal government access to them.

Part III, which he favors does not, regrettably, enjoy the same widespread support. The question, therefore, said Senator Moss, is whether we should strive for legislation that we know will not pass or whether we should seek only legislation that is attainable.

Acknowledging that "our ultimate purpose always must be to end discrimination as rapidly as possible," Moss said that perhaps this year we should try to pass only those items for which we have the votes and lay the groundwork for more comprehensive legislation in the future. To move forward even though slightly, advances the cause of civil rights.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY, NATIONAL SECURITY AND THE COURTS

Speakers : Representative Frank Thompson, Jr., of New Jersey
Representative John V. Lindsay of New York

Consultants : Will Maslow, General Counsel, American Jewish Congress

A major objective of the die-hard segregationists has been to discredit the Supreme Court and thus to undermine the authority of the school desegregation decision. In this effort they have been joined by those who have sought to pin a "sofet on communism" label on the Court because of its decisions upholding the constitutional rights of defendants in internal security cases.

Congressmen Frank Thompson (D-NJ) and John Lindsay (R-NY) both pointed out that there never has been a period in its history when the Court has not been under attack, and the present Court should be no more immune from legitimate criticism than any of its predecessors. But there is a difference between responsible informed criticism and the sweeping broadside attacks on the institution itself and the character and purposes of the Justices which emanate from the segregationists.

Three groups of Court decisions have given rise to these attacks: First, the 1954 ruling in the school segregation cases for which the most vehement abuse has been reserved; second, those decisions in the area of national security in which the Court has safeguarded individual rights and liberties; and third, those in which the Court has upheld the procedural rights of the accused to a fair trial.

Critics of the Court allege that the Court has shown an insufficient regard for precedent in order to give play to its predilections. This argument assumes that the earlier Court rendered its decision in strict accordance with "the law" while the over-ruling Court acted on the basis of its own personal desires. But this is not so. While the Court adheres to precedent it has always responded, as it must, to the moral and social currents of its day. While precedent and certainty are of value in the judicial process, these critics would have the Court slavishly follow precedent rather than make the law an effective instrument capable of meeting the needs of the twentieth century.

The report of the Conference of Chief Justices was a wholesale assault on the Court, covering 25 years of court decisions, with criticism extending even to the upholding of social security under the general welfare clause of the Constitution. The report exhibited the very lack of restraint which it attributed to the Court. Congressman Lindsay pointed out that the Court in its decisions has shown a degree of restraint far more than is generally recognized.

Critics also contend that the Court has usurped legislative functions but this ignores the traditional role of the Court which must interpret and give content to the broad concepts of "due process of law" and "the equal protection of the laws" embodied in the Constitution. Frequently, too, Congress will legislate in broad terms leaving to the Court the job of applying the general law to concrete situations.

Finally, critics say that the Justices are unqualified because of their lack of prior judicial experience. They would require at least five years experience on the bench as a prerequisite to nomination to the Supreme Court. But this peculiar doctrine would mean that a Marshall, Brandeis, Stone or Hughes would not have the training and experience to sit on the Court.

"The Supreme Court," said Congressman Lindsay, "is a naked institution. The Constitution has provided it with no means of enforcing its decisions; its effectiveness as an institution and as a constituent element of our system of government rests entirely upon the voluntary acceptance of its decrees by other elements of government and by the people. Disagreement with the Court's decrees will not enfeeble its institutional strength. But disagreement coupled with broadside attacks upon the institution itself or upon the character or purpose of the Justices will surely erode the institution at its base.

"We who by reason of training or office are in positions of public responsibility, have a duty to expose the destructiveness of any attempt to weaken the Judiciary as an institution. Particularly in times of stress we cannot risk the loosening of our strongest bulwark against any enemy -- namely our Constitution and the fundamental liberties embodied in it. Without a strong and independent Judiciary the weakening of both our individual liberties and our national security will surely result."

(NOTE: Of all the pending issues with which Clearing House organizations are concerned, civil rights is the one in the legislative forefront at this time. Others may or may not see action. The Clearing House therefore sends you now the following memo on the civil rights situation; from now until Congress recesses, we will attempt to keep you up to date on this and other developments, as the occur, with short flyers, rather than issuing our usual longer Bulletin. A Bulletin summarizing the status of all legislation affecting the Clearing House fields, as it will stand when Congress reconvenes next year, will be sent you shortly after this session ends.)

FOR YOUR INFORMATION : CIVIL RIGHTS

A bipartisan coalition is working to put through this session of Congress a bill which will be civil rights in name but not in substance. Some Democrats hope by this maneuver to appease demands for action this year without antagonizing the Southerners, and thereby to avoid an open party fight in 1960. What benefit the Republicans will receive from a watered-down civil rights bill is not readily apparent, but a number are willing to go along.

The contents of the "compromise" bill have not been revealed, but its basis undoubtedly will be the two-part measure (S. 2391) now pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee. This bill would merely extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission and require the retention and production of voting records by State registrars. A likely addition to it on the floor is the Conciliation Service proposed by Senator Lyndon Johnson.

Under Senator Eastland's chairmanship, the Judiciary Committee has been proceeding at its usual snail's pace in considering legislation, but there have been a number of indications that Southerners on the committee will not be unwilling to allow the two-part measure to be reported, provided they have assurances that it will not be improved substantially on the floor.

The extent of the retreat on civil rights was made plain by the bill (H. R. 8601) recently reported by the House Judiciary Committee. There, Republicans joined with Dixiecrats to kill not only Chairman Celler's Part III provisions (authorizing the Attorney General to seek injunctive relief in the federal courts against civil rights violations) but also modest Administration proposals, recognizing the Supreme Court's desegregation decision as the law of the land: giving limited technical aid to communities prepared to desegregate; and providing a statutory basis for the President's Committee on Government Contracts. What remains is a bill whic contains a couple of meaningful provisions (the voting record section and criminal penalities for obstruction of federal court orders) but which evades entirely the question of desegregation of the public schools. Mr. Celler has announced his intent to try to improve the bill on the floor, but there are indications that it will not even be permitted to emerge from the House Rules Committee until a Senate compromise is reached.

Civil rights forces are still pressing hard for legislation at this session, but they have made clear their conviction that a "compromise" which does nothing to support the Supreme Court would be worse than no bill at all.

Dear Mary Alice:

Thanks for your two recent letters. I'm enclosing our check for SRC's subscription to the Clearing House.

The chairman of "HOPE" currently is a woman -- Mrs. Frances Breeden. She is a very able and articulate person and could be counted on for a good presentation. Whether or not she would consider it good strategy in this critical period to make a public appearance before all us professional mixers, I just don't know. There's no problem about her personal attitudes -- only the question of strategy and timing.

A similar person in a (now) less contested situation is Mrs. Joe R. Brewer, chairman of the Little Rock Women's Emergency Committee for Public Schools. (The women are in control, you see.) I don't know Mrs. Brewer except through correspondence, but I'm sure either she or one of her associates would make a good speech.

As one possible alternative, has Morris Abram of Atlanta ever spoken to the Clearing House? In the unlikely event you don't know him, he is an able lawyer, has carried the ball in various liberal efforts, including the county-unit cases, ran against Jim Davis in 1954, is well versed in the school situation, and is a brilliant speaker. Herman Edelsberg knows him well.

I'll be glad to talk with either of the Atlanta people about this if you'd like.

Best regards,

As ever,

Dear Harold :

Once again working on our annual conference (and way behind schedule this year because I was out of town throughout most of October, when my mother died), I'm after information and guidance.

Who's the president of Atlanta's HOPE?

Would he be good as a conference speaker?

Would he be likely to come to us?

I will, as usual, be bothering you much more within the next couple of months, if you can stand it. But right now, I'll be very grateful for an answer to those three questions.

Dear Harold :

Making my year-end check of our books, I see that I should have written you some time ago about the SRC's subscription to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, which has run out.

To refresh your recollection, the SRC has been subscribing at the rate of $25 a year, and we received its last payment in September of 1958.

We are extremely grateful for your interest in and help with the Clearing House program, and I do hope you can continue as one of our subscribing agencies for 1959-1960.

With all best wishes,

Sincerely,

PS -- We have started work late for our 1960 conference, as I was out of town a good deal this fall because of the death of my mother.

If you've got any ideas for either topics or personnel that you think would be constructive for conference study, I'd surely appreciate your dropping me a note about them.

February 19, 1960

Dear Friend:

This is to let you know that the National Civil Liberties Clearing House has scheduled March 24 and 25 as the dates for its twelfth annual conference, which will be held at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton here.

This year the conference program will be a varied one, covering four major and controversial aspects of today's national life. Civil rights -- the decade's outstanding moral issue -- will have top place on the agenda. Other conference sessions will aim at discussion-in-depth of the current questions of censorship and freedom of speech and press; due process -- the protection of society and of the constitutional rights of the individual; and American freedoms in relation to our national purpose as we enter the '60s.

Our program is not yet fully complete, but among those who are expected to be speaking to the conference are Emmet J. Hughes, Times-Life editor and author of America the Vincible; Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh, who is in charge of the legislative program of the Department of Justice; Dr. Daniel W. Wynn, chaplain of Tuskegee Institute; Sam Dash, author of The Eavesdroppers; and Oliver Gasch, United States Attorney for the District of Columbia.

We are planning, too, to allow plenty of time at each session for discussion and participation from the floor.

We expect that officers and leaders of well over 100 national organizations will attend the conference. The complete program and registration forms will be sent you within the next ten days. Meanwhile, we hope you will note the dates now, and will plan to attend.

Sincerely yours,

SENATE STARTS CIVIL RIGHTS DEBATE ON SCHEDULE:
HOUSE DISCHARGE PETITION SIGNATURES NEAR 219

The long-awaited debate on civil rights legislation began on schedule in the Senate on February 15. At the same time, civil rights groups were seeking to secure the few more signatures necessary on the Celler discharge petition to bring the total to 219 and permit legislation to reach the floor of the House.

The Senate

H.R. 8315 is the bill selected as the "vehicle" for civil rights action by Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson, who invited "all interested Senators" to offer civil rights amendments to it. This bill itself is an inconspicuous measure that would excuse the citizens of Stella, Mo., from paying rent for Army quarters to replace their burned-out school. Senator Johnson said he had chosen it because it is the only House-passed bill on the Senate calendar which had the approval of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee, and because no bill dealing strictly with civil rights had reached the Senate yet.

Should a voting bill be reported by the Senate Rules Committee, or a civil rights bill passed by the House while Senate debate is going on, it may displace H.R. 8315 as the pending business in civil rights action. Regardless of the parliamentary juggling that the Johnson move has triggered, civil rights organizations will seek the inclusion of three major provisions in any legislation:

1. "Part III" - to permit the Attorney General to initiate government civil suits in school desegregation and other cases.

2. An effective voting registrar-referee measure that combines the best features of the pending proposals.

3. Technical and financial assistance to states and localities to help them in their school integration program.

Most of the discussion in recent weeks has centered on the Civil Rights Commission's proposal for the establishment of voting registrars, and the Attorney General's subsequent bill to vest similar functions in the federal courts to be carried out by voting referees. The Commission's proposal is embodied in bills introduced by Senators Humphrey, Javits, Morse and others and now pending in the Senate Rules Committee.

Each proposal has advantages which the other lacks. The Rogers bill would cover both state and federal elections. The registrars bill would establish a simple federal registration procedure just like state registration procedures, and would avoid court delays. While neither proposal is adequate as it stands, the best elements of each can be fused into a bill which will be effective. Such effective legislation would:

1. After a determination that there has been racial discrimination, make available to every Negro a remedy which does not require him to suffer the needless embarassment and humiliation of going before the offending state registrar and does not require him to go into court to make out a time consuming legal case.

2. Establish a federal registration procedure by federal officers which would be both uncomplicated and speedy, would encourage Negroes to exercise their franchise and would result in the registration of all qualified applicants.

3. Apply to both state and federal elections.

4. Secure, by adequate enforcement provisions, the right of every Negro registered by a federal enrollment officer to vote and have his vote counted.

The most logical forum for such a fusion would be the Senate Rules Committee which has completed its hearings and will meet to consider legislation on February 17th. But this will depend in great measure on whether Sen. Johnson will accept a good registrar product and bring it to the floor of the Senate. At this point Johnson has not committed himself.

The House

The pending legislation in the House is HR 8601, still bottled up in the Rules Committee. It would:

1. Make obstruction of court orders for school desegregation a federal crime.

2. Require preservation of voting records for two years and permit inspection by the Justice Department upon written request.

3. Make it a federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing any building or vehicle.

4. Authorize the Government to provide education facilities for children of military personnel where public schools were closed to avoid integration.

The House bill is weak and unsatisfactory in its present form, but once it is dislodged efforts will be made on the floor to strengthen it by adding at least three major amendments (see above).

Although the Rules Committee is still holding the bill, the discharge petition has helped to break the logjam. As the petition neared completion, Republicans and Southern Democrats on the Committee felt compelled to call a meeting. No final action was reached, but it seems unlikely that the bill will be detained much longer.

The important question remaining is what kind of rule the Committee will grant. If the bill were to come to the floor via the discharge petition, all major amendments could be offered. But if the Rules Committee acts before the discharge petition is completed, the rule itself will determine whether the important school desegregation and voting amendments are in order. If Republicans want to add the Administration's referee bill, they may be disposed to give a little on this point.

WILLIAM L. TAYLOR,
Americans for Democratic Action

(NOTE: On February 18, Republicans joined with Northern Democrats on the House Rules Committee in ordering a rule reported which will bring H. R. 8601 to the House floor on or about March 10. The nature of the rule, however, gives serious cause for concern. It specified that the Attorney General's voting referee bill could be brought up as an amendment without being subjected to an objection that it was not germane. The implication in this special treatment for the referee proposal is that other amendments, including Part III and assistance for school districts prepared to desegregate, might be ruled non-germane. -- W. L. T.)

HOUSE PASSES INDUSTRIAL SECURITY BILL:
EXECUTIVE ORDER MAY STILL BE PLANNED

That much-abused truism, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," was given an ironic twist on February 3, when a highly controversial bill to re-instate the Industrial Security Program (H.R. 8121) slipped through the House without debate or dissent, although its passage could have been prevented had even one voice been raised in objection to it.

The secret of the bill's success on the House floor lay in its placement on the consent calendar -- a procedure designed to expedite non-controversial measures. As the calendar was called, the Clerk read the number and title of H.R. 8121 in a long list of others; its sponsor, Rep. Francis Walter, spoke briefly in its support; not one of the 60 Representatives reported to be present objected to it; and the bill passed.

Mr. Walter made it clear that the purpose of his bill was "specifically to overcome the decision of the Supreme Court in the Greene case so that the Department of Defense may have congressional authority to safeguard our industrial establishments, without disclosing information injurious to our national security." In the Greene decision (Greene vs. McElroy, June 30, 1959) the Court had decided, 8 to 1, that neither Congress nor the Executive had authorized an industrial security program under which a person could be denied security clearance without the right to confront or cross-examine his accusers. Although the Court did not rule on the constitutionality of the program, the opinion of the majority, as presented by Chief Justice Warren, raises doubt as to whether a program without confrontation rights would, in the next round, pass the test of constitutionality.

Following this decision, moves had immediately started in both branches of government for some kind of industrial security program to replace the existing program declared invalid by the Court. Bills were introduced in Congress, including Rep. Walter's. Authorizing the Secretary of Defense to provide a security program covering defense contractors and their employees, his bill provides that any administrative procedures prescribed by the Secretary of Defense under its provisions "shall be designed to protect from disclosure all information which in the opinion of the Secretary would affect the national security, safety or public interest, or would tend to compromise investigative sources or investigative methods."

The 15-line bill does not provide rights for individual employees faced with denial of security clearance. Referred to the House Un-American Committee, which Mr. Walter chairs, the bill was unanimously reported out on September 2, 1959, without hearings.

Executive Order Considered

Just before the close of the 1959 session, Rep. Walter asked for suspension of the rules for consideration of his bill. However, at the last minute he called off his request, indicating that he had been informed that an Executive Order was imminent. Somewhat puzzled as to what lay behind this "shift in gears", observers in Washington nevertheless turned their attention to the Executive Branch, but there were no overt signs of an Executive Order until January 17, 1960, when an article in the New York Times by Anthony Lewis indicated that a draft of a new industrial security program had been under consideration for some months, that an order was forthcoming within a few weeks, and that the new order would provide limited confrontation rights to individuals facing security charges. (No order has been issued to date.)

It was against this background that Mr. Walter's bill was suddenly called up and passed by the House.

In answer to questions by the press following the measure's surprise passage, Rep. Walter was reported as stating that "The timing of the action was a coincidence," and that he did not know that the Administration had an Executive Order in draft form.

What will happen next in the Congress is uncertain. Mr. Walter's bill has been referred to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, which already has before it an industrial security bill, S. 2416, by the subcommittee's members, Senator Dodd and Senator Keating. No hearings have been scheduled as yet.

At this point it is not clear either what effect the House action might have on the President's Executive Order, or for that matter, what effect the issuance of an order would have on further Congressional action.

"Psychological Reversal"

The major significance of the rumored draft order, according to the Times article, is that it represents a "sharp change in what has been consistent policy of all government security programs over the last dozen years" -- that is, a "psychological" reversal. In the past, the presumption has been "that the accused individual had no right to know his accusers' names or cross-examine them. Security officials have had no obligation to come forward with live witnesses; in many hearings the government has produced no witnesses, relying wholly on undisclosed statements." According to the Times, the burden would now be on security officers to show some special reason for changing the presumption that those making the security decision "would see and hear only what the accused individual sees and hears."

The Times article explains in detail how this "psychological shift" takes place. The draft order makes it a "general rule" that any one under the program has a right to cross-examine any source of information against him. However, the draft order goes on to provide that "informants" could be exempt from cross-examination "under certain circumstances." A distinction is made in the circumstances governing the exemption of casual informers and those of a genuine "confidential informant who has been engaged in obtaining intelligence information for the government."

"Casual" and "Confidential" Informants

To withhold the name of a confidential informant from an accused employee, the head of the agency furnishing the information must certify that the information source is a confidential informant and that to disclose his identity "would be substantially harmful to the national security." This would mean that if, for example, an FBI report were involved, the certification would need to be made by the Attorney General himself.

In order for a casual informant to be exempt, the head of the Department handling the security case (for example, the Secretary of the Army, Navy or Air Force) "or his special designee" first has to determine that A) the informant "could not appear in person because of death, severe illness, or some other good and sufficient cause", and B) "that failure to receive the statement from this informant would be substantially harmful to the national security." However, if an exception is made in the case of a casual informant, the final decision in this security case must be decided by the head of the Department himself, who must in turn "consider, in deciding the case, the suspect's lack of opportunity to cross-examine witnesses."

The draft order also permits the use of investigative reports in security proceedings if failure to admit them "would be substantially harmful to the national security."

The rumored draft received a somewhat chilly reception in many quarters. Some questioned whether the draft is merely a "reform" without providing any real change in the existing system. Others referred to the draft proposals as "window-dressing in the faceless informer system," and to the Times article as "deceptively optimistic."

Senator Thomas C. Hennings, as chairman of the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, expressed concern that his committee had not been informed of the proposed Executive Order despite "numerous overtures to the Secretary of Defense, and replies to the effect that 'upon establishment of an Executive Branch position we will communicate with you further.'"

PASSPORT LEGISLATION
IN THE 86th CONGRESS

The Administration's request for legislation authorizing the Secretary of State to deny passports to Communists or other persons who are engaged in "furthering the international Communist movement" has been before Congress in a variety of forms since 1958, when the Supreme Court ruled in the Kent-Briehl and Dayton cases that the Secretary has no authority, under existing law, to withhold passports on the basis of beliefs and associations.

When these decisions were handed down, the President asked Congress for very comprehensive authority to deny passports on the grounds that "each day and week that passes without it exposes us to great danger." In April 1959, the Department of State pointed out with alarm that 1,150 persons, about whom the Department had "some evidence of Communist affiliation" had applied for passports since the Court decisions. The Department did not know, however, how many of these persons had used their passports to travel abroad or the extent of their travel.

Key Issues -

What kinds of passport restrictions are compatible with the fact that freedom of movement is a part of the American heritage? Is there any justification for prohibiting all citizens from traveling to certain foreign areas? If restrictions are necessary, what procedures should be established to protect the rights of passport applicants? Should they be fully informed as to the nature and source of any charges brought against them?

Legislative Background -

August 23, 1958, the House passed a bill which would have given the Secretary power to deny passports to persons engaged in furthering the international Communist movement; the bill died in the Senate. September 8, 1959, the House passed another bill, H.R. 9069, by a vote of 371-18. No action was taken by the Senate in 1959, although three committees held separate hearing on various proposals. According to reports, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee may mark up a bill in the near future.

Pending Bills -

In general, and with important exceptions, the bills pending before Senate Committees range, as follows, from liberal-through-varying-shades-of-restrictiveness:

S. 806, introduced by Senator Humphrey and 6 others;
S. 2287, by Senator Fulbright;
H.R. 9069, the House-passed bill;
S. 2315, by Senator Wiley (all the above are pending before the Foreign Relations Committee);
S. 2095, by Senator Mundt, before the Government Operations Committee;
S. 1303, by Senator Eastland, before the Internal Security Subcommittee.

S. 806 - supports the right to travel abroad. It would restrict passports only in time of war or where issuance would interfere with the judicial process. Persons could travel to unsettled areas, such as China, at their own risk. In any administrative proceedings regarding the right to travel, passport applicants would be given the right to see all evidence and cross-examine all witnesses.

H.R. 9069 - would authorize the Secretary of State to deny a passport to anyone who has been affiliated with the Communist Party since 1951, if their presence abroad would "be harmful to the security of the United States." Applicants will be required to file non-Communist affidavits. When a passport is denied, H.R. 9069 provides for "judicial review on the record in the district courts of the United States." During House debate, "on the record" was interpreted as requiring full disclosure of all evidence.

H.R. 9069 would also permit the President to prohibit all citizens from traveling to particular areas, if "the United States Government is unable to provide adequate protection to citizens traveling therein or because such travel would seriously impair the foreign relations of the United States."

S. 2315 - would authorize the Secretary to deny passports to Communists and Communist sympathizers and require applicants to sign non-Communist affidavits. In case of a denial, applicants could request an administrative hearing. The Hearing Board would be authorized to protect "information, sources... and investigative methods, disclosure of which would have a substantially adverse effect upon the national security or the conduct of foreign relations." Judicial review would be allowed only in the district court of the District of Columbia.

The Administration is supporting S. 2315, although it would prefer more comprehensive legislation. Administration spokesmen have said that they can not support H. R. 9069, as long as it provides for full confrontation.

NATIONAL SUPPORT MOUNTING FOR HOME RULE FOR WASHINGTON

Support from organizations all over the country has built up in impressive fasion to help the voteless citizens of the District of Columbia in this year's climax of a twelve year campaign for restoration of the District's voting rights.

Pressure from the grass roots for Congressional action is nothing new. But what makes this campaign unique is that it is purely an expression of moral principle about what may seem a matter of local Washington concern.

Home Rule for the 830 thousand people of Washington -- restoration of the local self-government Congress took away "temporarily" 85 years ago -- is not a bread-and-butter issue for the people of Iowa or California; it doesn't touch the personal rights or privileges of anyone outside the District.

So the people of the fifty states who are pressuring their Congressmen for action on Home Rule are simply expressing their indignation that, in the capital of the United States, democracy is flagrantly absent, and their conviction that the voting rights of the Districts's citizens are a civil rights issue of national concern.

This upsurge of concern across the United States couldn't have come at a better time. For the sixth time in twelve years, the Senate had overwhelmingly passed a bill to restore Home Rule. But for the sixth time, too, a sectional ocalition in control of the House District Committee is stubbornly killing the legislation -- even though it has been endorsed by both political parties, by former President Truman and President Eisenhower, and by virtually every representative civic group in Washington.

Faced with this perennial sabotage of the legislative process, a bipartisan group in the House launched a discharge petition -- a special procedure to bring the bill to a vote, bypassing the sitdown strike on the Committee. They now are within fifty-five signatures of the 219 needed from House members to get the bill to the House floor. The next few months will spell success or failure for this twelve-year fight to end eighty-five years of colonialism for Washington.

Grassroots Results

With this challenge, a community federation of some thirty-eight groups in Washington has mobilized to get local and national pressure on Congress to win over that last fifty-five Congressmen. The League of Women Voters, the PTA (the first time in history it has fought a non-school issue), the labor unions, and so on --- almost every group in Washington is in the fight. But recognizing that it takes voters to persuade Congressmen, they have appealed to the grassroots for help --- and with gratifying results. Twelve state governors, ten state legislatures, many municipal governments have all urged Congress to act. More than fifty newspapers have run over one hundred editorials in the last year appealing to their representatives to sign up. Local League of Women Voters, unions (from the local to the national headquarters), the U.S. Conference of Mayors, even the national PTA, have written wired, phoned and argued with procrastinating Congressmen. The effect has often been startling. Congressman who, one day, profess reluctance to sign discharge petitions, have stepped up to sign the next day after hearing the vigorous opinion of a substantial group of constituents. Washington's own leaders in the campaign have been gratified and, perhaps, a little surprised, to find out how potent a local branch of the AAUW or the League of Women Voters can be in influencing its Congressman.

Now, with victory so nearly in their grasp, the Washington groups are focussing their appeal to the grassroots on some of the states whose Congressional delegations have been slowest to sign the petition --- Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Idaho and Iowa. They feel that the help they get from people in these states, letting their Congressmen know how they feel, will be decisive. If they do win, they believe it will be a resounding demonstration of what national sentiment can achieve on an issue that is purely one of principle, where nobody's pocket book will be the fatter or the leaner --- but where democracy is in sorry need of vindication.

ACLU PLANS YEAR-LONG EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN
ON THE IMPORTANCE OF CIVIL LIBERTIES

A year-long educational campaign, designed to show how civil liberties directly affect the personal freedoms of all Americans, was launched by the American Civil Liberties Union in January, as a part of its celebration of its 40th anniversary.

To mark its birthday, too, the ACLU published a special issue of its monthly Civil Liberties, giving a capsule history of its four decades in summaries of its most famous cases. The ACLU was founded in January, 1920, by a score of eminent Americans, including Roger Baldwin, its first director, Jane Addams, Helen Keller, Arthur Garfield Hays, Norman Thomas, Rabbi Judah L. Magnes, and Rev. John Haynes Holmes. Since then it has grown into a nation-wide organization of 48,000 members and 27 local affiliates, with a network of 800 cooperating attorneys aiding its work throughout the country. Mr. Baldwin led the ACLU until 1950, when he retired to become its international work adviser, and was succeeded by Patrick Murphy Malin, former economics professor at Swarthmore College and vice-chairman of the World War II Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees.

The ACLU can look back at a number of constitutional battles that stirred major controversy when they occurred, but which are now hailed as respected landmarks in the history of the United States, Mr. Malin said in anniversary comments on the organization's growth.

Among the cases that Civil Liberties notes as marking the ACLU's first decade were the Palmer raids, when the Union combatted the deportations of aliens for their radical beliefs, ordered by Attorney General Mitchell Palmer; the Scopes "monkey trial" in which Clarence Darrow headed the Union's volunteer defense team in the historic test of Tennessee's anti-evolution law; and "the outstanding -- and tragic -- event of the year 1927" -- the electrocution of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

The 30's brought the Scottsboro case; the eviction of the Bonus Army from Washington; Judge Woolsey's anti-censorship decision that admitted James Joyce's Ulysses to the United States; the "Alabama ordinances"; establishment of a permanent civil government for the Virgin Islands, and the ACLU - CIO contest of Mayor ("I Am the Law") Hague's denial of free speech and assembly in Jersey City.

In the 40's the ACLU's Board adopted its resolution by which "Communists, Fascists, Ku Kluxers and others who failed to meet 'the test of consistency in the defense of civil liberties in all aspects and all places'" are barred from its governing councils and staffs; hundreds of cases were handled through its special National Committee on Conscientious Objectors; the first of the Smith Act cases were brought to the Supreme Court; the Union won its long fight for the rights of Jehovah's Witnesses; and the constitutionality of the evacuation of more than 100,000 Japanese Americans from their Pacific Coast homes was unsucessfully challenged. The 50's were marked by the federal loyalty-security programs, McCarthyism, blacklisting in the mass-communications media, and the Supreme Court's school desegregation decisions and the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

Copies of the special issue of Civil Liberties (January, 1960) can be had on request to the American Civil Liberties Union, 170 Fifth Avenue, New York 10.

AIR FORCE AND CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES WILL PROBE MANUAL LINKING THE CHURCHES WITH COMMUNISM

What were the real sources of the charges hurled against the National Council of Churches in the now-repudiated Air Force training manual? Who prepared, who reviewed and who cleared the manual and the 5-year-old security guide on which it was based? Is it possible that other branches of the Armed Services may have used the same materials?

Those are a few of the questions that the National Council of Churches would like to have answered. And it is hoped that the answers may turn up in the course of the investigations that the manual has set off, in the Congress as well as in the Defense Department.

The Air Reserve Center Training Manual for Reserve Non-Commissioned Officers is the publication in question. Issued in early January, it first came to the Council's attention in mid-February, when a non-commissioned airman, disturbed by its contents, took it to his pastor.

Linking communism with the United States churches, and questioning the people's right to know, the manual carried such statements as :

"Communists and Communist fellow travelers have successfully infiltrated our churches. . . "

"It is well known that even the pastors of certain of our churches are card-carrying Communists . . . "

"The National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. officially sponsored the Revised Standard Version of the Bible, Of the 95 persons who served on this project, 30 have been affiliated with pro-communist fronts, projects and publication. . . . "

"Another foolish remark often heard is that Americans have a right to know what's going on. Most people realize the foolhardiness of such a suggestion. . . "

On February 17, apologies for the existence of the manual were issued by the Secretary of Defense and by Air Force Secretary Dudley Sharp, who said that the manual has been withdrawn, and that he has ordered an Air Force investigation of its publication, with General Curtis LeMay, deputy chief of staff, in charge.

But the Air Force also said that it does not intend to withdraw the security guide, published in 1955, which was an expansion of 1950 security regulations and on which the manual's security section was in large part based.

Cited as sources in the manual's index were such publications as a pamphlet by Circuit Riders, Inc., and two articles by Billy James Hargis, a radio-television evangelist.

A subcommittee of the House Appropriations' Committee, headed by Rep. Melvin Price (D., Ill.), and the House Freedom of Information Subcommittee, under the chairmanship of Rep. John E. Moss (D., Calif.) have started investigations of the manual and its background. Rep. Francis E. Walter (D., Penna.), chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, has defended the manual, stating that "Actually the charges that were made are true," though some of the material was presented in an "unfortunate" manner, and adding that his committee may investigate the withdrawal of the publication.

Dear Friend:

We cordially invite you to attend the twelfth annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House conference on civil rights and liberties, at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton in Washington on Thursday and Friday, March 24 and 25.

We believe that the Program Committee, which is headed by Dr. Richard B. Kennan of the National Education Association's Defense Commission, and Clarence Mitchell, Director of the NAACP's Washington Bureau, has developed a program of extraordinary timeliness and interest.

Civil rights -- the immediate, practical and moral issue on which the Nation's attention is focused today -- heads the agenda. Other sessions will deal with topics of deep concern to all who uphold individual freedom -- the issues of censorship and freedom of speech and press; law enforcement and civil liberties; and American freedoms in relation to our national purpose and our international image as we enter the '60s.

Again this year the issues will be presented by leading authorities, including representatives of the Administration and, from Capitol Hill, the Congressman most frequently mentioned as a successor to Speaker Rayburn.

The meetings will be plenary throughout, in order to allow full opportunity for participation by all of the conferees.

The conference program and a registration form are enclosed. We hope that you will attend the conference, and we look forward to welcoming you and to having the benefit of your own and your organization's views on these problems that so deeply affect us all.

Sincerely yours,

Herman Edelsberg

We particularly suggest, invitations go to your people who plan to attend the White House Conference on Children and Youth, and who may want to come to Washington a few days early to participate in our civil liberties studies.

Dear Harold—
Your own good self should be enough for us, but you see it isn't — we want pamphlets, reports, etc., too. Unreasonable, aren't we?
Yours —
Mary Alice

The Literature Committee for the twelfth annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held here March 24 and 25, is arranging for distribution at the conference of literature related to the Clearing House fields of civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom, and international civil rights -- particularly material dealing with intergroup relations in the community; work towards equality in voting, housing, education and employment; statutory civil rights; the question of obscenity in relation to censorship and freedom of the press; the right to know; academic freedom; and individual liberties in their various aspects.

We know that your organization has published some excellent materials, and we invite you to bring them to the attention of our conferees.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we ask you to send us between 50 and 100 copies each of not more than three pieces of cost-free literature that you consider to be timely, attractive, and closely related to the issues which the conference will be discussing.

We do not have the facilities for posters or displays, and we cannot undertake responsibility for materials for which a charge must be collected. However, if you have bibliographies of your publications, we will be glad to include them on the literature tables.

We ask that your materials be mailed so as to arrive on or before Monday, March 21, to:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

We will welcome your cooperation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the attention of the wide interorganizational audience which the conference will offer.

March 23, 1960

Dear Mr. Edelsberg:

Please give my greetings to those assembled at the Twelfth Annual Conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

Our Nation was established upon the highest standards of citizenship. Over the past 184 years each generation in its time has sought to measure up to these standards. In our day, I know that the oppressed peoples of the world are especially concerned with our progress in the area of individual freedom and equal justice under law.

Your annual conference provides a healthy forum of free and public discussion. Those participating in it can help speed us on our way to the achievement of America's traditional goals.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

THE NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CLEARING HOUSE

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE

March 24 and 25, 1960 Hotel Sheraton Carlton, Washington, D.C.

I was made to feel like a man without a country. I cannot vote in city, State or national elections. The State and Federal governments tax me just as they tax registered voters, but my money is being used to finance a government in which I am voiceless, and to help pay the salaries of politicians I can't vote for or against. Yet many other Negroes have been treated far, far worse than we at Tuskegee have been.

It is hard for us to understand why we must risk being murdered, flogged, jailed, intimidated, boycotted and threatened merely for trying to cast a ballot. There are many white people in the South who have paid high prices fighting for equal justice in their States and Nation; some of them have been threatened and persecuted just as Negroes. They join with thousands of disfranchised Negroes like me in pleading for our opportunity to exercise our rights as first class citizens.

Can We Break Through the Segregation Stalemate? -- Harold C. Fleming

The lunch-counter "sit-in" protests are the most dramatic evidence yet that Negro Southerners are no longer willing to play the part of contented subordinates, the role in which they were cast for so long by the White South. True, it is the young people who are doing most of the demonstrating, but they have widespread support among their elders. The demonstrations have fired the imagination of the Negro group, young and old, and there is no sign that the movement will fizzle out, panty-raid style, as so many complacent people assumed at the beginning. It may change in form or direction, but its momentum is as permanent as segregation.

The most important effect of the "sit-ins" may not be the number of lunch-counters that are desegregated -- so far there have been very few -- but the bringing home to the white people of the South an awareness of the ability and determination of the Negroes themselves to achieve equal rights. This determination is the sine qua non for civil rights progress in the South. Once Negroes refuse to acquiesce in segregation -- to play the old game -- the only way segregation can be maintained is in effect through a police state. In a modern urban South, this is not a tolerable prospect, for it means sacrificing industry, prosperity, law and order, and social progress on every other front.

A second factor working towards civil rights progress in the South is a willingness on a large part of the white community to make concessions to the inevitable and to come to terms with the new aspirations of the Negroes, and the mandates they have won in the courts. In this respect the Solid South abruptly falls apart. The severest challenge of the die-hard segregationists is not coming exclusively from Negroes and the Federal courts; it is also coming from fellow whites who want to keep the public school system and the business economy intact.

Another factor is the national will. Since Negroes are a minority in the South and in the country as a whole, the rapidity and the extent of their achievement of equal rights depend on the support they get from the Federal government and other national institutions.

But it appears to me that there is a chronic tendency to underestimate the skill and tenacity of traditional Southern leadership. Maybe I am over-sensitive, but I have a fear that a bored and disgusted nation will leave the South to handle the race problem in its own way -- as it did once before. De facto segregation in housing, schools and employment in the North and West give added grounds for uneasiness. To the extent that Southerners can find evidence to support the argument that the rest of the Nation is insincere or hypocritical in its allegiance to civil rights, to that extent they can deny the inevitability, and even the rightness, of desegregation.

New Law and Old Traditions -- Lawrence E. Walsh

I suggest that supporters of civil rights should put aside their differences and unite in support of a bill which would assure that Negroes actually get to vote. The Administration's voting referee proposal holds out the most substantial and realistic hope of achieving this objective.

In the South today only one-quarter of the nearly five million Negroes of voting age are registered voters. To keep Negroes from the polls there has been resort to outright intimidation, economic pressure, misuse of literacy tests, and other petty harassments. Ordinarily, we do not have to compel general compliance with the law, but here we are confronted with a tradition where community pressure toward non-compliance is strong. It is a vain hope to try to get local voluntary compliance. There must be an expansion of Federal power in this area.

Proposed Procedures

Under the Administration proposal, a voting case would be instituted by the Attorney General, and upon a finding by the court of a "pattern or practice" of racial discrimination the court would be authorized to appoint a voting referee to receive voting applications from Negro voters and to determine in ex parte proceedings whether such applicants have been denied the right to register and whether they are qualified under State law to vote. The referee would then report his findings to the court for review under procedures which would give all parties notice and an opportunity to file exceptions. If the exceptions are overruled, the court would then enter a decree listing all persons entitled to vote. To insure effective compliance, the referee would have the authority to follow up the registration at the polls to make sure that the registrant is permitted to vote and have his vote counted. Recalcitrant election officials would be subject to contempt proceedings.

By keeping the whole election process in the Federal courts -- from registration to voting and counting the votes -- the Administration proposal will more effectively guarantee that the Negro will get to vote and have his vote counted, than either the voting rights proposal suggested by the Civil Rights Commission or the proposal recommended by Senator Thomas C. Hennings, which by taking the matter out of the courts and relying respectively on presidentially-appointed registrars or enrollment officers leave an unbridgeable gap between registration and voting.

Since the contempt power of the courts is not available under either of these plans, they give no assurance that the Negro registrant will actually be able to vote and have his vote counted by State officials. Consequently, they lack the advantages of the Administration's plan.

The Congressional Facts of Life -- Representative James Roosevelt

The five-point civil rights bill passed by the House is a step in the right direction -- even though it leaves many areas untouched -- for example, school desegregation and the poll tax. What was significant to me in the House action was the evident lessening of the hard-core opposition to civil rights legislation. For the first time, Congressmen opposed to such legislation came to me and said, "In four or five years I'll be able to vote with you." This is encouraging for the future, if not for the present; and it indicates that there is a growing awakening to the moral issues involved.

The effectiveness of the voting referee proposal will depend on the zeal with which the Justice Department backs up the law. There is going to be a vast number of voters who -- unless encouragement is given them -- will be reluctant to go to court to enforce their voting rights. The Administration will have to give its full support to the law to encourage an intimidated Negro population to take advantage of the new law and to make sure that they can do so without risking harm to themselves or their families. I fervently hope that such leadership will be forthcoming, because without vigorous enforcement, the new law will be an empty promise.

Discussion

Arnold Aronson, consultant, opened the discussion by saying that the limitations of the civil rights bill merely reflect the fact that not enough members of Congress are basically committed to civil rights, and that civil rights groups have not impressed them sufficiently with their own concern and determination on this issue. As a result, even the Administration's moderate seven-item package was whittled away in the legislative process. In sharp contrast are the Southern members who have the courage of their convictions and are willing to fight for them, and who are not concerned about the niceties of congressional procedures or appeals to party loyalty. Until supporters of civil rights show the same determination, said Aronson, the appearance of civil rights will have to be accepted for the reality.

Congressman Roosevelt questioned the wisdom of the provision requiring a Negro applicant, after there has been a finding by the court of a pattern or practice of discrimination, to go back to the State official to try to register and be turned down again before he can go to the referee. Every time a Negro has to go to the local registrar, his life becomes a burden for him, Roosevelt said.

Judge Walsh replied that the ultimate objective of the bill is not to have two types of registrar, but to have State registrars treat Negroes the same as white voters. The Administration's bill, he added, creates procedures which will increase the likelihood that State registrars will comply with the law.

Every time a State official turns down a Negro applicant, that information will go to the Federal judge who enjoined him from rejecting voters because of their race. This will deter future discrimination by the registrar and encourage compliance with the law. The registrar will know that he will only be inviting contempt proceedings if he refuses to register Negro voting applicants.

From the floor, it was pointed out that when Herbert Brownell was Attorney General, the Administration supported legislation (the so-called Part III) to give the Attorney General the same authority to bring civil injunction suits to enforce civil rights generally, including the right to desegregated schooling, which he now has with respect to voting rights.

"Why," it was asked, "did the Administration abandon its support of this provision, which many people, like Representative Roosevelt, feel is an essential part of a meaningful civil rights bill, and leave to individual plaintiffs the task of bringing about compliance with the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision?"

Judge Walsh replied that in deciding to drop Part III, the Administration was influenced by the fact that massive resistance had been abandoned in Virginia without the need for any Federal intervention. The change in Virginia's attitude, he felt, reflects a growing realization in the South that an accommodation must ultimately be made to the Supreme Court decision. Secondly, it was thought that bringing in the Federal government would only arouse resistance and antagonism in a community and might prejudice, rather than help, achievement of a reasonable solution. Finally, the Administration felt that more important than Part III at this time was legislation to make it a crime for anyone to use force or threats of force to interfere with any Federal court order in school desegregation cases, and legislation to extend Federal financial and technical assistance to school districts that may be faced with serious financial and education problems in desegregating their school systems.

There was criticism from the audience of the view that individuals should be compelled to go to private groups to enforce their constitutional rights. The Federal government, a conferee said, has an obligation to help secure those rights; it should not throw the whole burden on the individual and private organizations.

In answer to another question, Judge Walsh said that the Attorney General has indicated that where an attempt is made to keep Negro pupils from having legal representation, there may be a need for Part III.

THE PROMISE OF AMERICAN LIFE, 1960

Chairman : Herman Edelsberg, Director of the Washington Office of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, and Chairman of the Clearing House

Speakers : Emmet J. Hughes, Chief of Foreign Correspondents, TIME-LIFE
The Hon. Richard Bolling, Representative from Missouri

Reporters : Mrs. Paul Blanshard, Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, and Eva Sofer, National Jewish Welfare Board

Mr. Edelsberg, in his opening remarks, quoted President Truman's proposition that, "We shall not . . . finally achieve the ideals for which this Nation was founded so long as any American suffers discrimination as a result of his race, or religion, or color, or the land of origin of his forefathers."

"A majority of the Congress," he continued, "has accepted the proposition that the key civil rights that calls for enforcement today is the right to vote. From it, we are told, other rights and privileges will flower. But the more meaningful fact is that there is no one paramount civil right; all the civil rights are bound up one with another. If the right to vote is secured but is not buttressed by equal opportunity in employment, in education, and in housing, the value of that right will be debased by apathy, ignorance and apparent futility. We must recognize that laws which strengthen the right to vote without doing anything about the pervasive threat of physical intimidation and economic retaliation will not, in a great number of Southern counties, effectively enfranchise Negro citizens."

Our National Purpose -- Emmet J. Hughes

The question can be put most simply: what time is it? What time is it in an historical sense? For I suggest that all of us -- pessimists and optimists, realists and idealists, Democrats and Republicans -- can surely agree on one proposition: if we do not know the hour and the day, we can scarcely know the promise, or the peril, of the moment in which we live, or -- let it be added -- the moment in which we, as a nation, could die.

The time, then, seems marked by three things -- distinct but related. It is, in the broadest and grandest sense, the Age of Explosion. It is also the End of an Era. It is -- most specifically -- a Moment of Peril, perhaps the moment of peril in the life of America.

The Age of Explosion: The sounds and the portents of this are all around us. Plainest of all are the exploding wonders of science. But more than bombs, of course, are exploding: the very lives of almost all nations and empires, nearly all peoples on the earth, are enduring earth-shaking change. All the years since World War II have come to seem almost mere hours in the death-day of old empires -- as 25 new nations have come to birth. Africa echoes with a sustained drum-beat of change -- as 220 million people, some 90% of them unable to read or to write, have moved massively toward rule of their own destinies. Across Latin America, the sweep of revolution has toppled seven dictatorships in just the years since 1955.

And in this Age of Explosion, of course, the revolution in political wills is matched, in headlong force, by the revolution in economic wants. While the population of the world itself explodes in historic number, peoples who strive to be free also -- not illogically -- crave to be fed. But the appetite of course is for much more than food alone. Never in the history of man has the huge army of the world's desires been mobilized to storm such dizzy heights -- an Age of Explosion -- plainly and profoundly. We stand at the End of an Era.

Now, upon the American scene, there appear both new facts and new awareness of them. They mark 1960 -- in the political arena -- as something more than another presidential election year, and -- in the economic arena -- something more than the advent of the promised boom of the new decade. Thus: in the very vocabulary of public discussion, the word "negotiation," as applied to Soviet-American relations, suddenly has no longer seemed to carry an ugly or shameful sound. Thus: in the plain measure of sheer military strength, America has fallen toward a place of secondary power.

Thus: in the equally plain measure of economic power and productivity, America meets ever sharper challenge from the ever growing force of the Soviet economy -- The End of an Era, indeed; and dramatically.

"Long Parade of Illusions"

What is notable about these facts of the immediate past and the immediate future? It is the clear proof that our military lag may be matched or excelled by a historic kind of mental lapse; a lapse and failure of our national capacity to see the world as it is, much less lead or inspire it.

This lapse can be measured by the long parade of our illusions:

- The illusion that somehow both war and negotiation with the Soviet Union could and should be equally avoided.

- The illusion that serious policy was defined by the demand for "sincerity" from an antagonist profoundly and utterly sincere in his hostility.

- The illusion that "liberation" was a rational diplomatic purpose rather than a vulgar political slogan.

- The illusion that Soviet Communism boasted few resources or ingenuities of its own beyond the capacity to foster treason or to steal the military secrets born of a genius that -- by mystic and benign decree of history -- could only be American.

- The illusion that if enough weak and troubled and divided nations affix their signatures to a common treaty some magic alchemy will make the alliance strong.

- The illusion that Soviet Communism was not only an historic menace but also the prodigiously ingenious and inexhaustible creator of all troubles on earth, so that it could be largely forgotten that -- even if Soviet Communism were suddenly and marvelously to vanish utterly -- this fantastic event would indeed have little if any effect upon such matters as: the boundaries of Israel or the boundaries of Kashmir, the allegiance of Algeria or the allegiance of Silesia, the stability of the Spanish dictatorship or the durability of the French Constitution, food for India or markets for Japan, race riots in the Congo or food riots in Calcutta -- the power of Germany -- the size of Russia -- the enigma of China -- or the astigmatism of America.

"The Heart of the Matter"

This is the heart -- the faltering heart -- of the matter. For the rule of democracy demands the sovereignty of truth. This is the law of reason that must govern the conversation of free men. And without true respect for reason, there can be no true discourse, no great decision.

Truth means -- We need serious and honest debate on future policy toward Communist China.

Truth means -- The whole decade of the 1950's has passed without any great debate between Republicans and Democrats on the basic premises or purposes of American foreign policy.

Truth means -- We can only be dismayed and disheartened when our government -- at one and the same time -- pays unprecedented homage and deference to the dictatorship of General Franco in Spain, and professes to be both astonished and concerned by the anti-American passions of revolutionary forces surging through Latin America.

Truth means -- We cannot let our political rhetoric fill the air with such a kind of moralizing as only clouds our politics and confuses our morals. It is time to say to all orators: Please plainly tell us what you think is right, what you think is necessary, and what you think is expedient -- and stop trying to pretend that all three are the same thing.

Truth means -- It is time for Democrats to cease congratulating themselves upon the vagaries and the errors of foreign policy as designed and practiced by their adversaries.

We must -- as a nation and in our nation -- demonstrate an understanding and appreciation of politics as the arena of truly historic decision. This means -- in world affairs -- a keen and profound awareness that not all the guns in the world, nor all the world's food, automatically assure any people's devotion to freedom, for the choosing of freedom is a political act.

Finally, there is the truth that lies beneath all other truths: it is not enough, as a nation, to seem -- it is necessary to be.

Our policies and our politics will command respect in the world only as they command respect at home -- no more, no sooner.

We shall find American diplomacy persuasive in the world when America's own political debate seriously -- and not frivolously -- argues the great matters before us and the world.

The creators of America were, as they had to be for their chosen enterprise, intelligent men. They read widely. They studied thoughtfully. They used words carefully. They reasoned conscientiously. They wrote articulately. They debated earnestly. They respected what they used -- their intelligence. They looked at the world as it was -- not as they wished it to be. They neither feared knowledge -- nor acknowledged fear. And they loved America, the supreme act and creation of their intelligence.

No less an act, and only a like creation, can hold true promise of guarding what they gave.

Our International Image -- The Hon. Richard Bolling

What is wrong with the American people? Somehow or other, we have done what we accuse the doctors and lawyers of doing -- we have overspecialized.

In Congress, we have not considered one piece of legislation that did not represent a conflict of special interests. We have forgotten that each good cause is each other good cause's brother. We have specialized so much we have injured other good causes.

An inadequate piece of civil rights legislation was passed today. (In the eleven years I have served in the Congress only one adequate bill has been passed.) If there had been a secret ballot it would have been defeated. There are no more than 150 people in the House who care about civil rights. We passed the legislation because of a reasonably skillful use of the political process. If in all these years we had been functioning adequately, we would now have a majority in the Congress in favor of civil rights legislation.

What is wrong with a country which is capable of promoting and passing in Congress legislation for ten billions of dollars to build roads when we can't pass legislation to build schools? What is wrong with a country which is incapable of even facing up to the problems of health? What is wrong with a country incapable of looking at the rotten core of every urban area and doing something about it? What is wrong with a citizenry disinterested in foreign policy debates? What is wrong with a country which for the last ten years has seen a relaxed and hopeless attitude in our institutions of higher education? What is wrong with a country that has not one, single, effective, organized radical movement, -- a country which is still living on the ideals the New Deal borrowed from the Progressives and the Bull Moosers? What is wrong with a country that does not even provide a questioning of institutions that have not worked?

I have read Mr. Hughes' book, America the Vincible, and I suggest that perhaps it should be, America, the Tired, the Lazy, the Uninterested.

"The Boil . . . and the Body"

We are living in a sea of clichés that completely surrounds us, and in it we have lost the critical faculty. We are guilty of not looking for new ideas. We have failed to demonstrate to ourselves, first, and to the world, second, that we really believe the professions we make with regard to the worth of man.

In the field of civil rights we should broaden our objectives. We must realize the welfare of each individual in this country is an extremely complex thing. The question is not whether we can slowly make progress in the border and five States of the South. The South is the boil; the U. S. of America is the body. Discrimination does not pertain finally and solely to the Negro. We must come up with better and more skillful approaches.

We need a domestic policy of growth and vitality. The people of the world are looking to the United States and they see nothing new -- nothing new since the New Deal and TVA, -- which was a break-through of the old patterns and the old clichés. We need a new method of accomplishing better what we did not do so well in the past. Recognizing our failures, perhaps we can free ourselves of all the old patterns of mind and move forward with a little more courage and a willingness to be different.

We must recognize that all causes are related. There is no way to take out of the fabric of the American body politic one strand or an inch of strands. They are all linked together to make the whole piece of cloth.

The trouble with us liberals -- Republicans or Democrats -- is that we haven't got a fresh idea. Ideas make the difference in politics and in all life. I do not believe any single person, here or anywhere, can say we have had a fresh approach since 1938. Now that we recognize the moment of peril, I hope we will begin to think.

OBSCENITY AND CENSORSHIP

The Issues -- George Soll

Unfortunately, there is relatively little clear writing or thinking on the questions of obscenity vs. censorship. This is mainly due to lack of clear definitions. "Obscene materials" and "smut" are terms frequently used, but they are much too broad and vague to form a satisfactory basis for discussion and analysis. Roughly speaking, there are two distinct types of material referred to under these categories, and it is important to realize this and to specify which types are under consideration. They are:

1) "Hard-core pornography," which is designed solely to titillate, has no literary or artistic purpose and is usually not defended when prosecuted. Examples: the traditional French postcards, and stag movies.

2) "Materials with sexual themes." This breaks down into two sub-categories, but they have in common a literary or artistic purpose and are almost always defended by the publisher when prosecuted -- and usually successfully. The sub-categories are:

a) "Realistic writing," which contains occasional explicit descriptions of sexual episodes; example, Lady Chatterly's Lover.

b) "Immoral themes" which are not explicit in description but have a general theme that may be considered by many people to be immoral. Examples would be the book Lolita, and the movie version of Lady Chatterly's Lover.

What are the basic questions involved in censorship of these types of material? It must be assumed at the outset that in addition to being protected by the Constitution, free speech has a prime social value, and therefore should not lightly be subject to censorship. I myself believe that there are times when censorship is permissible -- for instance, in the case of information related to military security.

The most frequently heard arguments for censorship of materials dealing with sex are: 1) These materials lead to anti-social action -- violation of laws relating to sexual behavior, especially among the young. 2) They result in "harmful thoughts," and thus lower community moral standards. 3) They are offensive, shocking and embarrassing.

I shan't attempt to deal with these arguments in detail, but I do say that about the first -- anti-social action -- there is little or no objective evidence to support this argument. On the second, the question arises as to why the official or unofficial censors who deal with these materials in wholesale lots are not corrupted. And concerning the third, it is probably true that for plays, motion pictures and television, which are experiences shared by a group, there is embarrassment not present when an individual reads the same material.

When it comes to children and youth, other issues are raised. If special protection is to be extended here, to what extent should the government do this, and what responsibility is to be left to the parents? If there is any type of prior review or pre-censorship to protect young people, won't this also prevent authors from presenting their work to adult audiences? Finally, who will be the censors?

Still another question relates to the role of private groups. We must freely admit that such groups have a right to be concerned, and also the right to present their viewpoints to their own members and to the public at large. But other questions arise when "boycott" tactics are used -- that is, economic pressures on distributors not to sell anyone materials to which these groups object. Entirely aside from the legality or illegality of such actions, it would seem that efforts by one group to dictate what materials can be made available to the public at large will lead to communal conflict and strife.

The Protection of Society -- Stephen M. D. Burns

What is the purpose of law? The protection of society. All of our States have laws prohibiting the sale of obscenity. There are also 17 Federal statutes and many international agreements in the same field.

The Supreme Court's Roth decision in 1958 established that obscenity is not protected by the First Amendment, and provided a definition of obscenity. The recent Smith case (1960) added to that definition the requirement that, in order to be prosecuted for distributing obscenity, the defendant must be shown to have known that the material was obscene.

The Citizens for Decent Literature believe that obscenity laws should be enforced -- and that those who violate these laws should be vigorously prosecuted.

Further, the Committee believes that these laws and ordinances on the State and local level should make the distribution of obscenity a misdemeanor rather than a felony. The penalties for misdemeanors are a sufficient deterrent, and prosecution can be more prompt, and judge and jury more reflective of the community sentiment in the area affected, than is the case when the crime is a felony.

A Psychiatrist Looks at the Problem -- Dr. Benjamin Karpman

Discussion of obscenity and censorship must be related to other problems. From the legal viewpoint, obscenity boils down most often to the treatment of sex in an "obscene manner." In a broader sense, obscenity is dirt and sex mixed together, wholly designed to arouse sexual (and dirty) thoughts, excitations, and apparently acts--in legal language, appeal to the prurient interest, without any redeeming ideas of "social importance."

Obscenity, in a general sense, brings in the topic of coprophilia of which, as a neurosis, it is a part. Coprophilia represents the obsessive interest in excretory products and processes, leading to an interest in filth in general. Dirt and sex are commonly associated. Pornography expresses this type of interest. Pornophilia, which is an obsessive or excessive interest in pornographic materials, is only one aspect of coprophilia.

It is my view that people do not develop these neuroses because they chance to read something on the subject, but because of a prior neurotic predisposition in this area. An individual does not become an obscene letter writer because he happens to read here and there some material of obscene content. On the contrary, such interest has its origins in early childhood, and appears later as a neurosis.

Without the proper neurotic soil, there can be no spread of obscene materials and no harm. Obscenity can make no appeal, exert no influence, nor make "converts," except in cases of individuals whose psychological make-up has the necessary specific conditioning.

The law should look upon obscene material as it does on other neurotic manifestations. It is the product of unconscious mentation. Any activity that results from it is properly viewed as a product of mental disease or defect, and should be treated psychiatrically.

Those who create materia pornographica belong to the same neurotic group. There are two sides to the coin -- the desire to make and exhibit obscenity, and the reverse, to look at it.

Furthermore, such interest in obscenity may take another direction -- it may be covered up by a reaction formation. The interest may be denied by bitter opposition to all forms of obscenity -- the same as condemnation and attack against homosexuals can cover up latent or unconscious homosexuality. Crusading against obscenity has an unconscious interest at its base.

Where Do We Draw the Line? -- Dan Lacy

The title of my remarks does not relate to where any line should be drawn, so far as individual choice is concerned, but rather to where a line can be drawn beyond which the power of the State can be used to suppress communication. Where the line is drawn between lawful expression and unlawful expression in this field is possibly less important than how it is drawn, and by whom. The basic requirement is for a legal procedure. This means that there can be no place for private boycotts; no use of banned lists of titles and threats of prosecution by individual public officials like police chiefs and district attorneys; no room for private censorship through industry codes. The determination must be made by a court, with opportunity for appeal to the higher courts.

It is worth while to review here the guide lines that the Supreme Court has laid down in the Roth case, the Smith case, and various other cases acted upon without written opinions subsequent to the Roth case. The Roth decision did, indeed, lay down the proposition that obscenity is not protected by the First Amendment so far as Federal legislation is concerned. But it also made clear that persons accused of distributing alleged obscenity had the right to a court determination as to whether the materials were in fact obscene. The definition of obscenity in the Roth case embraces these factors: 1) An appeal to prurient interest beyond the limits of current community standards, and 2) containing no redeeming social value. Subsequent decisions have indicated that what the Court had in mind was what Mr. Soll has defined as "hard-core pornography." The Smith case added the procedural requirement that to be convicted for distributing obscenity, a dealer must have knowledge of the nature of the material he was distributing.

The requirements that there must be a court decision on obscenity are often not very pleasing to those who urge censorship, who tend to regard the courts as being "too liberal" and too slow. On occasion these people are not beyond trying to bring public pressure on the judiciary, as in the recent case in Ohio in which a campaign was organized to write letters to a judge to influence his opinion in a pending case. It is essential that these decisions be left in the hands of an independent judiciary, because experience has uniformly shown that where censors have administrative powers they are almost always abused, and censorship is extended from hard-core pornography to other kinds of publications as well. For example, when the Detroit Police Department, through pressure on local dealers, exerted complete control over the distribution of paperbound books, the writings of many distinguished American novelists could not be sold in that city in paperback form.

Discussion

Mrs. Raebeck, one of the consultants, said that the experience of her own organization -- the National Council of Jewish Women -- has been that local crusades to ban obscenity almost always tend to expand to other materials to which some kind of objection is raised. The Council, therefore, places a good deal of emphasis not on banning objectionable material, but on making good reading matter more widely available, especially to young people, through better school and public library services.

Another comment from the floor underlined the importance of the positive approach, stressing that convenient access to good literature is of crucial importance to children and young people, and that many millions of them have little or no access to good books through adequate school and public libraries.

LAW ENFORCEMENT AND CIVIL LIBERTIES: ARE THE COURTS SHACKLING THE POLICE?

The Issues -- Alan Barth

The threat to civil liberties in the United States has shifted away from a neurotic anxiety over the threat of Communist danger, to a neurotic anxiety over lawless elements. In both cases, we have countenanced serious incursions of our rights.

The most alarming aspect is the growing indifference of the public to police trespasses and the inclination to call Constitutional protections mere "legal technicalities."

The basic issue is whether or not the lawless elements in our communities can be controlled while the Constitutional rights both of the citizens and of the suspects are protected. It is apparent now that Constitutional rights are not being protected; the evidence lies in the shocking statistics of thousands of police arrests on "suspicion" or for "investigation," even though there is no probable cause on which to base an arrest.

Police Work and the Bill of Rights -- Oliver Gasch

The provisions of the Bill of Rights are limitations upon the power of the Federal Government, but they do not serve as a restriction applicable to State cases. For this reason, and because of the supervisory power of the Supreme Court over the Federal Courts, law enforcement in the District of Columbia, a Federal jurisdiction, is confronted with unique difficulties and unique responsibilities.

Because of this, I thought it would be of interest to you to know what progress is being made towards meeting these challenges.

Law enforcement, generally, is no stronger than the police force on which the prosecutor must depend. Roughly 85% of our criminal cases are cases from the Police Department. Many of these involve substantial questions in the field of search and seizure, as well as in the field of arrest and arraignment.

Since the Mallory decision -- requiring that arrested persons be immediately taken to a magistrate to be informed of their rights -- was handed down by the Supreme Court about three years ago, the United States Attorney's office in Washington has instituted a series of lectures for all policemen, instructing them what they may, or may not, do in the investigation of a crime. These lectures are based on questions which came from the policemen themselves -- questions that broke down into three groups: searches and seizures with warrants, searches and seizures incident to lawful arrests, and emergency situations.

Although "Mallory" questions, that is to say confessions or admissions, are of controlling importance in probably less than 5% of our criminal prosecutions, our police make extensive investigations prior to arrest of suspects. It has been emphasized to the force that they may arrest only on probable cause and that persons arrested should be given a preliminary hearing without unnecessary delay.

Our policemen have benefited by these lectures. Searches and seizures are now bottomed upon a search warrant. Police work generally is more thorough and exact, and reliance upon confessions has been minimized. It must be mentioned, however, that in some instances we have been unable to go forward with cases in which we felt that we were largely dependent upon a confession, and the confession was inadmissible under the Mallory doctrine. Pleas to lesser offenses have been accepted; recovery of stolen property has been hampered; and from the police standpoint, their ability to clear through interrogation other offenses in which the individual was believed involved has been reduced.

"That Justice Shall Be Done"

Recent statistics released by the FBI contain the alarming indication that serious crime in the District has risen about 21.7% during the past year. Without careful analysis, I cannot say whether this rise in crime is to any degree attributable to the strict character of our decisional law. Other factors, such as the reduced number of boys' clubs and the understaffed situation of our Juvenile Court, are certainly present. It is too speculative to say that more crimes are committed because of the evidentiary difficulties confronting law officers.

As a matter of fact, before the Mallory decision the District of Columbia Police Department had an outstandingly high average crime solution rate -- and they still have it. This is a great tribute to Chief Murray and his men.

We must remember a statement of the Supreme Court some years ago in the Berger case: "The interest of the United States Attorney in a criminal prosecution is not that he shall win a case but that justice shall be done. As such he is in a particular and very definite sense the servant of the law, the two-fold aim of which is that guilt shall not escape nor innocence suffer."

We must bear in mind, too, that civil rights thrive only where there is effective and intelligent law enforcement.

Compelled and Coerced Confessions -- Myron G. Ehrlich

What is the difference between a confession that is compelled and one that is coerced? A compelled confession is one that is obtained by force. Today we do not compel a suspect to confess by beating him; instead we keep him in custody for a week or ten days and we browbeat him.

It took 160 years for the Supreme Court to do something about compelled confessions in State courts. A confession, to be admissible in evidence against a person, must have been made freely and voluntarily. In the District of Columbia there are two kinds of confessions that are not admissible: those that are compelled or coerced -- involuntary; and even voluntary confessions if the accused has not been taken before a magistrate.

But confessions make convictions easier -- I've never seen a jury ignore one. The police have a right to interrogate, a right to question suspects. But -- with certain exceptions -- they are required, under the Fourth Amendment, to show "probable cause" or reasonable grounds for belief that a person is involved in a crime before they make an arrest or search. There is no exact definition of "probable cause." In a recent murder case, the police arrested 40 suspects for questioning. They later released 36 of them. It seems apparent that they did not have any probable cause to make any of those initial arrests.

After 35 years of practice in criminal law, I have come to believe that the police practice of arresting individuals in order to interrogate them, without probable cause and without taking them before a magistrate to be informed of their rights, is the worst example of man's inhumanity to man.

The Case for the Accused -- Robert B. McKay

The United States Supreme Court is no stranger to criticism. Ever since 1789 the Court's important decisions have frequently met with at least adverse, and often vituperative, rejoinder.

Today some of the sharpest jabs come from other judges, from lawyers, from law professors and from Federal and State officials charged with the detection, prosecution and conviction of criminals. I propose to discuss primarily the serious charges of police officers and prosecuting attorneys who assert that the rulings of the Supreme Court handcuff police while allowing criminals too great license to ply their unlawful trade.

Now, it must be remembered that the police and prosecutors are necessarily partisan advocates. It must always seem easier to them to seek evidence in the most direct ways, including arrest and search without warrant, indefinite periods of detention for questioning without counsel, and even the use of coercive methods to "encourage" a suspect to "volunteer" details of his participation in crime.

Police officers have argued that criminals would operate without restraint if these "essential" tools were denied them. I suggest that this argument does not disqualify others from disagreeing as to the ultimate solution. The issue here is not exclusively one of efficiency in detection and punishment, or even prevention, of crime. Society recognizes larger values as well. In our case these are matters of Constitutional status, ever subject to watchful definition and redefinition by the courts.

The problem is that redefinition seems to mean a constant enlargement of the protection of individual liberties, and the police may reasonably ask how it is that the Constitution's guarantees do not stay the same, but are always increasing -- and at the expense of law and order?

The answer is that many of the Bill of Rights' provisions do not provide definite answers for all time; on some issues there can be no single solution that is forever the correct one. So questions before the Court typically involve judgment, not only on the facts of the case, but also with regard to the general needs of society -- both law enforcement and individual liberty.

Secondly, in limiting the powers of the government, the Bill of Rights lays out absolute terms, and the Court holds that these are the announced rules within which police and prosecutors must operate in order that the higher values be preserved. And it is interesting that, although more rigorous standards are imposed upon Federal officials than on their State counterparts, nobody argues that State law enforcement is more effective than Federal. Indeed, I suggest that the cumulative force of this body of rules provides a testament to the willingness of the American democracy to stand in performance behind the principles which it proclaims to the world.

Six "Commandments"

Like the Ten Commandments of the Old Testament, the Bill of Rights expresses basic law in absolute terms. Its quality is imperative. It can be outlined as:

I. Thou shalt not invade the privacy of any man's mind, heart, or conscience. (This applies to the police context of the present discussion, and also is relevant whenever officials overemphasize the State's legitimate interest in peace and order to deny the right of assembly or other activities of dissident political or religious groups.)

II. Thou shalt not, except with warrant issued upon reasonable cause, invade the privacy of any man's home or person.

III. Thou shalt not unduly detain any man, except briefly and in necessity, without the making of formal charges against him.

IV. Thou shalt not, during the proper detention of any man, extract from him by coercive means any evidence to be used against him.

V. Thou shalt not deny to any man process of the law that is full and fair.

VI. Thou shalt not put upon any man excessive bail, excessive fines, or cruel and unusual punishment.

The motivation for all these guarantees is that of assuring a fair balance between the conceded police necessities of the State and the equally compelling needs to preserve human dignity and integrity.

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House

. . . is a voluntary association of independent national organizations for the promotion of knowledge and the exchange of factual information, educational materials, opinions and ideas in the fields of civil liberties, civil rights, intellectual freedom and other human rights.

. . . is limited both in its continuing program and its annual conferences to the promotion of education and the exchange of information in these fields. It is in no sense an action organization, and is prohibited by its constitution from adopting positions or making policy statements on any issues.

. . . aims in its Conferences on Civil Liberties to bring together representatives of its associated groups and other invited agencies for free, full and informed inter-organizational discussions and analysis of current issues, and for consideration of ways by which they may help to strengthen and preserve our constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms.

Mr. Harold C. Fleming,
Southern Regional Council,
63 Auburn Ave., N. E.,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Harold:

This brings you my very sincerest thanks for coming up to our conference, and for the outstanding talk you gave for us.

Did you have a chance to see the Washington Post for the next morning? Whether you did or not, I'm sending you this clipping of Elsie Carper's piece; I think she showed excellent judgment in the way she pegged it to your talk.

I see by the reports on the White House Youth Conference that you've been sick; whatever may have ailed you, I do hope that you're all over it and bright-eyed and bushy-tailed again.

And I hope that the next time our paths cross, we'll have at least a few minutes for decent conversation; I surely didn't get to trade any talk with you at the conference, and I wish I could have.

Thanks again; get well, and stay well.

Yours,

Mary Alice

Mary Alice Baldinger.

Arnold Feldman, American Veterans Committee; William Taylor, Americans for Democratic Action; Mrs. Josephine H. Kyles, A.M.E. Zion Church; John W. Edelman, Textile Workers Union of America; AFL-CIO; Robert W. Frase, American Book Publishers Council; Belva Simmons, Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights; Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO; George Jay Joseph, Temple Sinai Social Action Committee; Alan Barth; Mary Alice Baldinger for the office.

July Meeting: Next meeting of the Clearing House will be held in the Community Room on Wednesday, July 6, 2 to 4 o'clock.

Report of the Nominating Committee for 1960-61: Edward Snyder of the Friends Committee on National Legislation submitted the report of the 1960-61 Nominating Committee, which is composed of himself as chairman, Herman Edelsberg, Martha Mills, League of Women Voters; J. Francis Pohlhaus, NAACP; and Olinda Roettger, Lutheran Church - Missouri Synod.

A copy of the committee's proposed slate is attached.

Mr. Snyder noted that the slate will be open for additional nominations from associated organizations through July 15; that such nominations, under the constitution, must be approved by the Nominating Committee before being placed on the ballot; and that election will take place by mail ballot in August. He expressed the appreciation of the Clearing House to those officers who, since they have served for three consecutive years, were not eligible for re-nomination -- the chairman; Dr. Robert Van Deusen of the National Lutheran Council; Miss Virginia Kinnaird of the NEA Defense Commission; and Miss Julia Thompson of the American Nurses Association.

Memento to Mr. Edelsberg: Alan Barth, speaking in behalf of the Clearing House and the Administrative Committee, presented Mr. Edelsberg with an engraved gavel as a token of appreciation of his service to the organization. He noted that Mr. Edelsberg had been active in the Clearing House ever since its founding, as a member of the Administrative Committee, as treasurer, as a vice chairman, and for more than three years as chairman, since he first assumed that office to complete the unexpired term of the late Dr. Earl Adams.

Current Issues: Miss Elsie Carper, Washington POST reporter who has covered desegregation developments throughout the South for the past several years, presented "A Reporter's Views of the Sit-Ins."

Lawrence Speiser of the American Civil Liberties Union spoke on "A New Look at the Un-American Activities Committee."

William Taylor of Americans for Democratic Action discussed "Politics, Free Speech and Television."

These reports will be summarized in the next issue of the Civil Liberties Bulletin.

Current Materials: On request, the office will send out its few remaining copies of material distributed at the meeting -- Publications of the American Jewish Committee, a bibliography of reprints and original publications dealing with reducing discrimination, protecting democratic processes, overcoming bigotry and improving intergroup relations; and Legislation, the Law Today, and Wiretapping, a memorandum and analysis by the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights.

I see by today's TIMES that the SRC has got out a report on the state of business at stores that have desegregated their lunch counters; and very good it sounds.

Evidently I am no longer on the list that your reports go to.

I wish I were.

Could you fix it?

Thanks, and as always,

Sincerely yours,

I would like to have 50 copies for the July 6 Clearing House meeting, if possible.

Could you pass this note along to your staff person for such things, and ask him to ship them and bill me?

Thanks, and all the best.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Mary Alice:

While I am not deeply informed myself about the status and prospects of savings and loan associations serving Negroes, I can suggest several people who are.

AVC's interest in the idea was largely stimulated by Robert Thompson of the Atlanta Urban League, 239 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta. Bob's proposal grew out of the need for more and better financing of housing for Negroes in the South. He has told me, by the way, the Mississippi Association is not federalized and thus it would not be wise for anyone to deposit large sums there.

Probably the most knowledgeable person about Negro-owned-and-managed loan associations is J. B. Blayton, Sr., of the Mutual Federal Savings and Loan Association, 205 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta. The information and advice he could give should be most helpful.

Finally, Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, 297 Park Avenue, South, New York, is very much interested in these questions (he is a leader of the National Negro Business League.) My understanding is that Patterson is exploring ways in which associations might be established throughout the South in communities which have appreciable Negro populations. His efforts are the closest thing I know of to the community approach. I should think the interested agencies would certainly want to be in touch with him.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Mr. Harold Fleming,

Dear Harold:

The American Veterans Committee and other organizations are interested in and want to learn more about the savings and loan associations that are being established, as in Jackson, Miss., for the purpose, as I understand it, of making loans to Negroes who are being deprived of their community's normal credit sources.

AVC, for one, has had inquiries from members on the advisability of investing their funds in such associations. It would like to know more about them, their backgrounds and their possibilities, and whether it should support them; and if so, to what extent, and how?

Can you tell us about them; or if you can't, refer us to some other source of information?

Is there, do you know, any group or committee that is working on this? If not, would the establishment of such a committee be a helpful thing? I think you were at a Washington luncheon arranged by Oscar Lee of the National Council of Churches a few years ago. Out of it was supposed to come a committee that would work on helping Negroes against such economic reprisals.

I have written Dr. Lee to ask if that group still functions and whether it would have any information of the sort we want; but I'll be most grateful for your advice and opinion, too.

All the best,

Yours,

Mary Alice

Dear Harold:

Thanks indeed for your good helpful letter on possible sources of information about the savings and loan associations designed to provide housing credit aid to Negroes.

I have sent it along to Arnold Feldman of the AVC office here. He is going to make an investigation of the matter, beginning with your leads, and it ought to be productive; he is an intelligent fellow.

He'll make a report on it to the Clearing House in September, when it meets next, as well as to AVC. I'll see that whatever he comes up with is transmitted to you, too, since I'm sure you'll want to be informed.

Thanks again, and best regards,

Sincerely,

Dear Mary Alice:

We are happy to renew our subscription to the NCLCH; check for $25 is enclosed.

My only thought about the March meeting is that the new Administration's approaches, then existing and prospective, to civil rights and civil liberties will be much in the limelight. Some astute analysis and prescription by persons inside and outside the Administration would be most timely, I should think. One man I'd especially like to see on the program is Harris Wofford. I could perhaps suggest a few more if you decide on this subject and need more names.

My best regards.

Dear Friend:

This is to ~~let you know that the~~ National Civil Liberties Clearing House has scheduled March 23 and 24 as the dates for its 13th annual conference, which will be held at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton here.

The program committee is arranging a series of meetings which will reflect the outstanding civil liberties issues in today's life. The New Frontier in civil rights will be discussed from the standpoint of the courts, the Congress and the new Administration. Other sessions will concentrate on the problems of Church and State today and in the coming decade; on mass communications media in relation to the people's right to know; and on the protection of individual liberties in a world in transition.

As in the past, these issues will be treated by leading authorities in each field, from government as well as private organizations. Although the program is not yet fully completed, its range is suggested by those who are already scheduled to participate -- among them, Thurgood Marshall, director-counsel of the NAACP's Legal Defense and Educational Fund; Dore Schary, the noted author, playwright and producer; Douglas Cater, Washington editor of The Reporter and author of The Fourth Branch of Government; Wayne Cowan, managing editor of Christianity and Crisis; William Clancy, editor of the Church Peace Union's Worldview and former editor of Commonweal; and Rabbi Arthur Gilbert, director of the Department of Inter-Religious Cooperation of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Each session will be planned to permit maximum discussion and participation from the floor.

We expect that officers and leaders of well over 100 national organizations will attend the conference. The complete program and registration forms will be sent you within the next ten days. Meanwhile, we hope you will note the dates now, and plan to be with us.

Sincerely,

Is there -- as we all hope -- any chance of your being at the Clearing House conference, March 23 and 24?

You'll be getting a copy of the program early this week. (We're awfully late in getting it out, due to repeatedly stubbing our toes on the New Frontier.)

We will be having a small cocktail party before the dinner Thursday evening (March 23) in the Council Room in the Carlton's lower lobby and -- if you're going to be on hand -- we'd surely like to have you there.

Congratulations on your superb report on executive action, and all best wishes,

CIVIL RIGHTS COMMISSION URGES END TO FEDERAL SUBSIDIZING OF SEGREGATION

The Federal Government itself has been "a silent partner in the creation and perpetuation of separate colleges for Negroes," the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights said in releasing its latest report on "Equal Protection of the Laws in Public Higher Education" after a year-long State-by-State study of discrimination in education.

In land-grant colleges particularly, the Government has been heavily involved, not only because of its sponsorship of separate colleges in the second Morrill Act of 1890 and its financial support to such colleges ever since the first Morrill Act of 1862, but because it has allowed Southern legislatures to channel almost all Federal funds for specific programs in such institutions to the separate white colleges. Thus the Federal Government itself bears a heavy responsibility for the resulting discrimination against past and present generations of Negroes.

Other current programs of Federal aid to higher education have had a similar tendency to support discrimination and to maintain the disparity in education offered by some States to their citizens. The Commission analyzed five types of Federal programs as to their civil rights impact. In none of these programs is any consideration given by the Federal Government to the presence or absence of discrimination by the recipient institutions.

(1) The college housing program was examined as an example of general support to higher education, and was found to underwrite segregation.

(2) The programs of institutes to improve the quality of education at the secondary and college level, both those administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under the National Defense Education Act and those of the National Science Foundation, were found to have the effect of improving education for the white students while doing comparatively little for the segregated Negro in what the Commission terms the "resistant States" -- Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana.

(3) Similarly, it appears that in the basic research programs that the Government finances in colleges and universities for the benefit of the health and safety of the Nation as a whole, Negro students in the resistant States have no opportunity to participate except in two States where there have been limited break-throughs of desegregation (Florida and Louisiana).

(4) On the other hand, fellowships for advanced study under Federal sponsorship granted on individual merit, and (5) individual aid based on need (student loans) and Federal obligation (VA and war orphans' assistance) have all been found to be non-discriminatory at the Federal level.

Progress, But . . .

On the whole, in the past 20 years there has been great progress in eliminating denials of equal protection of the laws in public higher education. Discriminatory exclusion of students because of their religion or national origin appears at present to be no more than a minor problem.

Nevertheless, many public colleges and universities continue to provide themselves with information which could provide a basis for discrimination on these grounds. Thus, 50.5 per cent of the public institutions in the Southern States which supplied the Commission with copies of their 1959-1960 admission forms, and 19.5 per cent of those in the Northern and Western States, asked the religious preference or church membership of the applicant; and 14.4 per cent of the Southern colleges and 20.2 per cent of the Northern and Western ones asked the birthplace of the applicant's parents. The elimination of such inquiries would do much to eradicate the remaining suspicion of discrimination on these grounds.

Discrimination in higher public education, then, -- as at the public school level -- centers today on the American Negro, who represents more than a tenth of the total population; and the heart of the problem lies in the Southern States. However, the public colleges of the North and West are not free from suspicion of discrimination against Negroes. Some 20 per cent of the public institutions in those States inquire as to the race of an applicant or ask for a photograph, or both; and, if the requirement of a personal interview is counted as another possible method of determining the race of an applicant, the proportion providing themselves with this information increases to 33.2 per cent. And it appears that at least some of these institutions do in fact use this information for discriminatory purposes.

In the South, where a pattern of racially segregated colleges developed in the last quarter of the 19th century and complete separation -- although not equality -- of the races in public education was the rule until 1936 (when Donald Murray was admitted to the University of Maryland Law School upon an order of the Maryland Court of Appeals), the walls of segregation have been breached repeatedly, first by lawsuit and then by voluntary action. By the academic year 1959-60, 118 of the 162 public institutions formerly for white students only, in 13 of the 17 Southern States, had admitted Negro students at the graduate or undergraduate level or claimed to have adopted a non-discriminatory admission policy. Unfortunately, however, in many of these institutions compliance is not complete. In some, Negroes are admitted only to the graduate division; in others, they are admitted to the undergraduate division but only if they wish to enroll in a course of study not offered in the college for Negroes maintained by the State. Such limitations are clearly in violation of the 14th Amendment.

And up to the time of the early January court decision by which two Negro students were admitted to the University of Georgia, all 49 of the public higher educational institutions for white students in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina maintained strict exclusion policies, as do 37 institutions in Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, Texas and Virginia.

"Overt Official Resistance"

The most serious equal-protection problem in public higher education arises from overt official resistance to any desegregation. In almost all the Southern States, such resistance had initially to be overcome by means of lawsuits brought by individual Negroes seeking admission to particular institutions; but once a start was so compelled, some of the States proceeded voluntarily to open other formerly white public colleges to Negroes.

In other States, however, there has been no desegregation except as a result of litigation, and in still others none can be foreseen before some hardy and tenacious Negro has obtained from the courts a declaration of his rights.

The individual lawsuits upon which progress in desegregation has so largely depended are often long and burdensome affairs. The time that has elapsed in such cases between the date when the Negro plaintiff first sought admission to a white institution and the date when he obtained a court order finally upholding or denying his right to be admitted has been as long as nine years. So the Negro who seeks to enforce in court his right to the same education as is offered to white residents of his State may have to forego any education at all during all these months or years of motion and countermotion, hearing and rehearing, appeal and remand.

The civil right not to be denied admission to a public college or university on arbitrary grounds, such as race, is a personal and immediate constitutional right which loses its value if it cannot be enforced promptly; yet it appears that the realization of this right through judicial process is characterized by much deliberation and little speed.

In addition to the exhaustive process of litigation, the Commission has also found a variety of legislative and administrative measures designed to prevent any Negro from entering a public institution maintained for white students. These range from laws providing for the closing of desegregated colleges or cutting off their financial support, through the establishment of new admission requirements designed to exclude Negroes, to intimidation of teachers and students.

Self-Perpetuating Deprivations

The Commission, in examining the separate colleges maintained in the resistant States to compare the quality of education offered to the two races, found that educational opportunity for Negroes is not equal to that provided for whites when measured by such tangible criteria as number and location of colleges, financial support, type of program offered, degrees granted, or accreditation status of the public colleges. This applies not just at the college level, but in preparation for college as well. The public high schools of the resistant States, which are still entirely segregated by race, present a picture of deprivation varying in degree from a low of 2.6 per cent Negro high schools approved by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools as compared with 52.4 per cent white in Mississippi, to a high of 53.9 per cent Negro and 84.1 per cent white high schools so approved in Florida.

This inferior preparation of the Negro student in the segregated high schools of the South helps perpetuate the problem of segregation and discrimination at the college level. Proportionately fewer academically talented Negroes have the educational foundation required for succes in a first-rate college. The graduates of segregated and inferior high schools tend, therefore, in overwhelming numbers to attend segregated and generally inferior colleges.

So deprivation at one level leads to deprivation at another, and since the teachers for segregated Negro schools are, for the most part, trained in segregated colleges, these deprivations are self-perpetuating from generation to generation.

Similarly, the Commission found that educational deprivation is transmitted from the educationally, economically and culturally deprived parent to the child, and that lower goals and aspirations are transmitted from one deprived generation to the next.

The Commission's Recommendations

To summarize the Commission's findings as briefly as possible: it found that insofar as the Federal Government -- which is deeply involved financially in the higher education of its citizens -- disburses funds to publicly controlled colleges and universities that practice racial exclusion, it is supporting operations in violation of the Constitution. Further, since the Supreme Court has held that the Federal Government is prohibited by the Constitution from maintaining racially segregated educational institutions, it is not sound policy for the Government to subsidize the unconstitutional operations of others -- to do indirectly what it is not permitted to do directly.

The Commission's recommendations are: (1) that Federal funds for assistance to publicly controlled colleges and universities be disbursed only to institutions that do not discriminate on grounds of race, color, religion or national origin; (2) that Congress consider authorizing the use of three-judge courts "in cases presenting a substantial factual issue as to whether persons are being denied equal protection of the laws with respect to public education" in order to provide more expeditious determination of these cases; and (3) that when requested by a State, the Federal Government sponsor programs to assist public school teachers and "students of native talent and ability who are handicapped professionally or scholastically as a result of inferior educational opportunity and training."

THE HOUSE AND SENATE RULES
FIGHT AND THE AFTERMATH

It has always been an article of faith in civil rights groups that if a civil rights bill can be brought to a record vote in the House or Senate it will carry. Opponents seemed to agree; their strategy was to use the filibuster in the Senate and the pigeonhole in the House Rules Committee to defeat or water-down civil rights measures.

For almost a decade liberals have made the Senate's pro-filibuster Rule 22 their first target as each new Congress convened. In the House a variety of efforts -- sometimes a change in rules to bypass the Committee, sometimes an agreement with the bi-partisan Rules majority -- have been made to remove this blockade to civil rights and social welfare legislation.

In the post-convention session of the Congress last August, the House Rules Committee exhibited one of its more flagrant abuses of power. The aid-to-education bill had passed the Senate and House in somewhat different forms. It required Rules Committee approval for the appointment of a conference committee to reconcile the differences. This the Rules Committee refused, 7-5, and this bitterly-fought long-debated bill died. President Kennedy's program committed him to aid-to-education and a wide range of social welfare and civil rights legislation. Political realists agreed there was little likelihood any part of the program would reach the House floor for a vote unless the power of the Rules Committee was reduced or its personnel transformed.

The rules issue was first drawn in the Senate. Liberals supported a proposal (sponsored by Humphrey and Kuchel, the two party whips, and 21 others from both parties) to permit a filibuster to be ended by a vote of 51 Senators, a majority of the whole Senate. An intermediate proposal was offered by Anderson (D-NM) and Morton (R-Ky) to permit cloture by a vote of three-fifths of the Senators present and voting, instead of the two-thirds vote now required.

The Administration's Rationale

It seemed clear that the three-fifths proposal had a better-than-even chance of being adopted if it could come to a vote. Much would depend on the attitude of the new President. In a December press conference, Kennedy said that he still believed that the Senate should be be able to cut off a filibuster by a majority vote. But even as these words were being carried in the press, the "word" was being passed around in the Senate that Kennedy would not make a fight for majority cloture but would save his ammunition for the fight on the House Rules Committee. This decision was disappointing to Senate liberals, but it was not without some rationale. The Senate filibuster threatened only civil rights -- and the new Administration could make substantial civil rights advances in the first year by executive order and administrative action. The Senate filibuster had not prevented consideration of the battery of social welfare bills -- medical care, minimum wage, aid to education, housing, distressed areas. In the House, on the other hand, all of these measures ran afoul of the conservative coalition in the Rules Committee.

On January 10, Senator Mansfield, the Majority Leader, moved to send the two filibuster reform proposals to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. He promised that as chairman of this Committee he would do everything in his power to bring a recommendation to the Senate later in the session for action, but he was opposed to further consideration at this time because the rules debate was delaying early action on the Kennedy program. The liberals objected to the Mansfield move, holding that any delay in action would forfeit the advantage available only at the beginning of a Congress -- the right to terminate debate by a majority vote under the Constitution, as enunciated by Vice President Nixon in several opinions since 1957.

Senator Douglas warned that if the rules were not changed now it will be "goodbye to effective civil rights legislation for this session;" indeed, he said, it would mean "no civil rights legislation for the next four years."

On January 11, the Mansfield motion to refer the issue to the Rules Committee carried by the close vote of 50-46. A switch of two votes with Nixon in the chair would have meant the passage, at least, of the three-fifths proposal. Clearly Kennedy's intercession could have made a decisive difference.

Mr. Sam and the Rules Committee

In the House the form of the fight against the Rules Committee hung on the decision of Speaker Sam Rayburn. Early, it was decided that the attempt would be made not to reduce the power of the Committee, but to transform its membership. The first proposal contemplated dropping Rep. William Colmer of Mississippi for the political sin of having bucked the national Democratic ticket in the campaign. This could have been accomplished in the Democratic caucus without precipitating a floor fight, but the Southern Democrats persuaded Rayburn that this was an unpalatably harsh step. They urged addition of new safe members rather than a purge. Rayburn decided finally that his proposal would take the form of increasing the membership of the Rules Committee from 12 to 15, by the addition of two Democrats and one Republican.

When the lines were thus drawn, it was clear that Rayburn was taking on the Dixie-Republican coalition. Minority Leader Halleck and Congressmen Smith and Colmer had agreed on a joint fight. Shortly before the vote, the Rayburn forces counted noses, found themselves outnumbered, and called for an adjournment of the decisive vote to January 31. In the interim, the White House, the Cabinet, and the House Whips went into action. The corridors buzzed with talk of blandishments and recriminations. On the Republican side the effort was no less intensive; the regular committee assignments of new members were held up pending the vote.

The Rayburn proposal carried 217-212, with 195 Democrats and 22 Republicans voting for the change; while 148 Republicans and 64 Democrats, all from the South or border states, voted against it.

Rayburn quickly designated his candidates for the enlarged Rules Committee -- Sisk of Fresno, California and Elliot of Jasper, Alabama. These two would give the liberals on the Rules Committee a majority for social welfare legislation, but they cancelled each other out where civil rights legislation is concerned. Minority Leader Halleck had three appointments to make, since two Republican vacancies carried over from the elections. In response to the request of liberal Eastern Republicans that they be represented, he appointed Katherine St. George of Tuxedo Park, New York. His other appointees were Elmer J. Hoffman, Wheaton, Illinois, and H. Allen Smith, Glendale, California. These three could be counted on to follow the Halleck line and vote to maintain the Dixie-Republican coalition. Civil rights legislation would still be confronted by a Rules Committee where 5 of the 10 Democrats were Southerners and where the 5 Republicans had a history of trading civil rights votes for votes on economic measures.

There was no question but that the Administration had won a victory for social welfare legislation. There were, however, two sobering afterthoughts. The closeness of the victory, despite the full-scale intervention of the White House and the Cabinet, promised that the conservative coalition might still command a majority on specific measures. And observers wondered how many appointments in crucial civil liberties areas would go to recalcitrant Democrats as the price for their support of the Rules change.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE CASE OF THE TENNESSEE SHARECROPPERS

Under a temporary injunction granted by the U. S. Court of Appeals late last December, Tennessee landlords who were defendants in the case brought by the United States under the Civil Rights Act of 1957 were prevented from evicting their tenants for the purpose of intimidating those who tried -- or wanted to try -- to exercise their right to vote. Since the granting of the injunction, there have been no more evictions. The case is now pending before the Appeals Court for argument on the merits.

In its action against 27 individuals and two banks in Haywood County, Tennessee, the Government charged that the defendants had threatened, intimidated and coerced Negro citizens of the County in order to keep them from voting, and had conspired among themselves and with others (the list of defendants was later amplified by another 46 individuals, a third bank and a wholesale food distributor) to do so. Among the punitive pressures and penalties which the Government held the defendants had utilized was a scheme to evict various Negroes and their families from the farms where they lived and worked as sharecroppers and tenant farmers. Under the terms of the eviction notices, a compulsory mass exodus would have been completed on or shortly after January 1, 1961.

The Government's Evidence

What was the background of this case?

In its evidence -- which, with two exceptions, went wholly uncontradicted -- the Government described Haywood County as situated in rural southwestern Tennessee, with an agricultural economy dominated by cotton, although corn, peas, okra and soybeans are also grown, and there is some cattle-raising.

Many of the County's Negro citizens are tenants and sharecroppers on farms owned and operated by white persons. Typically, at the end of each crop season, about January 1, the tenant receives one-half or two-thirds of the value of his contribution to the farm's net profit. Of course, any money loaned to the tenant by the landlord during the year as "run money" or "furnish" for his living expenses is withheld by the landowner. A few tenants pay a specified rental in cash or commodities.

Under Tennessee law, registration is a prerequisite for voting for candidates for public offices, including Federal candidates. Of the total number of persons of each race in Haywood County there are approximately 6,500 white persons and 7,921 Negroes eligible to register to vote. Yet up to May of 1960, not one Negro had been registered to vote for many years. Indeed, when the first recent efforts by Negroes to register began in the summer of 1958, the County officials responsible for voter registration ceased to function, and were not all replaced until April, 1960.

In May of 1959 various Negro citizens organized and incorporated the "Haywood County Civic and Welfare League" which aimed to encourage and to facilitate registration and voting by the County's qualified Negroes. Under its aegis several of its members conferred with state election officials in Nashville, Tennessee, about the absence of a functioning election commission in Haywood County. Many meetings of the League's sub-groups were held to prepare and encourage the Negroes to register when the local officials again opened the books.

Membership List Circulated

As the League's activities grew, the defendants secured copies of its charter and the list of its charter members. Starting late in 1959, some of the defendants reproduced these and began to circulate them, along with a petition or compact among the white community. The intent was to bring about economic penalities against the League's charter membership. Thus, merchants were to deny credit to the named Negroes, however good their credit rating might be; landowners were pressured to evict tenants who belong to the League, however good their sharecropper-landlord relationship had been; even local bankers were provided with the list.

A registrar of voters was finally appointed in April of 1960, and the election commission declared that the books would be opened for registration commencing in May. As soon as they were announced by the commission, the Haywood County Civic and Welfare League printed and circulated a bulletin giving the time and place for registration of voters in the various civil districts.

At the same time, the defendants and other white persons set up a series of meetings in white school houses in the County --meetings for which the only known purpose was to devise means of thwarting Negro efforts to register. Thus one defendant commented on the number of potential Negro voters and advised the audience to move Negroes off their farms and replace them with white tenants or white-faced cattle. Another defendant said he judged that the Civil Rights Act proscribed mid-season evictions because of registering, and told the landowners to wait til later and let their sharecroppers go at the end of the year. A third announced that an amended list (of the Negroes to be oppressed) had been made and would be distributed -- as indeed it was.

About the same time, the defendant landowners also undertook to discourage their tenants from registering, advising them to go fishing on registration day, "not to fool with it," "not to have anything to do with that mess," and that those who registered would "get their runs cut off and couldn't get help."

But a relatively small number of Negroes did try to register. They formed in lines in front of the registration places. While they waited, they were observed by the defendants, some of whom were seen scrutinizing them and making notes. Shortly afterwards, a new list of Negroes was circulated; it carried the names of those who stood in the line as applicants for registration.

". . .One of Democracy's Most Treasured Rights. . ."

In June, the number of eviction notices began to grow. At that time, too, some of the defendants mailed formal lease termination notices to their tenants who had registered. Many of the sharecroppers had farmed for their landlords as long as 20, 30 and even 40 years.

When the sharecroppers sought an explanation, their landlords told them the evictions were caused by their effort to register. Said one defendant to his tenant farmer: "Well, you are registered. You are going to have to go. I don't think you will be able to get a home any place in Haywood County. I hate to see you go. You are one of my best hands. I would recommend you to anybody. I wish you lots of success this year and in the years ahead."

Other landowners mentioned the effect of pressure within the community; one told one of his men that if he were allowed to stay on the farm, ". . . it would be boycotted; we couldn't get no gas, probably couldn't get no fertilizer."

By December, more than 300 Negroes comprising 48 families had been told to move out by January 1, 1961, or shortly afterwards. With few exceptions, tenants who had not registered were not asked to move.

The Government called 12 of the defendants to the stand. Eleven of them cited the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination.

The District Court, in refusing to grant an injunction, implied that the Civil Rights Act of 1957 is not constitutional as applied to this case. The Justice Department holds that the power of Congress to protect the right to participate in federal elections against interference from any quarter stems from Article I of the Constitution, and that this power is virtually plenary. Says the Government brief: ". . . this case does not involve the abstract right of a landowner to evict or retain a tenant farmer at his pleasure and it does not involve the question of whether the appellees have the right to use their freedom of action and their property to oppress economically other persons who have chosen to exercise one of democracy's most treasured rights: voting."

THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS
WITHIN THE INTER-AMERICAN SYSTEM

The effort, begun after World War II, to develop within the framework of the UN an international system for the protection and promotion of human rights is comparatively well known. Probably the best-known fruits of this effort are the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the Draft Covenants on Human Rights and the measures proposed for their implementation. It is also common knowledge that these Covenants, designed to be legally-binding, have been bogged down in the General Assembly for several years, that considerable time may elapse before they are completed and opened for signature, and that unless spectacular changes ensue in the pattern of international relationships, they will undoubtedly languish indefinitely in the limbo of unratified treaties.

On the other hand, the UN has adopted a series of legally-binding conventions centered on specific human rights, some of which have already received sufficient ratifications to come into force. Perhaps the best known of these is the Genocide Convention. Furthermore, in addition to this effort to develop human rights instruments (whether conceived as legally-binding or only as of moral force) which outline standards of conduct to be observed by governments as well as by private persons and groups, the UN has engaged in many other human rights projects of widely varying nature and significance. These activities, conducted under the auspices of Human Rights Commission and its Subcommission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, UNESCO and other UN bodies and specialized agencies, have included wide-range undertakings of scientific, educational and social action character.

Less well known in this country is the human rights effort projected within the European regional system. Here, linked to the Council of Europe, is an already operative system based on a Convention on Human Rights with implementation measures that include a Commission, functioning as a kind of grand jury to sift complaints which are receivable both from governments and private parties; and a Court to hear those complaints which the Commission passes on to it. Parties to this system are most of the non-communist nations of Europe, not including France and the United Kingdom.

And hardly known at all in the U. S. -- not unnaturally, in view of its relative recency -- is the effort to emulate within the Inter-American system the human rights development which is still in the projection stage in the UN and actually in force in the Council of Europe. This undertaking is complex and in some respects controversial, and it would be difficult in this limited space to deal satisfactorily with all the problems involved.

Suffice to mention only the central issue, on which sharply opposing views exist even within the "liberal" camp, as to the feasibility, in the present state of international relationships, of hoping to "protect" human rights domestically by means of legally-binding treaties with international measures -- commissions and courts -- for implementation or enforcement. Allied to this issue are others:

differing attitudes toward treaty-commitments; problems posed by legally-binding conventions for federal as compared with unitary states; difficulties of formulating standards in language which will have agreed-upon applications in different social and cultural settings -- especially where philosophies and practices differ sharply in regard to the role of the state -- and hence will be amenable to adjudication and enforcement in any meaningful sense.

The Background

The term "Inter-American system" embraces the various expressions -- including regional agencies, treaty relationships and joint declarations -- of the bond among the nations of the Western Hemisphere. To this system, the Organization of American States (OAS) may be viewed as bearing a relationship comparable to that which the UN bears to the world community. The OAS currently embraces the 21 independent nations of this hemisphere, including the U. S. but not Canada. Like the UN, the OAS encompasses a large array of program and activities, and of councils, agencies, commissions and committees established to implement them.

The OAS came into being in its present form in 1948 at the Ninth International Conference of American States in Bogota, Colombia. Like the UN, however, it had antecedents reaching back many decades. The 1826 Congress of Panama, in which Simon Bolivar played the leading role, is usually regarded as the starting point of the Inter-American movement. A subsequent milestone was the 1890 (First) International Conference of American States (Washington, D. C.) at which was created the International Union of American Republics, and its central office or secretariat, the Commerical Bureau of the American Republics. The Union and Bureau were the predecessors, respectively, of the OAS and the Pan American Union.

The OAS Charter, adopted in 1948, defines the nature and purposes of the Organization, the principles on which it rests, its conception of the fundamental rights and duties of member states, its procedure for the pacific settlement of disputes and for collective security, and its arrangements for co-operation in the promotion of higher economic, social and cultural standards. The Charter also sets forth the functions and powers of its principal organs: the Inter-American Conference, the Meeting of Consultation of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, the Council, the Pan American Union, and the Specialized Organizations; and also those of subordinate bodies of the Council -- the Inter-American Cultural Council. The names of these latter agencies suggest the UN bodies to which they bear an analogy in purpose and function, if not in authority or hierarchal position.

"Collective" Concepts Are Increasing

The Inter-American Conference is the supreme organ of the OAS; it decides general policies and formulates general courses of action. The Consultation of Foreign Ministers considers emergency or urgent problems between Conferences. The Council is the OAS' permanent executive body. The Pan American Union is the General Secretariat.

Acceptance in Latin America of the concept of collective protection of human rights was preceded, inevitably, by a long period in which concepts of sovereignty and non-intervention received predominant emphasis. These are still the dominant emphases, though they have been counter-balanced in recent years by increasing emphasis on "collective" concepts, aimed at collective security against external aggression, peaceful solution of differences between states by judicial means, and, more recently, by the concept of international protection of human rights, which has received increasing support since the end of World War II.

The 1945 Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace (Mexico) called on the American states to develop a system for the international protection of human rights, and charged the Inter-American Juridical Committee with drafting a Declaration of Human Rights. The 1947 Inter-American Conference (Rio de Janeiro) reiterated these aims. The 1948 Conference (Bogota) moved toward these objectives in two concrete ways -- by adopting the OAS Charter, which contained provisions on human rights, and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, a document comparable to the UN's Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The Fifth Meeting of Consultation of Foreign Ministers (Santiago, Chile, in August, 1959) attempted to move forward these earlier, more general, undertakings. In a historic resolution, which became known as the "Declaration of Santiago," it affirmed the inter-dependence between peace among the American Republics and respect for human rights and the exercise of effective representative democracy. It formulated a set of eight "principles and attributes of the democratic system in this hemisphere" intended to aid public opinion in gauging the character of political regimes.

Back-Stopping Resolutions

This Declaration was back-stopped by a series of other resolutions aimed at implementing its principles. Of these, perhaps the most important was Resolution VIII on Human Rights, which called on the Inter-American Council of Jurists to draft conventions on human rights, on the creation of an Inter-American Court for the Protection of Human Rights, and of other organizations for the protection of those rights. This far-reaching Resolution went even further: it resolved to create at once a Commission of Human Rights.

The Council of Jurists -- scheduled, fortuitously, to convene the week after the Foreign Ministers' meeting closed -- responded enthusiastically to its request and with remarkable speed produced a four-part draft convention. This convention will be reviewed at the forthcoming Inter-American Conference, scheduled to be held in Quito, Ecuador, in May, 1961.

There were two reasons why the Council of Jurists was able to act so expeditiously: it was able to draw on the fruits of drafting experience of the UN and the Council of Europe; and its members preferred to ride the tide of enthusiasm then prevailing and to complete a draft instrument -- even one with the flaws that are inevitably present in hastily-drafted documents -- rather than delaying completion for another session in order to produce a more refined document.

The majority of the Council of Jurists inclined, in regard to substantive rights, to the precedent of the all-embracing UN Draft Covenants, rather than to the more modest European Convention on Human Rights. The Council's draft thus comprised not only Civil and Political Rights, as does the latter, but also Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. For this reason, it will pose for would-be ratifying states in the Americas many of the same problems as are presented by the UN Draft Covenants.

Proposals for Implementation

The Inter-American Draft Convention, like the UN Draft Covenants, provides for two schemes of implementation, one to be applied to civil and political rights and the other to economic, social and cultural rights. For the former, the implementation scheme provides for a seven-member Commission on Human Rights, to be composed of persons with judicial or legal experience, serving for four-year terms in their personal capacities. The Commission would have power to receive state-against-state complaints as well as complaints against a state party by "any person or group of persons, or associations or corporations, legally recognized by the public authorities, alleging violation of any of the rights in the Convention."

In contrast, the implementation plan for economic, social and cultural rights does not provide for a judicial or quasi-judicial procedure. As in the UN Draft Covenant, implementation of these rights is limited to "promotional" devices. Thus the Commission will not have the authority to receive complaints, but it will be able to collect data, make observations, recommendations and reports, engage in studies and research (including on the spot), and give publicity to measures adopted.

The convention also provides for the establishment of a Court of Human Rights composed of jurists, equal in number to that of the ratifying states and elected by the OAS for nine-year terms from lists nominated by these states. Its jurisdiction would be limited to interpreting and applying the civil and political rights.

As might be expected, the Inter-American Draft Convention was not approved without serious reservations from several of the most powerful OAS member states. Argentina noted that it had voted for approval of the Draft, on the understanding that it was preliminary and that it had many technical defects which needed correction. A similar reservation was made by Mexico. Uruguay, while voting affirmatively, subject to "reservations of a constitutional nature," also objected to the immediate creation of the Commission on Human Rights which, it held, should follow rather than precede the adoption of the Convention, lest it endanger the principle of non-intervention.

The U. S. Position

The United States position was, in effect, the same as that which it has taken in the UN with respect to human rights conventions generally -- namely, that because of its federal-state problem it did not find it possible to join in multilateral human rights conventions, though it had no objection to other states doing so.

As noted, the August, 1959 meeting of the Consultation of Foreign Ministers had resolved that a Commission be created at once. This resolution was implemented by the OAS Council in May, 1960, when it adopted a Statute spelling out the Commission's objective, structure and functions.

The Commission's Statute describes it as "an autonomous entity" of the OAS, its function being "to promote respect for human rights," these being "those set forth in the American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man." The Commission is to be composed of seven members elected by the OAS Council from lists proposed by member states.

The Commission is given these functions and powers: to develop an awareness of human rights among the peoples of America; to make recommendations to member governments concerning human rights measures; to prepare studies or reports; to invite member governments to supply it with information on human rights measures adopted by them; and to serve as an advisory body to the OAS on human rights.

It is not authorized to consider specific complaints. It could hardly be expected to be given such authority outside the context of a rigorously debated, drafted and ratified convention. Even so, its functions and powers are very flexibly formulated, and can be given either a liberal or a narrow construction. Obviously, the authority to make "recommendations" and "reports" can be exercised in far-reaching ways, if the members wish to do so. However, since the Commission is a creature of the Consultation of Foreign Ministers and the OAS Council, its members are not likely to interpret its powers more liberally than these bodies are likely to accept.

At its first session, in October, 1960, the Commission, whose permanent seat is in the Pan American Union in Washington, conducted an exploratory discussion concerning its authority, policies and procedures, and decided to initiate its activity with a limited program of studies and reports. The session revealed a considerable ambiguity in the minds of the members as to the nature and scope of their mandate. But it was anticipated that, in time, the projected studies and reports, each assigned to a different member for preparation for submission to the next session in May, 1961, would lead gradually to more concrete recommendations and activities, and also to a clearer definition of its realistic role.

Although this is the most interesting recent human rights development in the Inter-American system, it is not the only one that has taken place there. Many other projects in the economic, social and cultural fields, which are properly classifiable as "human rights" activities, are under way under the auspices of various bodies in the OAS, including the Inter-American Economic and Social Council, the Inter-American Cultural Council, and the Council of Jurists. All of these projects -- whether legal, educational, or social action -- warrant the attention and encouragement of the American people, and surely of agencies devoted to the cause of human rights.

IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE POLICY AND LEGISLATION

A number of general immigration and refugee proposals have already been thrown into the Congressional hopper. These include bills to liberalize the national quota system and reduce inequities under the McCarran-Walter Act, such as S 551, sponsored by Senators Javits, Keating, Case of New Jersey, Morse, Saltonstall and Scott. S 552, by the same sponsors, would authorize the admission of 40,000 refugee escapees, including 5,000 handicapped persons; and S 583, by Senators Wiley, Keating and Javits, would extend the alien orphan program indefinitely. This program is scheduled to expire June 30, 1961.

No hearings have been scheduled as yet on any of these bills. No Administration bill has been submitted either, although some hopefuls anticipate a Presidential message on immigration in the near future. Other sources contend that the new Administration cannot be expected to evolve an immigration policy for several months. They point out that two important positions in the immigration field are still to be filled. These include the office of Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Administrator of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs, Department of State. The State Department position has been vacant since January. The Commissioner's position will be open in mid-June. The present Commissioner, General Joseph M. Swing, has been asked to stay on until that date, which is the 50th anniversary of his service with the Federal Government.

Organizations interested in refugee matters have recently been invited to share their views and experience with the newly-reorganized Senate Subcommittee on Refugees and Escapees, which has Senator Philip A. Hart (D., Mich.) as its chairman.

SENATOR ERVIN OUTLINES EARLY PROGRAM OF SENATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS SUBCOMMITTEE

Senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr., (D., N.C.), who succeeded the late Senator Thomas E. Hennings as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, outlined his immediate plans for the subcommittee's work when he announced the Senate's approval of operating funds of $140,000 for this year.

"As I understand our responsibilities," he said, "this subcommittee has a grave legislative obligation to hold back unsound legislation, as well as the duty to produce positive recommendations for new laws or necessary statutory changes.

"The subcommittee can legitimately continue to study wiretapping, in my opinion. We have one more volume in our series at the Government Printing Office at the moment; it is a collection of state wiretapping laws, court decisions and notes, which should be helpful in connection with examination of bills this year to permit interception of communications under certain circumstances.

"Necessary preliminary work has been done by the subcommittee for possible public hearings on the rights of persons in mental illness classifications. With the approval of other members of the subcommittee, I shall schedule such hearings in the near future.

"Present members of the subcommittee are: Senators Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina; John L. McClellan of Arkansas; John A. Carroll of Colorado; Edward V. Long of Missouri; William A. Blakley of Texas; Roman L. Hruska of Nebraska; Alexander Wiley of Wisconsin; Kenneth B. Keating of New York; and myself as chairman."

The American Jewish Congress has announced that Max M. Kampelman has been retained as its Washington counsel, the position formerly held by Sanford Bolz, who is now in California. A member of the firm of Strasser, Spiegelberg, Fried, Frank and Kampelman, Mr. Kampelman was formerly legislative counsel to Senator Hubert H. Humphrey. He is also counsel and treasurer of the American Political Science Association.

Felix M. Putterman, formerly administrative assistant to Congressman John R. Foley of Maryland, has been appointed national legislative director of the Jewish War Veterans of the USA, succeeding the late Bernard Weitzer, who died last year. Mr. Putterman, an economist, served as a member of the staff of Robert R. Nathan Associates, economic consultants, for ten years before going to Capitol Hill. A combat veteran, he served overseas in World War II with the 78th Infantry Division.

Plans for the opening of a social action center in the nation's capital to implement the ethical principles of Reform Judaism have been made public by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, which has purchased a house at 2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W. in Washington as the site of its Emily R. and Kivie Kaplan Center for Religious Action. The center, to be opened next Fall, will serve as an arm of the Commission on Social Action, which is the joint body of the UAHC and the Central Conference of American Rabbis. Rabbi Balfour Brickner, who has been the spiritual leader of Washington's Temple Sinai since 1952, has announced that he will resign from his ministry there in July to become director of the UAHC's new Commission on Interfaith Activities. He has also been appointed associate director of the Union's Social Action Commission.

NEW IN THE CLEARING HOUSE FIELDS

STRENGTHENING THE FAMILY, by Weldon Wallace of the Baltimore Sun is a report on Baltimore's Family Life Program, a unique project undertaken jointly by the United Steelworkers of America, which finances it, and the Baltimore Urban League, which is putting it into action. It aims at helping minority families to become stronger and more emotionally secure, in order to "help them to produce men and women equipped to handle the greater responsibilities of a more promising future." How this effort to reach into and strengthen the Negro home has been developed, how it is implemented through work with churches, schools, libraries, housing projects, news media and private organizations, and how it has sparked the interest of many agencies within the community, is outlined and illustrated in 22 pages. It is available from the Committee on Civil Rights, United Steelworkers of America, 1500 Commonwealth Building, Pittsburgh 22, Pennsylvania.

WHY THEY SAT IN is the theme of the entire issue of Social Progress for February 1961. The United Presbyterian Church's Journal of Church and Society hopes through the articles presented here to try "to communicate the 'feel' of the sit-in movement and to identify the motivations" that lie behind it. The articles -- many written by the students themselves -- fall into six categories: "This Happened to Us;" "Settling a Sit-in;" What Does it All Mean?";"Laws and the Law;" "Organizations Involved" and "Places Desegregated." Copies are 25¢ each, from the Office of Church and Society, United Presbyterian Church, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia 7, Pennsylvania.

THE MIAMI STORY is an account of the background and the events leading up to Miami's religion-in-the-schools trial, on which Florida's Dade County Court will hear final arguments on April 4, 1961. The booklet gives a full outline of the religious practices which are challenged, the participants in the suit, and the reactions it has aroused. SHALL WE AMEND THE FIFTH AMENDMENT? --Lewis Mayers, author of The American Legal System, presents an objective and nontechnical analysis of a constitutional guarantee which is much in the public mind, and frequently misunderstood. The author explains how this privilege works in specific situations, evaluates the present rules and the reasons commonly offered for their continuance, and presents suggestions for change -- all looking toward the continued protection of the citizen without impeding the administration of justice. THE WHITE HOUSE

Washington

March 23, 1961

Dear Dr. Buschmeyer:

I regret that I am unable to be with you this year. Please convey my best wishes to the participants in the 13th annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House.

Your concern and my concern is the protection of the full Constitutional rights of all Americans. Until that goal has been achieved you cannot rest content and the government of the United States cannot rest content. I can assure you that this Administration will work consistently and effectively to fulfill the great promise of the Constitution: equal opportunity for all men.

The recent Executive Order on Equal Opportunity in Employment is one important step, which will open new opportunity for millions of Americans. As your conference recognizes, the struggle to end racial or religious discrimination must go together with the defense of the full civil liberties in our Bill of Rights. This Administration will respect and protect the people's right to know, to think, to speak, to assemble, to worship, to study, and to vote freely.

I am glad that you are meeting to consider the problem involved in all this and to rededicate yourselves to the action required. For in the end it will not be our words but our deeds that count.

Cordially,

JOHN F. KENNEDY

THE NATIONAL CIVIL LIBERTIES CLEARING HOUSE

THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE

March 23 and 24, 1961 Hotel Sheraton Carlton, Washington, D.C.

* * * \

He deplored the failure of the Kennedy Administration to come forward with civil rights legislation. While applauding the vigorous exercise of executive powers, as exemplified by the Executive Order on unemployment opportunity, he held that legislation is necessary for the effective protection of individual rights. Powers and sanctions now available to the Equal Opportunity Committee are too limited, he said; and it can be abolished or its operations impaired as speedily as it was established.

Though he noted recent advances in civil rights, Mr. Lindsay declared that there is still a "broad gap between the promise of the Constitution and the firm application of its principles." He asked civil liberties groups to "break their strange silence" on civil rights legislation, and called upon the Administration to support legislation of the character that he proposes.

Harris Wofford

The Kennedy Administration has already begun to demonstrate that it means business on civil rights, Mr. Wofford told the conference. A tremendous new source of power is available in executive measures to protect constitutional rights. But civil rights advocates, Mr. Wofford suggested, are not yet acclimated to the use of these creative possibilities and still tend "to prefer to lose a long loud fight for a Congressional civil rights bill...than to win a quiet, steady campaign for Executive action."

He admitted that executive action is not an easy course and is subject to political negotiation, when weighed against the need for general welfare legislation. But, citing Vice President Johnson's chairmanship of the Equal Employment Opportunity Committee, he said that the same contradictory forces which elected a Democratic administration will move the country ahead on human rights.

The problem, Mr. Wofford declared, is not merely to decree equality by law, but to assure that all Americans have full and equal opportunity, whatever their circumstances. He urged his audience to view the protection of constitutional rights in a world context, not merely as a question of Negro or American rights. Part of the cure for racial prejudice, he concluded, is "to get people's minds off their skins," the best prescription being "for America to accept the myriad positive challenges of the New Frontier -- for North and South, Negro and White -- to become fully engaged in the great process of world development...through which we can all join the human race."

Discussion

In response to a number of critical questions directed at the failure of the Kennedy Administration to make civil rights recommendations to Congress, Mr. Wofford said that the Administration had not been in office long enough for a fair judgment to be made on its performance. He said that the advantages of the new employment order over previous directives are in the positive steps (e.g., recruitment) required of employers to promote equal opportunity, which he termed a great advantage over the case-by-case approach; in the new sanctions made available; in vesting responsibility in the Department of Labor with its great resources; and in the direction that statistical surveys be conducted to determine the extent of discrimination. Herbert Hill of the N.A.A.C.P. criticized the award of a government contract, shortly after the issuance of the Executive Order, to a company guilty of discrimination. Mr. Wofford indicated that, once the order goes into effect, determinations of discrimination will be made before contracts are awarded.

Several questioners pointed to the need for civil rights groups to explore more fully the potentialities of citizen action, such as student sit-in demonstrations and picketing, and to encourage more communication between new student movements and established civil rights organizations.

John Lassoe, of NAIRO, expressed the hope that executive appointments would include persons trained in intergroup relations and sensitive to civil rights problems.

Elizabeth Cole of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights questioned whether the technical assistance bill proposed by Rep. Lindsay would be susceptible to use for financing pupil placements plans as devices to avoid real desegregation. Rep. Lindsay replied that funds would be available to support only the kinds of desegregation plans approved by the courts. John Silard said that removal of overt discrimination--in public colleges and universities, for example--has not resulted in real integration, and suggested the need for government to assume an affirmative burden of promoting true equality.

Responding to another query, Rep. Lindsay called the prospects "very remote" for legislation implementing Section 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment by reducing the representation of States which discriminatorily deny the right to vote. Herman Edelsberg suggested a new examination of techniques for conciliation, but Mr. Marshall replied that conciliation is not sufficient to deal with recalcitrant elements in the South.

LIBERALISM'S RESPONSIBILITY

Senator Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island

As a brand-new Senator, ranking 100th out of 100, I would like to briefly assure you of being a bona fide Liberal. I have been arrested three times by Communist officials and three times by Fascist officials; a nice liberal balance! Yet I would like to show today how illiberal we Liberals can sometimes become. The maxim I want to underline this evening is a very old fashioned one indeed: "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

By this I mean we must be dedicated to our Liberal traditions, even when such dedication would appear to go against our short-term interests, or, at first glance, produce results that go against our liberal grain.

To my way of thinking, the best definition of a Liberal is a person with an open mind -- that is why there can be liberal Republicans as well as liberal Democrats. The success of the open mind, which permits constitutional change without revolution, was best shown in the past century by the triumph of the Liberal tradition in Britain, which produced the great reform bills in that country. The liberal tradition means that we must protect the rights of those who urge causes which we may abominate. The statement attributed to Voltaire, "I disapprove of what you say, but will defend to the death your right to say it," might well be our guide.

The long experience of mankind indicates that the restless, groping thinker is as necessary to the growth of ideas, as is the honey-bee to the pollination of flowers. Of course, every Democratic society has its crackpots, its lunatic fringe, its subversives, most of whom make no impact whatsoever upon a civilization. The reason is that, just as a better version of the truth will supersede the previously accepted, so the nonsensical will be discarded. Truth crushed to earth will rise again; a lie or a false theory, though raised to the skies, will fall, in the end, of its own lack of substance.

A new world is upon us, with new frontiers which expand at the speed of electricity and space-ships. We shall have to stretch our minds, our senses, our spirits, and our hearts to encompass the new world forming. Our old concepts will need considerable review, and we will not further our effectiveness by precluding full consideration of every thesis, no matter how novel or painful. The absolute necessity for entertaining painful criticism has been recognized by even the most stable of institutions. St. Benedict, in discussing the methods of conducting a monastery, once declared, "If a pilgrim monk come and should reasonably, modestly, and charitably censure or remark upon any defect, let the abbot consider the matter precedently, lest perchance the Lord have sent him for this very end."

Self-Criticism - Essence of Liberalism

I believe that the very essence of the liberal way is to provide for its own continuous self criticism. The liberal way reaches its peak, not as a recital of the status quo, but as a means of making conditions better. It means that we cannot benefit by our mistakes, unless they are identified and frankly discussed. Let us look at the truth, however painful it may be.

We have pointed, and justly, to the shocking abuses of segregation by law in Southern States. But can anyone doubt that economic segregation in effect at least as cruel exists in the Northern States? And how many liberals sign restrictive covenants when they buy a house? Just the other day, I noticed that our new Secretary of State, Dean Rusk, bought a house in Washington, and, in buying it, he refused to sign a covenant committing him when he sold it not to sell it to any non-Caucasian, i.e., a Jew, a Negro, or an Oriental. Because our Secretary of State refused to sign this covenant, and was merely putting into his personal life our supposed beliefs, it made headline news around the country. What is even more significant is that the Supreme Court has ruled that these covenants are illegal and unconstitutional.

Actually, when Dean Rusk and I were working together in the Department of State some fifteen years ago, I can recall that the only place where we could eat with our colleague, Dr. Ralph Bunche, was in the Union Station cafeteria. Even the official State Department cafeteria was segregated at that time.

We liberals must and do oppose a man being denied any position of honor or trust on account of race, color, or creed. Neither, however, should a man be given preference for a particular office because of race, color or creed. Public office of any kind should not be assigned on a de facto proportional representation based on race, color, or creed. I am not blind to the fact that such de facto political arrangements exist, but I believe that liberals, given their strong desire to see minority groups afforded equal opportunities, should not fall into the trap of urging that a person be given preference for a position because of his creed, color, or country of ancestral origin. We politicians are sometimes guilty in this respect when we put together, or even seek office on the theory of the "ethnic balanced ticket."

Actually, I have vested interest against proportional representation on any such basis. I was a member of a minority in my State primary campaign, and many people thought because of this my chances of election were not too good. Yet this factor was scarcely mentioned, and the people of Rhode Island were kind enough to make me the first unendorsed candidate for a statewide office to win a primary in the history of our State. And, in the November general elections, they gave me the largest plurality in the history of our State. Why? It seems even stranger when you realize that earlier in the primary, my Party leadership voted against me 30 to one, the labor unions twice supported my opponent, and even highly respected polls portrayed me as being defeated in the primary by a margin of four to one.

The answer, to my mind, lies in a bit of history and in our liberal tradition. The first settlement in my State of Rhode Island-Providence-was founded by Roger Williams in 1636 in the spirit of real religious tolerance. One of the first actions of the settlers of Providence was to provide for religious liberty and complete separation of Church and State. In his most celebrated work, The Bloody Tenets of Persecution, published in 1644, Roger Williams asserted that "God requirith not an uniformity of Religion", and held that pagans, Catholics, and Jews had a natural right to religious liberty. During Roger Williams' Presidency of the colony, Jews and Quakers were welcomed to Rhode Island. Rhode Islanders are proud to have the oldest Jewish synagogue in America located in my own home city of Newport.

In any event, as I worked and fought in my own political campaign, I came to realize how deeply ingrained was the liberal tradition in my State, real liberalism, not skin-deep liberalism. All our children had been taught and had absorbed this liberalism in their schools, public or parochial. If my State had not been liberal-minded, or open-minded, I, as a member of a minority, as an inhabitant of that portion of the State which has not been represented on the ticket for many years, who was regarded by many political leaders as being as impossible, improbable, and implausible a candidate as came down the pike in many a year, would never have been elected. So, I guess, my own appreciation of and gratitude to the liberal tradition is more ingrained than that of most people.

"A Liberal's Conscience"

In this connection, during my own few months in the Senate, I find myself constantly examining my own liberal conscience. There is the question of limiting debate in the United States Senate. At the moment, because of the urgent necessity of strong civil rights legislation, liberals are pushing for a majority cloture rule, whereby a bare majority of those present and voting can cut off debate.

From the long-term viewpoint, let us not lose sight of the fact that we liberals have used the filibuster a number of times to prevent hasty consideration of what they consider to be damaging legislation.

There was the case of the Vreeland-Aldrich Currency Law, 1908. It was hoped by the framers of this legislation that it would provide a more elastic currency and stabilize the values of many securities. Conservatives had been alarmed by the number of bankruptcies and other financial difficulties and felt that measures must be taken to preserve business. The opponents of the plan considered it just another device by which the privileged few could tighten their control upon the country's capital and credit. That towering liberal, Senator Robert M. La Follette, Sr., of Wisconsin led a filibuster against the bill during which, on one occasion, he spoke continuously for more than 18 hours.

There was the Resolution to Admit New Mexico into the Union in 1911. Proposals had been made to admit both Arizona and New Mexico, but Arizona had been eliminated because of provisions in her proposed Constitution for popular initiative, referendum and recall; provisions which were opposed by many conservative Senators. Senator Robert L. Owen of Oklahoma, who favored admission of both New Mexico and Arizona, filibustered against the New Mexico resolution for the purpose of persuading the majority to agree to include Arizona. His filibuster resulted in only partial victory. It succeeded in killing all statehood legislation for the session.

There was the Tidelands Oil debate in 1953. After the Supreme Court had decided that certain submerged lands lying off-shore belonged to the United States rather than the abutting States, proposals were made to confirm title to these lands in the States. Senator Wayne Morse, of Oregon, was one of the most tireless opponents of such proposals. Between April 1 and May 5, while the Senate debated the tidelands measures, Senator Morse spoke often and long for a good cause, with one of his speeches setting a new record of 22 hours and 26 minutes. The measures were defeated.

I do not believe that any minority should have the right to indefinitely prevent the Senate from reaching a vote. However, it seems to me that there is danger also in terms of making sure that the minority has a right to be heard, if we permit a simple majority in the Senate to cut off debate, unless ample provision is made to not only permit full debate, but allow ample time for the alerting and marshalling of public opinion. Actually, I believe that the 3/5 compromise that will probably emerge is a pretty fair one.

"Sauce for the Goose..."

The essence of fair play is that the rules must work both ways. For that reason, I believe the time has come when we liberals and progressives must take counsel with ourselves. Frankly, to the extent we do not practice what we preach, we shall be deemed hypocrites; and to the extent that we seek laws to enforce upon others what we do not observe ourselves, we shall be deemed seekers, not of the rights for all, but of special privileges for ourselves.

For example, it is our position that financial institutions, as custodians of the nation's savings, are to be held as fiduciaries of highest trust, and subject to regular report, inspection, and regulation by the government.

Can we possibly argue that such duty is lessened if the depository happens to be the funds of a labor union? We have often deplored the voicelessness of the stockholder in the large corporations and the vested interest of management in its own perpetuation. But is it not true that in some unions the individual worker is nigh as voiceless as the stockholder in a large corporation?

Liberals, as persons dedicated to man's inalienable right to seek the truth, find political requirements abhorrent in the field of the performing arts. We condemned, and rightly so, attempts to prevent Paul Robeson from giving concerts. However, liberals would do well not to forget the furor caused over the award of the Bollingen prize for Poetry in 1948 to Ezra Pound. At that time, the liberals called for a Congressional investigation of the Fellows of the Library of Congress in American Letters, who made the award. "The Fellows" included such people as Conrad Aiken, Archibald MacLeish, Robert Penn Warren, and William Carlos Williams. The award was also bitterly attacked by one of our leading magazines, which, on the other hand, has consistently opposed the House Un-American Activities Committee. Let us also not forget that in early 1949, representatives of the nation's leading liberal veterans' organization, the American Veterans' Committee, of which I am proud to be a member, picketed Carnegie Hall in New York against the proposed appearance of the brilliant German pianist Walter Gieseking. I know all too well, my fellow liberals, that we are human. We are bound to make mistakes. I am also aware that in my talk tonight I have only pointed out where liberals have failed. I cite these instances because I believe that liberals, as peoples who strive for open minds, must set the most rigorous standards for their conduct. What I am saying is that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Jesus Christ gave us something to think about when He said "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forget what manner of man he was."

CIVIL RIGHTS AND THE 87TH CONGRESS

Senator Kenneth B. Keating of New York

A great deal has been said about executive action in the field of civil rights. The impression is growing that a determined President can solve our problems in this field without the help of Congress. I would not for one moment underrate the powers of the Presidency. Nor do I doubt that some things can be done by the Chief Executive without the aid of Congress. The President, for example, could issue an Executive Order outlawing discrimination under all Federal grant-in-aid programs. I would like to talk about this for a moment. It is one of the neglected areas of the struggle for equal protection, yet it is one of the most compelling.

Almost all Americans would concede the general proposition that it is wrong to dispense tax monies to promote discrimination. The tax collector is color blind. He does not discriminate against our Negro citizens in raising revenue. How can we possibly justify discrimination against Negro citizens in disbursing revenue? I hope that most Americans would instinctively regard this as unfair, whether or not they thought it was immoral.

The omission of Federal grant-in-aid programs from the recent Executive Order establishing a Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity was a disappointment to me. Here is one subject to which executive action could be effectively applied.

Under the Interstate Highway Program, the Federal government contribution can run as high as 90% of the cost. Despite this, there is no requirement under present procedures for the State to include a non-discrimination clause in contracts with the road builders. The Federal Bureau of Roads does include an abbreviated form of a non-discrimination clause in its basic agreement with the States, but there is no implementing machinery. In practice, the billions the Federal government is expending on this program are being disbursed without any consideration whatever of the contractor's hiring policies.

Federal Aid for airport construction is another striking example. Under this program the States are required to include in all their contracts the Federal regulatory standards on prevailing wages, prohibitions against the use of convict labor, veterans preference pensions, and anti-kickback provisions. But not one word need be said in such contracts about non-discrimination. This is inexcusable.

There are some exceptions to the general neglect of civil rights problems under our aid programs. The grant programs for urban renewal and low rent housing do contain a non-discrimination provision. In fact, under the low rent housing program, the contractor must agree to hire a quota of Negro workmen equivalent to their percentage in the local labor market. The President could strike a tremendous blow for equality of opportunity by establishing a uniform non-discrimination requirement under all such grant-in-aid programs. It is respectfully submitted that he should amend his recent Executive Order to give the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity the same jurisdiction over such programs as it now has over Federal employees and employees of government contractors. This would be an entirely reasonable and appropriate extension of the Committee's jurisdiction which would deserve commendation as an advance in the field of civil rights.

General Policy Could Eliminate Piecemeal Amendments

Moreover, such a program would make less necessary specific amendment of the Federal Aid to Education bill with regard to non-discrimination. In my view, any Federal Aid to Education program must contain safeguards against the use of Federal funds for segregated schools. Any other course would be a severe setback in the already difficult struggle to implement the Supreme Court's desegregation decision. Indeed, in view of the mandate of the Court, I believe Federal aid to segregated schools would be unlawful. There is some merit to the argument that the school aid bill should not be singled out for non-discrimination provisions because of the hazards which already confront this type of legislation. Personally, I would prefer a general policy against discrimination, such as I have outlined, to piecemeal amendments which could imperil otherwise desirable measures.

The President's power to act is clear, and I would respectfully urge him to do so before the school aid bill is under floor consideration in either the House or Senate. Any other course would virtually compel efforts to add non-discrimination provisions to the legislation.

In the absence of safeguards decreed by the Executive, I do not see how anyone committed to a policy of desegregation in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision could refuse to support such provisions. I hope, therefore, that the President will act now and avoid at least this pitfall in the aid-to-education controversy.

I have tried to make it clear that I believe administrative action can be very helpful in promoting civil rights progress. But I do not want to leave the impression for a moment that the President can cope with all of the urgent issues in this field without new legislation.

Let us not delude the American people into thinking that bold Executive action is all that is needed. Executive Orders cannot be used to abolish poll taxes, or to eliminate discriminatory literary tests. The President cannot by decree extend the Civil Rights Commission or provide financial and technical assistance to the States to help them carry out the Supreme Court's desegregation decision. And he cannot direct the institution of equal protection or 14th Amendment suits without legislative authority. Nor can he give the Commission on Equal Job Opportunity statutory backing which would be very desirable. In these areas, nothing can substitute for the legislation which is needed. This was clearly recognized not so long ago during the 1960 conventions and campaign. I do not believe the American people are going to be misled by any strategy of delay and expediency now that the elections are over.

"The Great, Immediate Challenge....."

Nevertheless, the prospects for civil rights legislation during the 87th Congress are bleak. The Rules Committee stumbling block has been whittled down, but King Filibuster still reigns in the Senate. We have overcome filibusters in the past, and I have no doubt that a determined Senate could overcome filibusters at any time. What, in all candor, I do doubt is, whether the requisite determination now exists.

Civil rights legislation has definitely been given a low rank in the list of priorities. Many of the most active proponents of legislation in this field in the past have maintained almost complete silence on this subject. There are some civil rights bills pending, but none that enjoy any semblance of active Administration support. Without such forceful backing, there just does not appear to be a very widespread inclination to suffer through the long and frustrating debate which will be characteristic of civil rights legislation until the filibuster is buried.

I am trying to give you a candid appraisal of the situation, even though I know the picture is bleak and disappointing. It is my opinion that there will be no meaningful civil rights legislation in the 87th Congress unless overwhelming public pressure overcomes the massive inertia of Congress. Here we have a great issue which has been allowed to flounder and to founder in a stormy sea of emotion--instead of being approached and resolved with the deliberation, the objectivity, the sense of justice that it calls for so compellingly.

The President is to be congratulated on his stand with reference to South Africa. This represents an affirmation of the deepest feelings of freedom-loving Americans. But, at the same time, we cannot, in good conscience, wring our hands over the denial of human rights in lands half a world away, if we continue to deny human rights, legal rights, God-given rights to any American because of color, race or creed

This, to me, is the great immediate challenge that confronts our Nation. Freedom, dignity, equality -- these must be realities that we know here first -- and fully -- before they become articles of export.

At the same time, it is essential to keep in mind that, despite setbacks and heartbreaks, progress in the field of civil rights is occurring. The very pressures of history are operating to move us up the dark stairs that lead to the sunlight of freedom and equality. Our Nation must feel the warmth of pride no less than the chill of remorse as we contemplate the road behind us and the progress, however slow, of our forward journey. In a world where the mind and heart and spirit of many peoples are held in a seemingly hopeless captivity, we must not despair because human rights are, to some extent, rationed in our own land. Despite our shortcomings, we remain in the vanguard of humanity's march towards the beckoning heights of universal freedom and justice.

It occurs to me that our title should be "Mass Communications and the People's Right to Know -- What They Want to Know." This would hit at the nub of the problem which is, "What is it they want to know?" From the diet of pap served to them on television, from the vast amount of yellow journals still in existence and from the violence, sex and spectacle in huge colored gobs on the screen, one could conclude that the public are getting what they want, and it serves them right.

There is an ebb tide and flood tide in audience response to pictures that deal with some brutal realities, and the failure of one film that reaches out to touch the conscience of man stultifies the ambition and closes the checkbook. Forgotten are the commercial successes such as Crossfire, Pinky, Gentlemen's Agreement, The Defiant Ones, Trial, On the Beach, and others. If one labors long in the field of pictures that aim for the objective of man's mind, he is likely to be dubbed a maker of "message pictures." You see, a "message picture" is any picture with a point of view which is a failure. If it succeeds, it becomes a "picture of content."

This ebb and flow is the first barranca and of course it involves audience indifference. During my tenure of over eight years at a major studio, the boldest film made was Intruder in the Dust. It was beautifully directed and written and expertly played. The critics were ecstatic; the public couldn't have cared less. In some areas of the country it could not even get bookings. Public indifference murdered it. The fact that William Faulkner wrote the novel probably was one reason we weren't accused in some quarters of being pro-Communist.

This then leads to the second barranca, which is pressure from certain groups and certain areas. A studio or releasing company will in these days of "jackpot" motion picture making view with intense dismay the making of a film that may not be able to play in the South, or may offend someone in the government, or may provoke the Catholics or the Jews or the Protestants. The sensibilities of national groups must also be reckoned with, and I have had letters of concern from architects, lawyers, doctors, Indian Chiefs, motel owners and hearing-aid manufacturers. I once had a sharp letter of protest from some society organized to protect the reputation of German police dogs because in one film a dog of this breed bit an actor.

"The Right to Offend"

As a consequence, films gave up long ago a basic and theatrical right -- the right to offend. This circumstance has now been aggravated by the economic pressure on film companies. With television income from the sale of old films carrying a major source of profit, the companies are producing mammoth films that will stun audiences with their length and breadth and width and height and color and sound. The major promotion is once again related to how much did the picture cost, how long does it run, how long did it take to make and how many stars decorate its main title. Too often, everything is accounted for except the plot. But the audience apparently couldn't care less -- they go to the big ones, occasionally to the freak little one -- but many pictures of leisurely pace and serious content with some degree of nobility are quietly ignored and quickly hidden away.

There are good pictures finding their way into the art houses, and in some big cities they are commanding real attention. That's a good sign. Perhaps soon films in America will again be searching for the special picture -- the good little picture -- but usually if those stories are submitted today they are brushed off as being "good for a TV show", which is the faintest praise with which one can damn.

Another problem to consider: the foreign market. What image of the American personality will be exhibited to the world away from the United States? What image do we want to present? Do we stop, or prevent, or inhibit the production of powerful pictures of protest that might give to the world a view of Americans as a people still in revolt against injustice? Do we inhibit or prevent pictures that would prove that our Nation is so strong, so secure, that absolute freedom of the screen is still a sacred civil liberty?

Or are we naive enough to feel that vapid pictures that glorify violence and reduce sex to moronic vulgarity are really doing us no harm? Do we really believe that just because the good guys always win (be they cowboys in white hats or policemen or G-men or private detectives), that we can show men and women slapped, raped, slugged, shot, knifed, burned and drowned without damaging our national image?

There is no way to censor bad taste, and if there was I'd be against it; but somewhere there must be a way of creating a jury of peers who will judge what is shown abroad not by what the film says or doesn't say -- but rather by a standard of whether it's a good picture or a lousy one.

And what's wrong with the concept of making films purely for American exhibition? Nothing, except that it isn't profitable in a complex world that demands that pictures get bigger and wider and are seen by more people than ever before. Someone, some day will break the trend, but he will need co-operation from creator, financier and exhibitor. Some time in the future, major companies and major talents will be willing to spend some effort and time in exploring the fields of good will and good deeds that present no financial bonanzas -- the field of educational films, for instance. It would be something to see if skilled craftsmen teamed up with brilliant teachers and started to create a backlog of films for our schools and colleges. Hollywood did a magnificent job in making training films during the war; it could do a magnificent job in peacetime.

"Kick up a Fuss..."

But once again, perhaps petulantly, we have the right to ask: What is it that the public wants to know? Even during the war, great documentaries such as "The True Glory" went begging for audiences. Truth was not a satisfactory substitute for fiction. For the record, I'm not arguing for the abolition of entertainment. I'm arguing that if the public is surfeited with some of the junk that comes under that loose heading of entertainment that they kick up a fuss. Let them besiege the sponsors of TV programs; let them berate the publishers of bad books; let them stay away from the theatres exhibiting tripe -- as soon as they make bad taste unprofitable it will cease to exist.

And let the devoted worker in all creative fields also try to clean his own house; if he does not he will find himself fighting the battle against censorship in the wrong place, at the wrong time, against the wrong odds. I'd like to find myself fighting for freedom of the screen by defending the right of someone to make a picture about the bigots in New Orleans, rather than for some cheap, obscene film that might be called "I Was A Teen-Age Werewolf Who Ate Marijuana In A House Of Shame". But if it comes to that, I suppose we will have to fight. The tragedy will be that the fight will be lost -- because the theatre will be burning and someone will have the right to yell, "Fire!"

The very term, "mass communication" makes a clear definition: a communication aimed at or reaching the mass. Let the masses declare what they are for and what they are against -- and let us hope that the tenor of their demand will uplift us and not disillusion us. They, the people, have the right to know everything -- it's a right they can exercise if they choose to and I, for one, hope they do -- and I, for one, believe that they, in time, will alter the shape, the sound, the size and the soul of all our communications.

Douglass Cater

When James Reston interviewed Dean Acheson during his last days of office, he asked Mr. Acheson why he and the press had not been able to get along better together. Mr. Acheson replied, "My position as Secretary of State was to conserve new policies, to nurture those policies in responsible privacy until they were strong enough to withstand the battering of the public arena. Your job was to learn about and publicize them. We were naturally at odds."

There is no absolute resolution of this dilemma in the people's right to know. There is bound to be an uneasy war between government and the press, with no absolute disarmament between the two by a system of mutually agreed upon weapons control. Fresh dilemmas occur with the growth of big government and the mass media. I take the side of the reporter in most of the conflicts -- not because of the argument about the freedom of the press but from a feeling that the role of the press and communications is unique in the American system of government.

The founding fathers created a separation of powers, or as Richard Neustadt, author of Presidential Power, has said, "separated institutions sharing powers." In the fragmentation and competition of our power structure, the necessity for public opinion to sustain new policies is an absolute must. In the United States, the newspaperman has played the role of transmitter -- carrying news from one end of Pennsylvania Avenue to another. This is a vital function, one that cannot be curtailed.

Images and Illusions

There are many dilemmas confronting the people's right to know. There is the dilemma of management of the news. Today, we know more than we did in the past about how to create images on men's minds. A little knowledge in this field is often disastrous. The constant tendency of some in political power is to create substitutes and illusions rather than reality in this communication process. The absolute reduction of this process can be seen in the career of Senator McCarthy.

There are other dilemmas. We have come a long way from the "twenty-four hour historian" role of the reporter. Today, news has become a flow process, a constant, ever-moving stream. The reporter has become a "bucket boy" to keep the stream moving. Despite the growth of mass media, and the additional numbers of reporters assigned to politics, we still have a mal-distribution in space and time. This mal-distribution is one of the problems that contributes most to a lack in the people's right to know. The press is too preoccuped with the packaging of news to attract the millions it is serving, and too few reporters in Washington spend time to dig deep into stories and try to put the pieces together in a meaningful way.

There are no fixed formulas for the resolution of the clash between government and press. On the part of government, there is need at the highest level (and there is no evidence of this in the Kennedy Administration) for someone who broods over the process of communication and is honestly concerned at the highest level that a well-rounded packet does get out, rather than the kind of fragmented leaks that frequently damage policy in the making.

On the press' part, it lies in the greater exaction of self-responsibility and the knowledge of what self-responsibility is. There is need for a "council of elders" with no punitive power over the press but the power of criticism when the press errs in this vital field. It has been told that the failure of the dinosaur to survive was a failure of communication -- his feet were not able to get accurate enough news to his brain nor his brain quick enough to react to the peril his feet were in. If our communication fails, democracy itself is in imminent danger.

Edward P. Morgan

We Americans pride ourselves on being the best-informed nation in the world. Too often, I'm afraid, sometimes without realizing it, we are informed or misinformed, and most of the time we are at best only half-informed. We seem, on the whole, rather to like it this way. If, as the saying goes, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, we are indeed in danger.

It is not enough to argue that we are as well or better informed than most peoples. That standard is not high enough. In our position of power and influence in a world perilously balanced between peace and war, we can't afford to be only partly intelligent and on a part-time basis. Nowadays almost everything that happens anywhere on the planet affects you and me in some way. But who is there who has a clear grasp of these far-away developments? Nobody can reasonably demand that we equip ourselves with the wisdom of Solomon or stuff ourselves with facts like an IBM machine, but I think it is time we confessed that our love affair with knowledge is a casual one.

There are hopeful signs here and there that the broadcasting industry is experiencing twinges of guilt over its huckstering, its practice of a kind of mass hypnosis to induce desires for opulent excess. The other day the new president of the National Association of Broadcasters, the civilized ex-governor of Florida, LeRoy Collins, warned the NAB that lip-service to its public responsibility is not enough. Presumably he was referring, among other things, to saturating the air with stomach-powder and soft-drink commercials and then pompously squeezing in, as an alleged public service, a plug exhorting you and me, in a voice of cloying unctiousness, to take the whole family to church on Sunday -- "you'll feel better for it." As if you could swallow religion too, like a liver pill. The lively young new chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, Newton Minow, a former law partner of Adlai Stevenson, indicates that he too is going to have much more than a passing interest in how or whether broadcasting is contributing to the public good over and above its entertainment goodies designed to Sell. The current competition among major networks on news coverage and programs in public affairs should increase the depth and raise the standard of public information and understanding.

Commercialism and Bigness

Commercialism remains the key but there are other problems. Commercialism begat bigness and bigness has invaded everything -- business, labor unions, government bureaucracy and bombs. Simple, vital facts get lost in these vast dimensions. We live in an age of staggering scientific discovery and expanding mechanical marvels; we can transport people and things and words and pictures from place to place faster than ever before; but as we step up the speed of this traffic via jet and -- soon -- space satellite TV channels, we increase in direct proportion the dangers of distortion via the smudge of superficiality, and the half-developed perspective.

Along with bigness and the complexities of new situations, there is the added obstacle of secrecy. Secrecy knows no partisanship. It is a by-product of any bureaucracy. The Eisenhower Administration stockpiled it in alarming abundance under a label of executive privilege.

President Kennedy has promised that he will not abuse that privilege by using it to conceal mistakes; but he stoutly maintains that secrecy is necessary to protect delicate diplomatic negotiations while they are in progress. He has also warned the high military brass that they must not speak out of turn in public. He argues that when a member of the joint chiefs of staff, for example, makes a speech, the public and -- in some respects more importantly -- foreign governments have a right to assume he is reflecting Administration thinking. The White House is trying to extend this co-ordination of policy pronouncements to all key departments so the Administration won't seem to be speaking with a towering babel of voices. And finally, the President is demanding certain protections of his personal privacy -- for instance, a written pledge extracted from members of the White House staff that they won't write about their experiences with the Kennedys during or after their tour of duty.

These developments have provoked some calculatedly anguished cries of "censorship" and "gag rule", especially from the Republican opposition and the gold braid at the Pentagon. My own hunch is that the President is going to find it very difficult indeed to make much of a dent in the country's assumption that the first family belongs to the public. He is already having trouble keeping everybody on the New Frontier talking out of the same side of his mouth. As for Mr. Kennedy's insistence that on matters involving national security, people in the government, in or out of uniform, reflect the Administration line of keep still, I for one heartily agree with him. (This does not inhibit the honest differences of views in testimony before Congress.) On the point of government secrecy as a whole, I think the President should be given the benefit of the doubt until his promise of performance can be put more to the test.

Assembly-Line News-Gathering

Admittedly, the general public would not be so well informed as it is if it weren't for the worldwide news-gathering facilities of the wire services. But this assembly-line operation carries a curse with it too. It is the curse of superficiality, sensation and mediocrity.

Major dispatches on tensions and contentions between East and West are cast in the mold of conflict such as one could expect from the home-team sports writer covering the Rose Bowl game. Example: When Dean Rusk appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in support of his confirmation as Secretary of State, he said a number of meaningful things, including the warning that we are going to have to face the reality of the growing threat of the Peiping government. But what were the bulletins from the committee room? "No recognition of Red China now, says Rusk."

In "shaping the mind of our time", everybody, shaper and shapee, has a moral responsibility. I believe this should involve the objective of approaching as near the truth as possible in terms as understandable as possible. For this the news media have the biggest responsibility of all. But radio, television, newspapers, magazines, advertising and Hollywood all have a vested interest in the merchandising of truth, and this does not always preserve it in proper perspective. Can big business be reasonably expected to purvey the news, and comment on it, in the depth dimensions we need? Perhaps the media require competition from some neutrally-endowed, non-profit newspaper, or network like the BBC. Standards must be lived up to, and in the case of broadcasting they must be created and then enforced by the lifting or denial of Federal licenses.

But this gets into a treacherous area of control; and surely government intervention in the form of censorship is not the answer. It would only pose another problem.

The Public's Power

The public itself possesses enormous power of influence which it does not wield enough in demanding more and better information from all media. The public outrage -- mild as it was really -- over the loaded quiz shows was sufficient to set broadcasting belatedly looking to -- or rather looking for -- its conscience. But Ralph McGill has remarked in his column on a "failure of a large segment of the South's public leadership and its media" genuinely to inform on such an issue--so passionately in need of dispassionate treatment--as the racial problem. In New Orleans there were some timid attempts to deal responsibly and with some courage in the coverage of the token desegregation of two of the city's elementary schools; but they really didn't add up to much and the ugly defiance of violence still broods in the city's background. Is it sheer accident that continued turbulence threatens in a city whose information media largely failed to prepare the citizens for inevitable change -- in contrast to the not unpainful but far more civilized transition at the University of Georgia in Athens -- an area where organs like the Atlanta Constitution had long been dispensing cool-headed comment and reporting public sentiment for keeping the schools open?

There are many sources and suppliers of news to which a discerning public can turn and by so turning increase the pressure for more qualitative reports. Partly due to public demand, the news agencies themselves have greatly matured in their sense of balance and interpretive handling of the news. Other more distinguished sources include the columnists, from Walter Lippmann on down; the special reports of the more responsible newspapers; now and then the commentators; and certainly the so-called "little magazines", which are about the only living examples of old-fashioned American muck-raking left.

The public has a right to know. But like all rights, this one has to be nourished and exercised or it will wither. James Madison, one of the architects of the Constitution, said that "A people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power knowledge gives. A popular government without popular information or the means of acquiring it is but a prologue to farce or tragedy or perhaps both." This historic bit of wisdom may come as news to some; but I suggest it is news which relates to us, and underlines the obligations and responsibilities of the mass communications media, the information business, which are being so inadequately, half-heartedly fulfilled.

Discussion

Alan Barth observed that the press has a special function and a special place in American life: the function, to be a critic of government; the place, one of outstanding privilege among all American institutions. It enjoys absolute immunity from government regulations (under the First Amendment); and under the theory that it is an instrument of enlightenment, it enjoys relatively low postal rates. The freedom of the press -- one of the great prides of the American people -- stems from the desire of the authors of the Constitution that it should serve as one of the essential elements in the system of checks and balances which they had contrived for our government.

They conceived of a press, always independent of the government, which would serve as a censor of that government. Thomas Jefferson said, "No government ought to be without censors. While the press is free, the government will be." And again, "The press brought about in an orderly way that which could be brought about only by revolution in any other system."

The failure of the press lies in its failure to exercise fully its censorship function. As Douglass Cater has said, "The role of the press is higher and more responsible than the press assigns to itself." It seems to me that the press has been less vigorous and less valiant than it needs to be. It has been less tough than it should have been in pointing out the proliferation of government power. It has not been vocal about the growth and extension of the government police power into avenues traditionally considered immune to such invasion--the extension of the investigative power of Congress into the universities, churches, media of communication, and freedom of association and expression. All these the press has done too little to explore.

And the press has fallen most into decay and desuetude at the local levels in communities all over the Nation where editorial opinion can be most knowledgeable and effective. The newspapers which are loudest in decrying centralization of government in Washington are precisely those which do the least to provide a forum for discussion of local issues, or to provide leadership for solution of local problems. Newspapers that enjoy monopoly positions tend to avoid treading on others' toes.

The ruffling of feelings, the criticism of official actions, the instigation of local improvement and progress are essential responsibilities of the press. It is for this that the press was given the essential freedom it enjoys under the First Amendment.

Jack Howard detected an air of optimism left by the previous speakers -- in which he did not entirely share. He found reasons for pessimism in the necessity for accelerated decisions and accelerated understanding in today's jet age. "This is a new problem; the leisure for making mistakes is denied us." There is ground for pessimism, too, in the increasing size and function of the Federal government, which is moving into new areas because of the inability of State and local governments to act in them. By its sheer size, the Federal government gives us added problems in communication, in getting out the facts, in getting understanding across. The inability of the communications media to get the information they want and need is not a partisan affair; this is just the secrecy of bureaucracy, and it is bad for the people.

Mr. Howard sees the picture further darkened by military secrecy, which extends beyond the obvious need to protect vital installations, to anything and everything that deals with the military process. How can civilian control over the military be effective in the face of the barriers erected around the Pentagon?

The "management" of the news is another cause for concern. Officials have perhaps a legitimate interest in getting their side across and, if possible, in keeping the other guy's side from being heard. But this "management," when combined with secrecy and suppression of the facts, is a dangerous and disturbing process. In such an atmosphere the press cannot discharge its function as critic; it becomes an accessory.

Is there an answer? Are we realistic when we ask the free enterprise press to educate the public instead of catering to it? Or can we ask the press to criticize itself? What screams there were a few years ago when some newspapers discussed the responsibility of the press for a content analysis of the coverage of the national elections of 1952 and 1956! That proposal was dropped like a hot coal. Nobody in the business is going to be caught dead taking a crack at somebody else in the business. How about a "council of elders" from outside the press -- perhaps of professors of journalism? I don't think this is realistic either.

Earlier this morning the public was urged to kick up a fuss about bad taste and lack of content. But this tactic sometimes works in reverse; and I'm far from sure that the public can win -- "fuss raising" or not.

Several years ago John Cogley suggested that if a group of ancient philosophers or medieval scholars were to project the U. S. of the mid-twentieth century as a possibility, they would all agree that it could never work because the principle of unity would be too slight to keep a political society afloat. They would deny, he said, that a society divided on all the questions that really matter could be held together. Yet, here we are -- relatively cohesive and probably as stable as any nation in the world today. Mr. Cogley attributed all this stability to the fact that we are able to live without ideology. It is readily apparent that, whatever Americanism is, "it is not a set of simple propositions, universally held, about the meaning of life or indeed the meaning of any of the really important questions about man and his destiny."

Most of us would, I feel certain, regard Mr. Cogley's analysis as correct and true to our experience. Yet we might raise the question: "How long can we continue in this fashion, especially in an age of ideology such as this, with its great emphasis on substantial beliefs?" Whether the concern is with a Roman Catholic in the White House or the issue of Federal aid to schools, public and private, and the larger question of Church and State, we must all be aware of the danger of purely ideological response.

There is fear abroad in the land, fear that the Catholic minority will become a majority, that the naked logic of their theology might justify the destruction of richly prized human rights. But we know as a people that it is historical experience, and not pure logic, that in the long run secures our liberties.

Therefore, the first thing to be said in this matter of Church-State before us today is that our future is safe so long as we, as a Nation, scorn ideology. In other words, "Beware the ideologue," for he distorts the issues, and as Thomas O'Dea reminds us, plays an important part in structuring the framework in which a great deal of the exchange takes place; and more moderate people suffer accordingly.

Relations between religious groups -- particularly Catholic and Protestant, but not entirely so -- have improved considerably on the upper levels in the last few years. Recent months and the election experience have given us considerable opportunity for education in matters political and religious. And I daresay in the ensuing days we are due for considerable enlightenment in matters of Church and State. Regardless of the outcome of the current controversy, it will do us good if it gets us to thinking about the issues.

That there is a certain justice in the Roman Catholic effort to avail themselves of public funds should be obvious to all. Likewise, it should be obvious to the Administrative Board of the National Catholic Welfare Conference and to most Catholic laymen that it would be disastrous if the President's program for education for the whole Nation were to be killed because of their demands. Similarly, even if they should get precisely what they want and without endangering the President's bill, they might rend the fabric of our society in irreparable fashion and do more harm than they can now conceive.

On the principle of and need for separation of Church and State, first I would like to say that we Protestants need to be warned against our ready tendency to exaggerate the Protestant character of our institutions. After all, the principle of separation of Church and State is not Protestant; it is a product of principle in the American experience, an American and Baptist principle. Church and State are united in many Protestant countries and were so even more in the past.

The Principle of Separation

The principle of separation has been developing since the beginning of the Republic, and in some respects it is still being clarified in the courts. We have not had nor are we likely to have an establishment. In origin there were basic forces for separation in this country -- first the Baptists who have always opposed ties between Church and State, who for so long had suffered persecution in those nations who had establishments, and who continue to this day to be the watchdogs on this question. The second force was those intellectuals influenced by the enlightenment (e.g., Madison and Jefferson) who sensed a threat to religious liberty in every form of establishment. Their concern for separation did not flow from hostility, nor from any desire to place the churches at a disadvantage. It grew rather from their belief that the churches would be better off on their own.

John Bennett has suggested in his book Christians and the State three reasons for the separation of Church and State that are specially applicable in the United States: (1) This is the only way to assure complete freedom for the Church from the State. (2) It likewise guarantees that the State will be free from the Church and thereby guarantees religious liberty for all. (3) Simply that it is best in any case for the Church to be on its own, supporting itself as a distinctive Christian community characterized by lay initiative.

Leo Pfeffer, a recognized authority in this field, has been the outstanding spokesman for the position of the strictest possible separation, which is the position I would assume to be most familiar to Americans, not least because most Supreme Court rulings have tended to follow this line. Mr. Pfeffer holds that strict separation best serves all causes -- religion, democratic government and the interests of the people. He insists that religion occupies the place it does in American society because of this fact of separation.

In contrast to this position is that taken by Milton Katz, the former dean of the University of Chicago Law School. Prof. Katz goes to the 2nd part of the First Amendment and says that the requirements of religious freedom give the answer to the question of how far the government should go in promoting separation. He says that separation ordinarily promotes religious freedom and that it is defensible when it does, but that it is an instrumental principle. The crucial question here is religious liberty, including the freedom to doubt and deny. In no case, Prof. Katz says, does he find in historical materials the clearcut, unequivocal meaning attached to them by Mr. Pfeffer. Schools are, he continues, the one area "where the government should attempt delicate neutrality, avoiding the use of its power to promote religion, however impartially, and avoiding, at the same time, the promotion of secularism."

Prof. Mark de Wolfe Howe of the Harvard Law School has raised questions about the allegedly Protestant-orientation of at least one Church-State tradition in this category. He has suggested that the American doctrine has theological presuppositions that are inconsistent with full neutrality among religious groups. In this he says that we refuse full religious freedom to groups that believe in religious freedom. He writes: "The political conviction that religious liberty is of profound importance generally bespeaks a Protestant, and very frequently a skeptical, attitude toward the truths of religion. Behind our constitutional provisions there may lie, therefore, an attitude, if not a religious faith itself, which is predominantly Protestant in spirit."

"A Nation of Unity in Diversity"

It is unlikely, he says, that the equality that results from liberty will be obtained by a Church which is committed or seems to be committed to the doctrine that all men are obligated to seek and follow the truth that is to be found in faith only. Nevertheless, he finds it disturbing that the reason Protestants are hesitant to pronounce as false the doctrine pronounced by a neighbor does not result from either tolerance or belief in religious liberty, but rather from a skepticism that is "an essential element in 'the spirit of latter-day Protestantism.'" Prof. Katz cites this skepticism as one basis for widespread opposition to full freedom in relation to parochial schools. Another is the fear of groups whose devotion to real freedom is considered questionable.

No one should be so bold in this area as to prophesy the shape of the future, but I would venture to say that many questions that have long been considered closed questions will soon be opened for re-examination and reconsideration. This is bound to hurt the pet theories and illusions of many people and groups, but it is a necessary part of growth and change. We can only hope that persons on all sides of these questions will not be so overwhelmed by the inevitable tensions that grow from pluralism that they will be incapable of the reason and charity that have combined to enable us to establish a Nation proud of its unity in diversity.

William Clancy

I am in agreement with much of what Mr. Cowan has said, with only minor differences between us. The fact that he as a Protestant and I as a Catholic can agree on so much may not help the discussion here, but the existence of such agreement will help good feeling in America. Since the presidential campaign of last Fall, we have been confused on the Church-State issue; we were confused before, but now we are confused on a higher level. And we are just beginning. The next ten years will see much more discussion of this issue.

In it, on both sides of the question, we must avoid the danger of treating the issue as a contest between "good guys" and "bad guys." We must take a close look at the American reality. A close look will confirm the fact that ours is a society in evolution, a pluralistic society which has not settled into some final form. There is no fixed and accepted standard against which the "good guys" and the "bad guys" can be measured. The condition of our pluralistic society is rather fluid. We must avoid too facile talk about "the American consensus" and "brotherhood."

Instead we must recognize that American society consists of what Courtney Murray has called four "conspiracies"-- noting, of course, that conspiracy as used here implies no sinister quality. According to Father Murray's analysis, the four conspiracies of the American pluralist scheme are: (1) Protestantism, (2) Catholicism, (3) Judaism, and (4) secularism. Each brings to Church-State relations its own history, fears, hopes, prejudices and axes to grind. Father Murray points out that in fact American civic amity is a thing of the surface. When one breaks through this surface, he uncovers passion and war.

Among these four groups there exists deep distrust of the views of the other in respect to loyalties and future development. This distrust grows out of differences of theory and philosophy toward American society. There is the historical antipathy between Catholics and Protestants, and the Jews' fears of the Church, all of which go far behind the comparatively recent American experience. And there is the all-pervasive fear of the secular Humanist that all organized religion is in sometimes open but always active opposition to intellectual freedom.

"Clearly the End of an Era"

We must face up to the fact that we must continue as a society, talking openly about our fears and differences; we must do this more seriously and profoundly than in the past. Time is propitious for this in America, much more so than at any other period in our 150 years' experience, because we have clearly come to the end of the Protestant era in our national life. Even as late as 1928, it was possible for a French writer to characterize America as a Protestant culture.

This is no longer true of our image of ourselves -- a Protestant culture with Jews and Catholics regarded as tolerated minorities in American institutions.

Our break with this past, symbolized in the election of a Catholic as President, has been traumatic. It has had effects upon the American Catholic community, ending Protestant hegemony and likewise ending what I call the immigrant phase of American Catholicism. The Catholic is ready to take his place socially, economically, and culturally as a co-equal in American life. Also, there is a growing self-awareness of the Jew in the American community. We may expect to see a growing demand to end certain Christian practices. Sunday closing laws and Christian Bible teaching will be re-examined. This will be healthy. I believe, too, that secular Humanism in the U. S. is now being forced to take the view that the claims of religion must be considered more seriously, and cannot be patronized as in the past.

A profound change has taken place in the American Catholic community during the past decade. The old Catholic-Protestant clash is closed. In a way, the last presidential campaign was an anachronism. Kennedy was the first candidate to run on a POAU platform. Harry Golden said that the Baptists at last have their man in the White House. It is somewhat true, and I do not regret it. It has dispelled the caricature of "the Catholic position," revealing the multiplicity of Catholic positions.

"The Total Good..."

Catholics must leave behind negative, defensive attitudes derived from a persecution complex. This experience, as it was felt in 1928, is now ended. Catholics must re-evaluate their position and attitudes. If Catholics indeed share as co-equals, they must consider more carefully the total good; they must be ready to compromise the particular good for the sake of the general good. For example, it is impossible for a Catholic to engage in conversation of this type without having the birth-control laws thrown in his face. It is good that this is so. Catholics may delight in the fact that these laws were originally established by Protestants, and there is a temptation to say: "Stew in your own pot of fish." The larger issue is lost. It is not relevant that "this" is the Protestant position and "that" is the Catholic position. No, the Protestants made their mistake in the first place, and Catholics keep the bad laws on the books. And they are bad laws.

The school issue: I believe profoundly that in the coming decade the non-Catholic community must examine more seriously the Catholic grievance that present policies violate distributive justice. Non-Catholics must not dismiss this out of hand. (I do not say what the conclusion after such examination will be.) Catholics must not advance their own claims, no matter how just, which defeat the public good, such as a much-needed school-aid bill. We Catholics must see that our censorship policies leave much to be desired. And we must, as co-equals, become more sensitive about questions where civil liberties are involved.

In his study of John Kennedy, James McGregor Burns sought to explain why Kennedy ignored the threat of McCarthyism. I had assumed that Kennedy, representing a State where support for McCarthy ran high, chose to ignore the issue for the same reason that a liberal like William Fulbright, coming from Arkansas, ignores the race issue.

But Burns reasons that, because of his Irish Catholic cautioning, Kennedy could not see what the fuss was all about. This I cannot understand. Nevertheless, Catholics, leaving behind their immigrant phase, cannot continue to concentrate on being just bread-and-butter liberals, but must come to understand the liberal-enlightenment traditions. To a degree the charge that we have not is true.

The issue will resolve itself not in the old Catholic-Protestant argument, or the Jewish-Christian argument, but finally between religious groups and what I fear is creeping secular totalitarianism -- not only a secular society, which we have, but as a secularist society. Men of good-will must avoid sharp, irrevocable positions -- dogmas --in American life.

Rabbi Arthur Gilbert

The increasingly bitter Jewish-Christian confrontation on the role of religion in public education can be accounted for in many ways. It reflects population movement and the growth of Jewish participation in the social and cultural life of hundreds of new and old suburban centers around our major cities that were once homogenous and now include a healthy percentage of Jews. It reflects a new self-confidence and security in the unique processes of democracy in America that permit us now to voice old resentments at Jewish disadvantage in a Christian-shaped culture.

More than half of Jewish teen-agers in a recent poll conducted by the B'nai B'rith Youth Organization confess that they skip or replace words in the Christological hymns sung in the public schools at Christmas time, and almost one-fifth reported that they were asked to explain and account for their disbelief in Jesus as Christ by public school teachers at that time. Jewish parents now feel secure enough in America to ask if these old traditional ways of expressing reverence in our public schools -- ways that are Christian in substance and form -- need be continued. Is there no other way?

Jews are as concerned as any religious group with the challenges that confront American society -- the Communist enemy without and the moral break-down within. But our reaction to crisis differs as Judaism differs from Christianity. Thus many Christians -- holding a creedal religion -- seek reassurance in the reassertion of their creed. A declaration of belief in belief is almost expected of every office holder, genuine citizen and public institution in our land. One wonders whether Thomas Paine or Abraham Lincoln, who were without formal church affiliations, could ever be elected to public office in today's America, where the magic of a confessed religiosity is anxiously invoked.

Judaism, an ethic-centered, behavior-oriented, non-creedal religion that sees salvation achieved not through faith alone but by devotion to good works, reacts differently to this crisis. We believe it presumptuous to think that one can put America "under God" by declaring it so. We believe that improving parent-child relationships, raising the quality of teaching, limiting the size of classes, wisely expending additional funds for school facilities, child guidance classes, urban renewal, etc. are more fruitful first answers to the complicated problems of delinquency than opening the school day with devotional exercises, or reading ten verses of Scripture without comment each morning in the public school.

Yet, withal this difference in religious approach, the reason Jews are concerned with the religiosity suggested for the public school is at bottom the historic memory of imposed Christianity. And we do not want this in America. There are enough evidences still of Christian insensitivity to the Jewish situation that the old fears and unhealed wounds are for many Jews yearly awakened afresh. For years now, for example, Jewish agencies have been urging Christian clergy associations in Ohio to take their released time classes out of the public schools--clearly a violation of the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court. Only the threat of law suits and exhortations from understanding national denominational officials have at last, this past year, achieved a first effect on Ohio church officials. And we still have Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and who knows where else to go. Each year in some Bible-belt State, noted church leaders will recommend that Bible classes be established or expanded in the public school. And each year, the suggestion by a Jewish parent that the Nativity play is improper as a Christmas public school presentation is greeted somewhere in the United States with a cross-burning or the distribution of anti-Semitic hate literature or harrowing telephone calls, inflammatory church paper editorials, wild letters to the editor and campaigns to re-elect the school board or replace the school superintendent or principal should they have reacted sympathetically to the Jewish dilemma.

"We Are Leaving the Ghettoes..."

Up till now, Catholics and Jews generally have lived in their own ghettoes and were not as deeply involved in the shaping of the American culture. But now, we are leaving the ghettoes and as we do, it is inevitable that we bump up against each other. Inevitably there are conflicts deriving from our differing theologies and styles of life that reflect themselves in our quarrels over moral judgments and social legislation. Birth control, divorce laws, censorship regulations, Sunday closing legislation -- all of these and other issues too have been the cause of serious inter-religious conflict. I anticipate that in the next decade these struggles will continue until each of us fully comes to terms with the fact that our American society is pluralistic, and that none of us can impose his moral judgments on all the rest of us.

There is merit in the Catholic call for some consideration of the economic plight of their mushrooming parochial school system. They are properly aware that some groups in this country little appreciate the important contribution private education has made to the public welfare. And in some parts of the country, every Catholic request, even for child-welfare benefits, is rejected out of hand, because Catholics have asked for it. There is no excuse for anti-Catholicism. On the other hand, the needs of public education are so severe and urgent, the case for Federal aid to education so commanding that it is an act of irresponsibility -- a display of power politics unbecoming religion and the Church -- for the hierarchy to have suggested that they would rather defeat the bill than have it passed without their amendment. Is Catholic patience in America so sorely tried that they must insist on this either-or political maneuver?

Surely on this issue there is no consensus. There are many historic, legal and prudential grounds for questioning the grant of loans or gifts for sectarian education. Is this not an issue we had better discuss on its own merits, unrelated to the responsibility we all must assume for public education?

On other issues, one hears a prudent voice from Catholic clergy and laity, such as Bill Clancy's, suggesting that where there is no consensus the Church must act with restraint, that the Church is not obliged to legislate as crime all that is sin. Such teaching represents a salutary development.

"An End to Labels and Smears..."

The most exciting new trend in our inter-religious relations is that we are at last really talking to each other about such issues, and we are coming to cathartic revelations. No one position is maintained on any of these issues by any one of our faith communities. No one does or can speak the position of all Catholics, all Protestants or all Jews. There is no hierarchy or authority in any of our groups that could on any of these issues compel a disciplined adherence to any one position. As differences within our faith groups are given freedom of expression, I suggest that the very nature of the controversy among them will take on a markedly constructive new form.

I should like to suggest that we look upon our differences as the occasion to grow in understanding and to deepen our own humanity. Instead of calling up arms to overwhelm the other, we ought to be more concerned to discover what truth may be hiding there in his otherness. We need to listen more and strike back less. We need to use our differences to enrich each other.

I am sorely tried by the facile -- even dishonest -- way we have of labelling and smearing our opposition so that we may more easily dismiss it. Is it not clear that when Jews question religious practices in the public school, they are not supporting secularism and communism? They are suggesting rather that religion is too precious to be so misused by the State. It is out of our deep concern for religion that we raise the questions we do.

Is it not clear that Protestants are not manipulating the public schools in order to evangelize the Jew? They are rather concerned that we strengthen ourselves against communism and materialism and moral decay by lifting up for attention the religious symbols that remind us of our spiritual resources and ultimate responsibilities.

Is it not clear that Catholics are not seeking to destroy the Constitution nor take over America nor place the State in subservience to the Church when they ask for financial help for their school system? They are seeking rather what they consider their distributive justice as taxpayers and citizens.

I plead for a moratorium on distorted, facile, destructive, dishonest name-calling. Can't we accept the fact that our differences are genuine and legitimate differences, seriously held; that we all seek good for America, not evil; and that we must understand our differences -- not demolish them? Protestants and Catholics will go on quarreling over Federal expenditures for private education -- and Jews and Christians over the role of religion in public education. But there are reconciling efforts at communication; a growing resolve that our disagreements be handled agreeably; new formulations of the role of the Church in influencing the civic order that will enable us here and there to grow in brotherhood and fellowship despite our differences.

Discussion

The Rev. Dean M. Kelley pointed out that the Protestant position contains many conflicting views, and for some Protestants, Church-State separation may mean simply: How can the government co-operate with the churches without helping the Catholics? For them, it boils down to a "stop the Catholics" attitude.

It will be difficult to rationalize our varying viewpoints on such specific issues as government aid for higher education, he said; but we are going to have to try to do it. We cannot expect that two centuries of American experience can change outlooks much older. Judaism was theocratic for thousands of years; and for a thousand years the Catholic Church was shaped by the fact that it served as the Roman emperor in the West. Such patterns are not easy to alter. In fact, it is amazing that the brief American experience has produced such early accommodation and such mutual respect.

I defend the right of the Roman Catholic hierarchy to press for what they feel is right. Their controversial statement that they must oppose what they see as "discriminatory" aid is a standard political stance for any group in America. The Christian Century, an esteemed Protestant journal, made the equally adamant statement that Protestants will not pay taxes for the teaching of doctrines which they do not believe.

In this controversy we should weigh the problem of extending the neighborly attitude to that portion of the community given to barbarities of expression. The bitterness of the past stands as a barrier. How can we free ourselves from these old hostilities and fears? Here is our question. . . . The first test is whether we shall give aid to private schools. Some of us would entertain suggestions for such assistance; but not under pressure that impresses us as blackmail.

Dr. C. Emanuel Carlson agreed that the place of ideology can no longer be neglected. But must we have an American ideology and an official ideology? Is the Church, as some suggest, the official steward of the morality of a nation? If that is the view --if that is religion and that is the Church -- the American experience is coming to a test.

Is it, on the other hand, possible to get beyond government, bringing to bear on the government the moral influence of faith? We need to grapple more substantively with the concept of justice, which is the chief job of government.

Another question now raised: Is this an old Protestant country now changing? I doubt if you can have a Protestant country. Is it possible for a government to experience a religious commitment? Is this not personal, by its very nature? Baptists believe that the reality of faith must be protected by its personal nature, or we shall get a pagan people called a Christian nation.

Some treat the separation principle as a never-the-twain-shall-meet concept. But this is not the issue. Must religion claim extra-territoriality, like a foreign embassy? Not so. The separation principle is designed to guard the freedom of individual believers. And this is a definable concept.

I raise another question: Have we outgrown our philosophy of institutions? We have believed in the principle that "the people rule." We believe that man is above his institutions, not raw material to be built into them. We must be clear as to whether the proper order is from the Divine to man to institutions, or from the Divine to institutions to man.

From the tenor of these discussions, I find that I must be a Jew--or a secularist. I do not insist that society has a divine mandate. I believe that the gods I worship are beyond society. God is not small enough to be put on a shelf, or in an institution. Much of the controversy rises out of superficial religious thinking, and the attempt to "place" God here or there in our institutions.

It makes me unhappy to think of religious groups as "communities." I think my community is larger than a religious group. We must beware, lest our superficial thinking lead us to discard our American community with free schools, libraries and the rest -- feeding public funds into conflicting "communities" to feed their contest with each other.

If we discard the principle that man is more important than institutions, we discard freedom. We find ourselves and the general good sacrificed for the sake of conflict in the news channels. We may do injustice to the best in all our religious fellowships in assuming that there is a cold war among religions. If we assume that such a conflict is real, it will be real. We need mature dialogue.

In floor discussion, Mr. Clancy said he is not sure he favors Catholics pressing for any kind of school aid. "I have not worked out my view of distributive justice." He believes, however, that it is "a serious issue of justice" not to be dismissed in the dogmatic way of POAU." "I believe younger Catholics are questioning their whole place in American life. What worries me is that outside of the Catholic community there is no knowledge of this process. The situation is absolutely fluid. Even what was held a generation ago is no longer held."

Mr. Cowan proposed that some attention be given to other solutions to the parochial school needs. A proposal was advanced from a Catholic source that parochial school children might take some of their courses in public schools, thus reducing the burden on their premises. This would reduce sectarian segregation and give parochial school parents a direct interest in the public schools, with advantages to both sides. Whatever solution is worked out must not be one-sided.

Rabbi Gilbert noted that a Catholic spokesman has said that the Church itself has not resolved its fiscal policy on aid. It has been suggested that Catholics of means might help those hard-pressed. One Catholic source has asserted, the Rabbi said, that if Catholics do not receive Federal aid funds for their schools, they may oppose future bond issues for public schools; this would be unfortunate. He acknowledged that Protestants often feel that Jewish regard for the Jewish child in the public school is only a concealed attack on Christianity. Religious groups should not act like political and economic pressure groups; we must inhibit ourselves on this.

Dr. Carlson said that in addition to the other problems discussed, the "distributive justice" argument ignores the problem of the various State constitutions, which should be considered.

Dear Leslie Dunbar:

I am making my end-of-the-year check of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House books, and I think you will want to be reminded of the Southern Regional Council's subscription, which is due this month.

For a good many years your office has subscribed at the rate of $25 per annum -- the standard rate per organization determined upon by our Administrative Committee as needed to cover the actual costs of maintaining an agency on our mail list.

We are very grateful indeed to the SRC for all the help, advice, encouragement and support it has given to the Clearing House, and we look forward to your continuing cooperation.

Incidentally, our 14th annual conference is set for Thursday and Friday, March 29 and 30, at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton here. I do hope that if you can stretch your calendar to permit it, you'll come up for it. It would be mighty nice to get acquainted.

Sincerely,

Mr. Leslie W. Dunbar,

Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Leslie:

You and I are going to be on first-name terms sooner or later, so it might as well be sooner, don't you think?

I thank you for the $25 subscription which the Clearing House received from your office today. We do appreciate your interest in and help with the Clearing House program.

I thank you, too, for the reprint of The Annealing of the South. The excerpts in the Post were mighty fine, and I'm delighted to have the whole article, which, I think, is one of the most truly sensitive analyses ever to cross my desk.

If you have very many of the reprints, could I have some for the Clearing House people? I could use : (1) 650, which would let me distribute it to our whole mailing list; or (2) 50, which would cover a Clearing House meeting. If I had my druthers, I'd druther have (1). But I'd gladly settle for (2).

Thanks again, and best wishes.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House will sponsor its 14th annual conference on civil liberties and rights on Thursday and Friday, March 29 and 30, at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton in Washington. We cordially invite you to attend.

The conference program is both timely and important. Civil rights -- problems and progress in work towards ending racial discrimination -- heads the agenda. Other meetings will examine the effects on individual liberties of two of the major developments of the '60s -- the explosive growth of our modern cities, and the emergence of the "radical right" as a political and social force. The conference will also survey the expanding role of voluntary organizations as a power for the protection of constitutional freedoms.

Among the speakers will be government officials responsible for civil rights and civil liberties programs, and you will be offered an opportunity both to hear their reports and to question them. Meetings will be plenary throughout in order to afford a maximum degree of participation by all of the conferees.

The Clearing House conferences are the only continuing meetings held in Washington on the national level that focus intensive inter-organizational discussion exclusively on the state of our civil liberties and rights. We hope that you will participate in this one; and we look forward to welcoming you and to having the benefit of your own and your organization's views in our consideration of these issues that so deeply affect our country and us all.

Sincerely yours,

Roy H. Millenson

Called Mary Alice re Branton's availability. He did need to be in Washington about that time. After all the haste, it seems the program has been changed to concern itself with the Court ruling on church and state. Mary Alice very sorry. Will try to get Wiley at the next meeting - in October.

Dear Paul:

Southern Regional Council people being so peripatetic, I thought I'd play it safe by sending you the attached copy of a letter written today to Les Dunbar asking whether someone from your staff might join the Clearing House in a civil rights panel on Wednesday afternoon, July 11, on your voter education project.

I shall hope to have a call from either you or Les about it as soon as possible.

With all best wishes,

Sincerely,

Dear Les:

For our last Clearing House meeting of this Summer, on Wednesday afternoon, July 11, we are planning to have a panel discussion on the major current civil rights situations and developments.

Cernoria Johnson of the Urban League is going to talk about housing and employment, and Frank Pohlhaus of the NAACP will cover the legislative picture and Administration activities.

Harold Fleming suggests that your voter education project is probably the most exciting and constructive thing that's going on -- and says that people from your staff very frequently have occasion to be in Washington, and that if such a visit is upcoming for July 11, a report on this would fit ideally into our round-up.

Could you call me, collect, at Dupont 7-6300, to let me know whether --hopefully -- you, or anyone from your staff might be planning to be here and able to work the Clearing House meeting into their schedule? The meeting will start at 2 p. m. and I would presume that the panel would go on, what with initial presentations and discussion, until around 3:30 or 3:45; but of course if anybody has to break away early we can always arrange for that.

It occurs to me that you might be at Fisk this week (since Roy Millenson is going to be talking there Thursday, this is in my mind) so I think I'll send a carbon of this to Paul Anthony, and hope that I will hear from either you or him soonest (as we used to say with the AP).

With best wishes and high hopes,

Sincerely, Mary Alice

Mr. Paul Anthony,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth St., N W,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Paul:

Remember how, back in June, the school prayer decision scrambled up the civil rights program we were planning for the July Clearing House meeting -- and you advised me then that perhaps it could be arranged to have Wiley Branton speak to us in October?

I'm attaching a copy of a letter I have just written inviting him to talk to our next meeting, on October 3.

I hope this can be arranged, and that you'll help us with it this time, as you did before.

With thanks, and all best wishes,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Executive Director.

Mr. Wiley Branton, Director,
Voter Education Project,
c/o Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth St., N W,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Mr. Branton:

If there is any likelihood that your work will be bringing you to Washington on Wednesday, October 3, could we persuade you to talk to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House about the Voter Education Project and what it's doing, that afternoon at 2 o'clock?

I hope you will remember that Paul Anthony talked with you about speaking to our meeting in July; but the issuing of the Supreme Court's school prayer decision intervened and because so many of the Clearing House groups are closely involved with it, we felt obligated to scramble the program in order to give them an interpretation of that.

Paul said at the time that you come to Washington quite often and he felt sure that you'd be willing to try to arrange one of your trips here to coincide with a Clearing House meeting. Harold Fleming said the same. I hope they are both right.

October 3 will be our first meeting after the summer recess. We are particularly hopeful that you can be with us then because of the approaching elections, which would give additional timeliness to a discussion of your project.

I look forward to hearing from you soon, and -- even more -- to having you speak to us.

Most sincerely,

Mary Alice Baldinger,
Executive Director.

1963 Conference Dates Set : March 28 and 29, 1963, are the dates for the 15th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, which will again be held at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton here.

The chairman announced appointment of the following Conference Program Committee: Jacob Clayman, executive director of the Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO, and Harold Fleming, executive vice president of the Potomac Institute, co-chairmen; Cernoria Johnson, National Urban League; Rabbi Richard Hirsch, Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Max Kampelman, American Jewish Congress; Dr. Richard B. Kennan, National Education Association Commission on Rights and Responsibilities; Dr. Lewis Maddocks, United Church of Christ; Clarence Mitchell, N A A C P; Jack Sheehan, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO; and Lawrence Speiser, American Civil Liberties Union.

Program Suggestions Invited : In behalf of the Committee, the chairman invited suggestions for topics to be taken up by the conference, or for possible speakers. Please call Mr. Clayman, Mr. Fleming, Mr. Millenson, or the Clearing House office with your ideas.

Program : Rabbi Eugene Lipman of Temple Sinai, who co-authored A Tale of Ten Cities -- The Triple Ghetto in American Religious Life, with Albert Vorspan, director of the Commission on Social Action of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, discussed the questions raised by his recently-published book. After outlining the techniques used in the study's investigations, he analyzed the tensions and prejudices that were found to exist between Protestants, Catholics and Jews in each of the ten cities examined, and gave his interpretation of possible means towards the improved inter-faith understanding and confidence which is, he thinks, the only basis by which further "self-segregation" among the faiths can be avoided, and by which cooperation in the fields of social action can be achieved.

Hobart Taylor, Jr., who was recently appointed executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Policy, and who also serves as the Committee's special counsel and special assistant to its chairman, Vice President Johnson, talked about the Committee's operations to date and its plans for future activities. He noted several significant reports which are to be published shortly, indicated the progress the Committee has made so far, and touched on several areas where they expect to concentrate their future efforts.

Organizational Activities : More than 500 professional workers in the field of intergroup relations are expected to attend the 16th annual conference of NAIRO (National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials) at the Sheraton Park in Washington, November 28 through December 1. The conference theme will be The Role of Government in Intergroup Relations: Federal, State and Local. Clearing House organizations will be welcome to send observers or representatives to the meeting. Further information about the program can be secured from the MAIRO office, 2027 Massachusetts Ave., N. W. -- 387-7050.

Arnold Feldman invited the Clearing House agencies to attend a meeting of the Washington Chapter, American Veterans Committee, at the YWCA on November 9, with Lee White, special assistant to the President, speaking off the record on "The Prospects for Executive and Legislative Action in the Civil Rights Field in the Next Two Years."

Executive Director,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth St., N W,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Leslie:

Thanks so much for the 50 copies of Albany for the Clearing House meeting last week. I do appreciate your generosity with your publications. They are invariably so extraordinarily good that I feel the Clearing House does its associated groups a real service in distributing them; and they think so too; all thanks to you.

Also: I should remind you now of the Southern Regional Council's annual subscription to the Clearing House, which is due this month.

As you know, the Council has been subscribing for a good many years at $25 per annum -- the standard rate set by our Administrative Committee as necessary to cover the costs of maintaining an agency on our mail list.

We have to close our books at the end of the year, so I hope it will be convenient for you to send the check before December 31.

We do appreciate all the help that you and the Council give the Clearing House so generously. And have I reminded you yet that our 15th annual conference is set for next March 28 and 29? I do hope you'll be able to make it.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

15th Annual Conference : Mr. Millenson requested that all interested organizations note now in their Bulletins or other publications the fact that the National Civil Liberties Clearing House will hold its 15th annual conference on March 28 and 29, at the Hotel Sheraton Carlton in Washington.

Program : Paul M. Rilling, newly-appointed executive director of the Commissioners' Council on Human Relations, who was formerly the director of field activities of the Southern Regional Council and executive director of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, spoke on "Is the South Really Changing?" He analyzed the temper of the South since the school desegregation decision of 1954; the effects of 1962's incidents of violence on the Southern press, politicians and public; and the need for a continuing pressure for desegregation from "Northern-minded" people. The southern "moderates," who, in an effort to preserve law and order accomplished so much through Save Our Schools, HOPE, and similar organizations, have now reached a point, he believes, where their aim to maintain stability and avoid conflict is in actuality a hope to maintain the status quo, and a barrier to further changes.

Charles T. Duncan, Principal Assistant United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, discussed "Arrests and Detention -- Lawful or Unlawful?", going into the needs of the community and the reflection of community opinion upon the attitudes of law-enforcement officials; the problems faced by the police in making arrests, in interrogatory techniques, and in developing evidence; the application of the "Mallory Rule;" and the difficulties of balancing the rights of the individual and the interests and desires of the community.

Current Material : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of current literature distributed at the meeting:

a) From the American Library Association, Justice William O. Douglas' monograph, Freedom of the Mind, published last month by the ALA and the Public Affairs Committee in their series of pamphlets, "Reading for an Age of Change."

b) From the American Jewish Committee, the latest of their annually-issued pamphlets, The People Take the Lead, summarixing progress in civil rights from 1954 through 1962.

c) From the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, two articles by William Stringfellow: Race, The Church, and the Law, reprinted from The Episcopalian; and Race, Religion and Revenge, reprinted from The Christian Century.

d) From the Jewish Labor Committee, The Plight of the Jews in the Soviet Union, reprinted from the Free Trade Union News.

e) The Slow Pace of Desegregation, by Walter G. Davis, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights, reprinted from the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

March 4, 1963.

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House will sponsor its 15th annual conference on civil liberties and civil rights on Thursday and Friday, March 28 and 29, at the Hotel Sheraton-Carlton in Washington. We cordially invite you to attend.

The conference program is both timely and important. Discrimination in housing and the responsibilities faced by government, the industry and the public head the agenda. Other sessions will deal with the Negro American's growing impatience for equality, and with the issue of the Constitution and public policy in church-state matters, with especial emphasis on the schools. And Justice William O. Douglas, whose pre-eminence in the fight for civil liberties needs no emphasis, will address us at our dinner meeting.

Meetings will be plenary throughout in order to afford a maximum degree of participation in the open discussion which is a major feature of every conference session.

If you will call the Clearing House office, we will be glad to provide you with extra copies of the program and registration blank for your friends and colleagues.

The Clearing House conferences are the only continuing meetings held in Washington on the national level that focus intensive inter-organizational discussion exclusively on the state of our civil liberties and rights. At last year's meeting, more than 130 agencies were represented. We hope that you will participate in this one; we look forward to welcoming you and to having the benefit of your own and your organization's views in our consideration of these issues that so deeply affect our country and us all.

Sincerely yours,

Roy H Millenson

Dear Mary Alice:

Attached are three copies of Les Dunbar's biographical data sheets, sent at his request.

Hope things go well with you. I miss Washington and all my friends there. By the way, I didn't forget to give you the pomegranate plant -- it perished in my basement from the lack of water. I didn't get a chance to tell you before I left.

Here's hoping you have a good Annual Meeting.

INSERT FOR PANEL DISCUSSION - March 29, 1963
National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference

What I am trying to suggest is that white Southerners still have the capacity, in regards to race, to be honest with themselves and with others. Let me repeat that what I am here talking about is psychological and spiritual health. White Southerners are today, as they have been throughout our history, the principal impediment to a sane race relations. Their influence is more than regional. I believe that a good case could be made for the proposition that Northerners have generally, deny it as they will, taken their cue in racial attitudes from the South. The dreary facts about southern prejudice and discrimination I do not have to recount; you know them too well. Reluctantly, I have to concede that one of the more important of recent essays is Gerald Walker's article in -- of all places -- the April issue of Cavalier magazine. Cavalier used a different title, but the one which Walker had submitted was more descriptive: he had called his piece "The Racial Inferiority of the White Southerner."

Dear Mary Alice:

We sent you the other day some biographical notes. I wish I could now forward an advance text, or at least promise one. You may remember, however, that when I accepted the invitation I warned you that I might not be able to have an advance text. I think now I had better just say that I cannot. I am faced with an April 15 deadline for the Notre Dame Lawyer. It looks impossible as is.

I shall, however, try to arrive on Thursday with at least a handwritten text. If you all, or maybe Potomac, could type it before Friday, I would be glad to turn it over.

Incidentally, you never did tell me how long I should talk.

All the best.

Sincerely yours,

Leslie W. Dunbar

Mr. Leslie W. Dunbar,

Dear Les:

Since you're on the Clearing House mail list, you will already have had a copy of our conference program (I'm enclosing a couple more for your files) -- but it's about time I told you a little more about it, isn't it?

As I said the day you brightened by agreeing to take part in the program, we want to make this a sort of assessment of where the Negro American stands, a century after emancipation; where he's going, what he wants and how he feels, -- his changing mood. In this frame, we've asked Roy to do an over-view, developing as well his ideas on the priorities, the most urgent problems, and the best hopes for major break-throughs. Farmer we have asked to assess the progress of the non-violent protest and to interpret the relationships between it and the other types of civil rights activity. Harold suggests that you might do an analytical view of the increasingly impatient mood of the Negroes, and the reactions to manifestations of this on the part of the majority group and its institutions.

Will you -- I hope -- be able to have an advance text? (It's such a help towards good press coverage.) And if you do, would there be any possibility of my getting a copy several days befor the conference, for mimeographing?

Also, may I please have three copies of your biographical notes?

I'm truly grateful to you for your participation in our meeting, and I'm looking forward to hearing you. And if there is anything I can do for you, will you let me know?

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Leslie:

Thanks for your note of March 20. I sympathize with the difficulties involved in the advance text question.

However, if you bring along a hand-written text when you arrive Thursday, we will be able to get it typed and duplicated for you.

Since I don't know what time you'll be arriving, I don't know just what to suggest. We will have a typist in the press room at the Carlton. However, if you get in fairly early and go over to Potomac first, perhaps they could type it there for you -- which would give you a chance to read and edit it before you go to the hotel, where my girl could cut stencils and get it mimeographed.

By now you will have had my letter of yesterday suggesting that all talks run from 15 to 20 minutes.

And I'm really looking forward to hearing yours.

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Les:

We are looking forward with great pleasure to your participation in the National Civil Liberties Clearing House conference.

It will be helpful if the program people for the session at which you are speaking will get together a little before the meeting starts.

Will you join the others in the Sheraton-Carlton's South Lounge — our press room — at 12:30 o'clock on Friday, March 29?

If you will stop at the conference registration desk in the lobby, one of the members of our committee will take you to the meeting-room.

I shall look forward to seeing you there.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

PS -- Margaret told me you were asking about length of the talks. I'm sorry I forgot to mention it to you before. We would like them to run about 15 to 20 minutes, so there will be plenty of time for audience discussion afterwards.

Also, Margaret tells me that there may be some faint hope that you can have an advance text. I'll keep my fingers crossedd

Dear Les:

In behalf of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House and of everyone who worked on our conference last week, I want you to know how very grateful we all are to you for coming to speak at the meeting, and for the truly outstanding talk you gave us.

Almost everyone seems to think that the session on "the impatient one-tenth" was the highlight of the whole conference. And the comments on your address have ranged from "most impressive" through "amazingly perceptive" to just plain old-fashioned "brilliant." I agree with all of them.

Your participation was an honor as well as a pleasure. All of us thank you most whole-heartedly.

With all best wishes,

Sincerely,

Next Meeting : Wednesday, June 5; 2 to 4 pm, at the Post's Community Room

Dear Les — Bingo! Mary Alice

Clearing House Granted Exemption As Educational & Charitable Agency : Mr. Millenson announced that the Internal Revenue Service, in a letter dated April 9, notified the National Civil Liberties Clearing House that it has been granted tax-exemption for donor-deductibility under Section 501 (c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, as an organization operated exclusively for charitable and educational purposes.

The ruling is retroactive to January 1, 1961. Under it, contributions to the Clearing House are deductible for income tax purposes, and bequests, legacies and gifts are deductible for Federal estate and gift tax purposes.

The chairman expressed the gratitude of the Clearing House to Attorney Edgar B. May, who is a specialist in tax law and who brought the Clearing House appeal to its present successful conclusion.

Nominating Committee Appointed : The meeting approved the chairman's appointment of the following Nominating Committee for officers for the 1963-1964 term: Russell Bradley, National Conference of Christians and Jews, chairman; David Brody, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; John Edelman, Textile Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO; Germaine Krettek, American Library Association; J. Francis Pohlhaus, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The committee will present its proposed slate at the June 5 meeting.

The chairman pointed out that the Clearing House constitution provides that any officer or Administrative Committee member who has held office for three consecutive one-year terms is ineligible for further office for at least one year. Noting that he himself is ineligible under this rule (although the constitution stipulates that each outgoing chairman shall be an honory member of the Administrative Committee for the year following his chairmanship), Mr. Millenson expressed the organization's thanks for the contribution made by the following who, since they have held office for the 1960, 1961 and 1962 terms, are not eligible for renomination at this time: Lawrence Speiser, American Civil Liberties Union, vice chairman for civil liberties; Louis Joghin, American Association of University Professors, vice chairman for intellectual freedom; and Germaine Krettek, American Library Association, Administrative Committee member.

1963 Conference Best Attended : The 15th annual Clearing House conference was attended by more individuals and organizations than ever before, Mr. Millenson reported. A total of 145 agencies were represented at the meetings. Conference receipts were $3083.50; its costs to date total $3209.09. After paying for the conference report, there will be an over-all deficit of $400 to $450. Since the meetings received nationwide coverage by press, television and radio, the benefits to the public's knowledge of civil liberties issues far outweigh the monetary loss, the chairman suggested.

Program : Herman Edelsberg, head of the Washington office of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, discussed "Federal Funds for Mississippi -- the Pros and Cons of the Civil Rights Commission's Recommendations"; and Father John F. Cronin, S.S., assistant director of the National Catholic Welfare Conference's Social Action Department, spoke on "The Human Rights Emphasis of the New Papal Encyclical." Their remarks will be summarized in an early issue of the Civil Liberties Bulletin.

Current Material : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of literature distributed at the meeting:

1) Interim Report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights (summarizing violations of constitutional guarantees in Mississippi, and recommendations for Federal action.)

Strange bedfellows

2) Adam, Where Art Thou? -- The reply of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to Congressman Adam Clayton Powell's recent attacks on it and other groups which include white persons among their officers and board members.

3) Mobilizing the American Conscience, by Dennis Clark, reprinted from Ave Maria; and Religion and Race, by Kyle Haselden, reprinted from the Christian Century; both articles discuss and interpret the National Conference on Religion and Race of last January. From the American Jewish Committee

4) Register Christian Opinion -- From the Friends Committee on National Legislation, a pocket directory of the members and committees of the Senate and House; also lists public affairs publications, religious journals, and organizational information sources.

Dear Leslie:

Gw d 12-2-63 M.M

Would it be possible for you to send me ~~75 copies of~~ your "Report L-46" -- the reprint of James A. Head's and Charles Zukoski's letter in the Birmingham News, entitled "At This Very Late Hour", to reach me by Thursday, December 5?

I'd like to distribute them at the Clearing House meeting that day. We're not certain about it yet, but it seems likely that Charles Morgan will be talking to us, and I thought the letter would be a very appropriate carry-home sidebar.

If you can, I'll be very grateful.

Best regards,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Mr. Lewlie W. Dunbar,
Executive Director,
Southern Regional Council,
5 Forsyth St., N W,
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Leslie:

I'm writing to remind you of the Southern Regional Council's annual subscription to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, which is due this month.

As you know, the Council has been subscribing for a good many years at $25 per annum -- the standard rate set by our Administrative Committee as necessary to cover the costs of maintaining an agency on our mail list.

Standard subscriptions such as this provide a very large part of the Clearing House budget, and are tremendously helpful to the maintenance of our program.

Now that we are tax-exempt for donor-deductibility, however, a number of our similarly-exempt organizations have felt free to increase the amount of their support of the Clearing House work. If the Southern Regional Council were inclined to do so, we'd be most grateful.

However, as I think you're aware, we're already grateful to the SRC for its long-time help and co-operation with the Clearing House -- and to you personally for the friendship and encouragement you've given us, as well as for your still well remembered talk at our conference last March. (The 1964 meeting, incidentally, is set for March 19 and 20. I hope you'll be there.)

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

O'Shea, New England; Charlotte Meacham, Philadelphia; Joy A. Simonson, Washington Home Rule Committee; Robert E. Jones, Unitarian-Universalist Fellowship for Social Justice; A.H. Holland, Jewish Labor Committee; Rev. John Bayley Jones, Mrs. Alice Edgerton, Clarence Fisher, Raoul Kulberg, Penelope Wright; Mary Alice Baldinger for the office.

Next Meeting : Thursday, February 6, at the Community Room.

Conference Notes : Mr. Fleming asked those present to arrange for their organizational news memos or bulletins to note, at an early date, that the National Civil Liberties Clearing House will sponsor its 16th annual civil liberties conference on March 19 and 20 at the International Inn in Washington.

Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg will speak at the conference dinner meeting on March 19, he announced. Other conference sessions will concentrate on the civil rights bill, on the question of civil disobedience, and on the civil liberties issues epitomized by the Dallas tragedy and its aftermath.

Voter Registration Information : This year, for the first time, residents of the District of Columbia are eligible to vote in the presidential primaries and election. Mr. Fleming noted that all previous registrations have been cancelled and that everyone who wants to vote must register, either at the District Building, where Room 8 is open Mondays through Fridays from 8:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., or at their precinct offices, which will be open on a week-end schedule, on Fridays from 1 to 9 p. m., and Saturdays from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m., January 31 and February 1; February 29 and 29; and March 6 and 7, 13 and 14, and 20 and 21. To vote in the Democratic and Republican primaries, which will be held on Tuesday, May 5, voters must register by March 21.

Program : Charles Morgan, Jr., the Birmingham, Ala., lawyer and civic leader who shocked the South last September when, in a speech delivered after the Sunday School bombing in which four young girls were killed, he placed the responsibility for the outrage upon the whole white community, spoke on "The Appeasement of Our Time." He discussed the failure of the liberals, moderates and "nice people" of Birmingham to oppose the forces of lawlessness and violence, and the historical, psychological, economic and educational conditions that have led to the city's current crisis. Only a total national effort, he believes, can re-create Birmingham. Mr. Morgan, who has joined the staff of the American Association of University Professors in Washington as associate counsel, has just completed a book, A Long Way Home, to be published this Spring by Harper and Row.

James H. Heller, secretary of the National Capital Area Civil Liberties Union, spoke on "Civil Liberties and Poverty," going into the many ways in which the poor, simply because of their poverty, are deprived of the constitutional rights that more prosperous citizens tend to take for granted -- the right to privacy, the right to freedom of speech and assembly, the right to equal protection of the law. He particularly emphasized welfare practices and procedures in the District of Columbia.

Current Material : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of literature distributed at the meeting :

1) Report on Massachusetts : Housing in Boston. By the Massachusetts Advisory Committee to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, this maps the patterns and practices of discrimination in Boston and describes the measures being taken against it by private groups and organizations and by the law through the Massachusetts Fair Housing Act. It also presents recommendations for additional action.

2) The White Christian. The December, 1963, issue of Social Progress, the monthly publication of the Office of Church and Society of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., is entirely devoted to articles by white and Negro religious leaders on the attitudes and the responsibilities of the white churchman on inter-racial relations in today's situations.

3) The People Take the Lead. This is the American Jewish Committee's annual record of progress in civil rights. The 52-page pamphlet covers the ten years from 1954 to 1964 with summations of administrative, court, legislative and voluntary action toward equality on the national, state and community levels.

4) The Vanguard. The publication of the Lutheran Human Relations Association of America, Vol. 10, No. 8, carries several special reports on church and race, with particular emphasis on Birmingham.

5) The American Book Publishers Council's Freedom-to-Read Bulletin for Fall, 1963, presents detailed reports on current developments in the area of censorship in schools, libraries, the courts and legislatures throughout the country.

Dear Friend:

A note to remind you -- the 16th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held at the International Inn here on Thursday and Friday, March 19 and 20, is less than two weeks away.

Most of the invited organizations have already sent in the names of their representatives, and we anticipate that this will be the largest and most stimulating conference that the Clearing House has ever held.

However, there are a number of groups which we know plan to be represented, but whose registrations have not yet been received.

We are attaching an extra copy of the registration form for the convenience of these agencies, in case the previous one, which was sent out with the conference program last month, may have been mislaid.

If you have already sent in your reservations, please disregard this letter. If you have not, the Clearing House staff will be most grateful if you will fill out the accompanying form and return it as soon as possible.

We look forward to having you with us.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

The Literature Committee for the 16th Annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held here March 19 and 20, invites your organization to bring its publications to the attention of the conferees.

The Committee is arranging for the distribution of literature related to the areas of Clearing House concern -- civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom and human rights. We are especially interested in material on work towards equality in employment, housing, voting, education and public accommodations; intergroup relations, freedom of thought, speech, belief and association; academic freedom; the administration of justice; and studies of the effects of extremist groups on individual liberties.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we ask you to send us between 50 and 100 copies each of not more than three pieces of cost-free literature which you consider timely and related to the areas described above. Please send only substantive material, as most of those attending the conference are familiar with the organizational field, so promotional brochures are often wasted.

We do not have facilities for posters or displays, and we cannot undertake responsibility for material for which a charge must be collected.

Your litrature should be mailed so as to assure delivery on or before Monday, March 16, to:

National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

We will welcome your cooperation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your materials to the attention of the wide inter-organizational audience which the conference offers.

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House cordially invites you to attend its 16th annual conference on civil liberties and civil rights, Thursday and Friday, March 19 and 20, at the International Inn in Washington.

The conference program will focus on some of today's most pressing questions in the fields of individual rights and freedoms. The civil rights bill -- and what the Nation needs beyond legislation -- heads the agenda. Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg will address the March 19 dinner meeting, on Liberty and Equality under the Constitution.

Other sessions will offer an appraisal of direct action and the varied strategies of the protest movement, and a discussion of the controversial constitutional problems that were highlighted in the dreadful time of President Kennedy's assassination, including the troublesome conflicts between freedom of the press and the right to a fair trial.

Meetings will be plenary throughout in order to afford a maximum amount of participation in the floor discussion which is a major feature of every conference session.

Your program and registration form are enclosed. If you will call or write the Clearing House office, we will be glad to provide you with additional copies of both for your colleagues and friends.

The Clearing House conferences are the only continuing meetings held in Washington, on the national level, that annually focus inter-organizational discussion exclusively on the state of our civil liberties and rights. At 1963's meeting over 140 agencies were represented, and we expect even more to attend this year. We hope that you will participate in this one; we look forward to welcoming you and to having the benefit of your own and your organization's views in our consideration of these issues that are so vitally important to our country and us all.

Sincerely yours,

Harold C. Fleming

Program : John McKee Pratt, who worked through the summer in the deep South as counsel for the National Council of Churches' Commission on Religion and Race and a vice-president of the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee, discussed the results of the Mississippi Summer Project. He felt that much had been achieved, through the Freedom Schools, the work for voter registration, the establishment of community centers, and the enrollment of 63,000 in the Freedom Democratic Party and the effect of this at Atlantic City. The presence of the Federal Government, he said, had been influential in stimulating some moves towards compliance with the civil rights law, and in improving the conduct of state and local law officers. He thought that many of the State's Negroes had gained a new sense of their own identity and importance, and would have a growing voice in the development of their own future; and that the whites had gained, as well, through some awakening to a realization that it would be possible to live in an integrated society. The major need for the future, he believes, is for the civil rights forces to widen their base of operations in order to enlist the support of the middle and upper-income Negroes of the State - the clergy, the professional and business men, and the unionized Negroes of Southern Mississippi, and to develop leadership able to fill the positions in city and community life which are beginning to open up. Mississippi is starting to learn, he concluded; but the world outside it much continue its efforts if the people there are to accept the lesson that we all have to live together in decency and dignity.

Dr. K. T. Olson, legislative assistant to Senator Maurine Neuberger, spoke on "The Radical Right in the Current Campaign." He emphasized the danger of applying labels and the difficulty of establishing clean-cut definitions in the area of political philosophy, and said that the clearest distinction between extremism of the right and honest conservatism lies in activities rather than in beliefs. He feels that so far the radical right's greatest successes have been achieved in local civic and political situations. In the community, he said, the most damaging effects of this may be an increasing difficulty in persuading good responsible people to run for public office, and a decreasing of the public's confidence in its elected officers.

Current Materials : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of material distributed at the meeting (1637 Massachusetts Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

Civil Rights: Facts vs. Fiction

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 is a new bill of rights for everyone, regardless of race, creed or color.

This basic fact has been overlooked, ignored or distorted by those who are opposed to equal rights for anyone.

This is—in capsule form—what the act provides:

JOBS: Starting in July 1965, discrimination and segregation in employment, or in unions, is forbidden. Complaints will be processed through state agencies; the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission acts only if a state fails to act.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS: Effective at once, every hotel, restaurant, theater or other facility catering to the general public must do exactly that. Thirty-one state laws, already in effect have even stronger provisions.

SCHOOLS: The Attorney General of the United States has greater power to implement the Supreme Court decision of 1954 prohibiting segregation in public schools.

VOTING RIGHTS: Both the federal courts and the Attorney General are instructed to make sure registration and voting rights are safeguarded under uniform, reasonable standards.

There are other provisions in the law; a detailed analysis is available free of charge from the AFL-CIO. But these are the basic points.

Enemies of civil rights, enemies of labor, enemies of democracy itself are spreading lies about the terms of the act in order to play upon the fears of homeowners, parents, employers and workers. Here is the truth about the kind of lies that are told:

FICTION: "If you sell a house, you have to sell to a Negro."

FACT: The AFL-CIO believes that discrimination in housing should be ended. But there is no reference whatever to housing in the Civil Rights Act.

FICTION: "Your children will be sent out of the neighborhood to some Negro school."

FACT: Local school boards in some cities, operating under state and local statutes, have instituted pupil transfers in an effort to achieve better racial balance in their schools. But there is no such requirement in the Civil Rights Act, which provides only that schools must not be segregated.

FICTION: "A certain number of Negroes will have to be hired on every job, even if white people have to be fired to make room for them."

FACT: This is a myth. The law will properly put an end to discrimination in employment —including discrimination in seniority systems. But it does not in any way interfere with existing job rights. There are no "quotas" established. As a matter of fact, "inverse discrimination," even if intended to offset past evils, would actually be a violation of the law.

In short, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, in letter and spirit, is dedicated to justice—to the principles of democracy and fair play which are in the highest American tradition.

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House cordially invites you to attend its 17th annual conference on civil liberties and civil rights, on Thursday and Friday, April 1 and 2 at the new Washington Hilton Hotel, Connecticut Avenue and Columbia Road, N.W., in Washington, D.C.

The conference program is timely and important. Governor LeRoy Collins, director of the Community Relations Service, will discuss the achievement of full civil rights through The New Federalism at the dinner meeting on April 1. Other conference sessions will center upon the question of the poor man's chance for equal justice under law and today's expanding efforts to protect his rights; on "one man - one vote" and the extension of equality of the ballot; and on the civil rights goals that still remain to be won, in the wake of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Plenary meetings throughout the conference will offer a maximum degree of participation in the open floor discussion that is a major feature of every conference session.

A program and registration form are enclosed for you. If you will call or write the Clearing House office, we will be glad to send you additional copies of both for your colleagues and friends.

The Clearing House conferences are the only continuing meetings held in Washington, on the national level, that focus intensive inter-organizational discussion solely upon the state of our civil liberties and rights. In 1964 over 150 agencies attended, and we expect even more to be represented this year. We hope you will be with us. We look forward to welcoming you, and to having the benefit of your view -- and your organization's -- in our consideration of these issues that so vitally affect our country and us all.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Next Meeting : Noting that July, with the start of the vacation season, brings a diminution of attendance at meetings, the acting chairman raised the question of whether a Clearing House session should be scheduled for that month. The matter was left in abeyance; if developments indicate the desirability of a meeting, it will be arranged and announced at the call of the chairman.

Report of Nominating Committee for 1965-66 : The meeting accepted the report of the Committee on Nominations for 1965-66, which was presented by the chairman, Frances Neely of the Friends Committee on National Legislation. A copy of the committee's slate, which also outlines procedures of elections, is attached.

Program : Wiley A. Branton, recently-appointed executive secretary of the President's Council on Equal Opportunity, discussed the aims and program of the Council, which was established last February by President Johnson to co-ordinate the civil rights activities of all the Federal departments and agencies, and which is headed by Vice President Humphrey. Mr. Branton, who has been the director of the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education Project and the executive director of the Council for Civil Rights Leadership and Committee for Welfare, Education and Legal Defense, stressed the deep personal commitments of the President and the Vice President to the achievement of full equality. Working directly under Mr. Humphrey, he said, the Council will act as a stimulus to the various government agencies, rather than itself assuming the substantive work of enforcement. While he expects that it will deal with broad policy questions rather than with specific complaints, its staff will be interested in factual reports of discrimination.

Miss Anita Bellamy, speaking on "Help for the Poor: The Bedrock Problems," outlined the concrete difficulties she encountered as the director of The Girard Street Project"-- the neighborhood block improvement program undertaken by All Souls Unitarian Church in Washington in an effort to aid those who live in the slum area adjoining it -- and in her major work as director of the Washington Urban League's Neighborhood Center. She related work to improve housing, education and job opportunities to the personal and environmental problems of the poor, and emphasized that every individual and every area raise different questions and require differing approaches.

Current Material : The office will send out on request its remaining copies of literature distributed at the meeting:

The Girard Street Project -- The report recently published by All Souls Unitarian Church on the undertaking which Miss Bellamy directed, and an evaluation of the guide-lines gained from its experience.

Fair Employment Is Good Business -- A compilation prepared by the Potomac Institute of examples of fair practices for Title VII (Equal Employment Opportunity) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This booklet describes changing patterns in the North as well as in the South, and outlines a variety of approaches that various agencies have developed in offering new opportunities for Negro workers.

New South for February, 1965. The publication of the Southern Regional Council presents two important articles: Battle of the Books, in which Charles Morgan, Jr., the American Civil Liberties Union's Southern Project Director, discusses censorship based on racism as well as on other prejudices in America's libraries; and To Register and Vote in Mississippi, by Wiley A. Branton, derived from the testimony he presented as director of the SRC's Voter Education Project at the Mississippi hearings of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Mr. Paul Anthony,
Director,
Southern Regional Council,

Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Paul:

Your report on the double standard of justice through the South hit beautifully in the New York Times and the Washington Post. From the stories I gather that it's likely to be a real mover and shaker.

Any chance of your letting me have 75 copies for the Clearing House? Our next meeting is November 5. One speaker will be Stephen Pollak, first assistant in the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division. If I could give our people your report at the same time, the combination ought to develop some lively -- and I would hope productive -- discussion.

Do what you can for us, won't you?

And all my best,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Morgan Says:

Mockery of Justice for Negroes Worse Than Violence of KKK

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m., EST.)

AT THE SECOND Liuzzo murder trial in Hayneville, Alabama, 11 prospective jurors said they thought white civil rights workers were "inferior" to other whites.

Their response reflected the obstacles in the path of fairness in trying to prosecute for a crime involving a racial issue. But this was only the tip of the viciously chilling iceberg of dual justice that has operated for generations against the Negro, especially in the South.

Morgan

In a sense this mockery of the judicial system is more serious and damaging than the violent crimes of the Ku Klux Klan now being exposed in a congressional investigation, because the duality is so widely accepted as a fact of life. The Southern Regional Council and the American Civil Liberties Union have just issued a special report labeled "An Indictment of Southern Justice."

To get the full measure of the distortion of democracy for one-tenth of the nation's population—20 million Negroes—thoughtful citizens everywhere must read the documented description of this nightmare as carefully as they follow the diabolical depredations of the KKK. The report, as its title indicates, concentrates on southern justice. But anybody who has ever spent any time in a police station or a courtroom in almost any non-southern community knows how a Negro is almost invariably and automatically prejudged by his color there too.

"The nation, for some reason," says the report in blistering accusation, "has not yet learned to deal with the corruption of justice by racism."

Yet, it observes pointedly, "if the public could ever plead ignorance to the double standard of justice in the South . . . that time is past."

"An FBI informant testifies that he is in the same car with three Ku Klux Klansmen as they shoot to death Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, a Detroit housewife, on an Alabama highway. The jury does not convict the first defendant charged in the crime—not even of manslaughter. While waiting for a new trial the Klansmen rush off to a Klan rally in North Carolina to sign autographs, openly confident that any new trial will rights workers at midday. . . . A seminarian dies at once and . . . a priest is critically wounded. The trial, reportedly, turned into a circus, with Mr. Coleman not simply acquitted but almost proclaimed a hero."

These two cases "were not isolated incidents, and Negroes can only reflect bitterly when white men—southerners and northerners alike—advise them, as they often do, to . . . take their grievances into courts."

". . . From the sit-in demonstrations of 1960 through the spring of 1965, at least 26 Negroes and white civil rights workers died at the hands of the racists in the South. Only one of the assailants was sentenced to prison, and he for 10 years. During the same period, 'justice' was dispensed with in double measure when white men were slain by Negroes. Two white segregationists died in the aftermath of racial demonstrations. Four Negroes went to prison, one . . . for life."

THEN THE REPORT underlines this point: "The danger today is not that the public will fail to know about the double standard of justice, but that the public will think it limited only to civil rights cases. . . .

"In many areas of the South, dual justice is a standing abuse to all Negroes—the maid, the undertaker, the field hand, the schoolteacher, the minister. It exists from birth to death and the knowledge of it comes so early that a man may think he received it in his genes. It exists in the day-to-day brushes with 'the law': the policeman on his beat, at traffic court. . . .

"It provokes desperation among Negroes, shakes their faith in democracy, causes them to shun the policemen and the courts as enemies. More than any other factor it is responsible for what the white South views as increasing 'radicalism' and 'anarchy' in the rights movement."

What is gained if the violence of the Klan is curbed and violent protests of frustrated Negroes against injustice in the courts rise? There are, the report concludes, two clear but not quickie ways to rectify this savage double standard:

The President must stop appointing men to federal bench who owe their political careers to the same system that perpetuates dual justice. And the Justice Dept. must begin to enforce a law—passed in 1875—making exclusions from juries by race a federal crime.

"Dual justice survives," says the report bitterly, "because Presidents continue to treat federal judgeships as political rewards . . ., because the Justice Dept. fails to exercise the power . . . to correct abuses . . ., because the judicial network, federal, state and municipal, is still one of the most segregated institutions in America. It survives through a built-in discrimination in the selection of juries, state and federal, and through

by Willard Shelton

"Many of the patterns and the myths of presidential elections [were] broken" in 1964. . . . "The notion that a . . . nominee could not come from a small state was proved false. So was the belief that there exists a huge, silent vote which had not voted previously but which, under the right conditions, would emerge as a new balance of power in presidential elections."

THE SOURCE of these statements is the Republican National Committee, Ray C. Bliss, chairman. Mr. Bliss has never been accused of an adolescent refusal to face facts. The unhappy facts of the GOP's nomination of Sen. Barry Goldwater last year are therefore presented in the form of a summary report, with statistical support, by the national committee's Research Division.

The language of the report is flat, its tone unemotional. The facts it summarizes are devastating.

The nomination of Goldwater, a "real Republican," did not bring out a "huge, silent vote" that had sulked at home when the GOP nominees could be called "me-too" candidates. Instead, the proportion of voting-age population that went to the polls dropped from 63.2 percent in 1960 to 62 percent in 1964.

The nomination of Goldwater did not arouse overwhelming national enthusiasm for his personality, philosophy, beliefs and style. Former Vice Pres. Nixon, the GOP candidate in 1960, won 49.9 percent of the popular vote. Goldwater got 38.7 percent.

There are other standards of measurement. Goldwater, together with his running-mate, former Rep. William E. Miller, ran behind the rest of the Republican ticket. The top candidates received 97 percent of the national Republican vote as compiled from returns in the congressional districts, 88 percent of the vote for Republican candidates for the Senate.

Nixon in 1960 was a source of strength to other GOP candidates instead of running behind them. He got 119 percent of the total vote for GOP candidates for the House and just under 117 percent of the total vote for senatorial candidates.

In the nation's major suburban areas the Republican vote fell off by 11.9 percent, representing "a vote loss to the Republican Party of over 1.5 million votes." In the central cities to which these suburbs are attached "the Republican vote fell another 1.5 million votes."

These figures must be a source of pain to the chairman, Mr. Bliss, author just four years earlier of a "Big Cities" strategy that he presented formally to the party's leaders with an urgent recommendation that policies and programs be framed to increase, rather than dissipate, potential strength in major metropolitan areas.

THE GOP National Committee's factual report goes on remorselessly.

The Goldwater-Miller team's "percentage of the major-party presidential vote was 38.7 percent, compared to 37.8 percent in 1936." The election of 1936 was the low point of the party since the Civil War, representing Alf Landon's defeat by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Weakness at the head of the ticket resulted in Republican losses up and down the line, the report indicates.

"The 89th Congress opened with two fewer Republican senators than there were at the close of the 88th Congress. . . . Of more than 20 Republican senators elected in 1952—the last year of Republican congressional control—only six seats were Republican 12 years later."

The GOP won 10 seats in the House—seven of them in southern states—but lost 48 for a net loss of 38. "Not since the 75th Congress, elected in 1936, have Republican numbers in the House

Republicans picked up three state governorships while losing two, for a net gain of one. But they sustained "a net loss of 493 seats" in the state legislatures compared to the 1962 results.

The GOP ticket failed to get majorities among women voters, the college-educated, business and professional workers, white-collar workers and farmers—five groups that have been the party's foundation of strength.

Add Force of Law:

Rights Commission Guidelines Strengthen Fight on Job Bias

GUIDELINES recently issued by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, spelling out discriminatory employment practices as violations of the Civil Rights Act, will be valuable aids in ending such practices, an AFL-CIO spokesman declared.

Adding the force of law to moral persuasion will strengthen efforts to end race-based union membership, seniority procedures and job assignments, said Donald Slaiman, director of the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Civil Rights, as he was interviewed on Labor News Conference, weekly public service program aired over the Mutual radio network.

Slaiman reiterated AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's pledge of full cooperation in bringing about compliance with the guidelines. He said that while there has been "excellent progress" in merging segregated locals, most of those remaining are "hard core situations." The federation will not only urge merger of such locals "on the basis of AFL-CIO policy," but will put them on notice that they are violating the law and are subject to prosecution, he declared.

"Segregation in unions is no better than segregation in schools," Slaiman observed, "and we hope the problem will be eliminated within a short period of time."

HE CITED labor's support for proposals to give the EEOC authority to issue cease-and-desist orders in addition to its investigative and conciliation functions. However, he added, the commission will be able to do "a good deal of effective work" in the meantime.

He said the commission's present budget limitations present "a real problem" and if the expected backlog of complaints develops, it will be "good justification" for a budget increase.

Reporters questioning Slaiman of the AFL-CIO program were Simeon Booker, Washington bureau chief of Ebony Magazine and other Johnson Publications, and Adam Clymer of the Baltimore Sun's Washington bureau.

GUIDELINES recently issued by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission will be valuable aids in ending discriminatory employment practices, Dir. Donald Slaiman (center), of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, told reporters Simeon Booker, left, of Ebony magazine and Adam Clymer of the Baltimore Sun on Labor News Conference, weekly AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Next Meeting : Thursday, December 2, at 2 p. m. at the Post's Community Room.

Program : Stephen J. Pollak, First Assistant in the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, speaking on "What Justice Is Doing and Hopes to Do in Enforcing the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act," discussed the effects to date of both laws and cited changes that have been brought about by them, both through voluntary compliance and through the Department's enforcement activities. He cited a 30% increase in the number of Negroes registered, either with the aid of Federal registrars or by state officials. The Justice Department, he said, will continue to encourage voluntary compliance but will insist that compliance be full and complete. He also commented upon the refusal of Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana to register on their own books voter applicants who have qualified before Federal examiners under the Voting Rights Act and the court moves that aim at an early test of the Act's constitutionality, and on the Justice Department's involvement in the Lowndes Country, Ala., jury participation case. On the Civil Rights Act, he discussed the activities in which Justice is engaged and some of the problems it faces, particularly in the areas of employment, the schools, and Federally-aided programs.

Henry Schwarzschild, Executive Director of the Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union — an agency co-operatively established by several civil rights organizations to enlist lawyers to serve in the South on a voluntary basis, providing legal help and counsel to persons engaged in achieving constitutional rights -- discussed "The Legal Needs of the Civil Rights Movement." He described another face of the South -- the hard-core areas of resistance, intransigeance and violence. He held that the government is operating under two misconceptions: the first, voluntary compliance, which he called almost totally lacking, noting that many of the law officers who are supposed to lead in compliance are themselves actively working to deny constitutional rights to Negro citizens; and the second, the doctrine of "consensus" which, he said, frequently operates to weaken or nullify enforcement of the law. He placed a different emphasis on the need for further legislation, stressing the desirability of stronger enforcement of existing laws; more Federal registrars operating not in the court-houses (which he called "the citadels of the rednecks") but in community locations; and reform of the whole area of the administration of justice in the South. Southern Negroes, he said, need protection for their families, their property and their lives; but they also need assurance that there is "another America" and whites who are their friends and will work to help them.

Current Material : The office will send out its remaining copies of literature distributed at the meeting on request (1637 Massachusetts Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C. - 20036):

1) THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 1965 -- The U. S. Commission on Civil Rights' new pamphlet which presents a summary of the Act's provisions, along with its full text.

2) SOUTHERN JUSTICE : AN INDICTMENT -- A special report by the Southern Regional Council, prepared with the co-operation of the American Civil Liberties Union, and dealing with the double standards of justice prevalent through the South.

3) CIVIL RIGHTS AND HUMAN RIGHTS IN EDUCATION -- The report of the conference of the National Education Association's Commission on Professional Rights and Responsibilities, which includes talks presented by Clarence Mitchell of the N A A C P, Otis Finley of the Urban League, Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel, Buell Gallagher, president of the City College of New York, and numerous others.

4) LOS ANGELES : WHY? -- Newsweek's detailed study of the Watts riots and their causes and likely consequences, reprinted by the Citizens Crusade against Poverty.

5) From the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, its statement on SEGREGATED JUSTICE and the conduct of Southern courts, and reprints of newspaper reactions to the acquittal of Thomas Coleman in the killing of ESCRU worker Jonathan Daniels.

Mr. Paul Anthony,

Dear Paul:

I see that it's time for me to write to remind you of theSouthern Regional Council's annual subscription to the National Civil Liberties Clearing House for 1965-1966, which is due this month.

You'll remember, I think, that the SRC had subscribed for a good many years at $25 per annum -- our standard organizational rate -- but that last year you waved your magic wand around and got this increased to $50.

Considering the tight budget on which the Clearing House operates, this was a real help to us towards covering our production and mailing costs. It would be lovely if it could be managed again.

In either event, we're grateful for your help in the Clearing House work, and for all the encouragement and co-operation you've given us so generously over the years.

With all my best wishes for a great 1966 to you and to the SRC,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Mary Alice:

The report referred to in the New York Times was a part of our November New South, which, incidentally, had to be held up because of the difficulty in checking out the facts. The requested number of copies are being sent to you under separate cover.

This month we change New South to a quarterly of some 100 pages per issue. We are excited about this, and will be interested in your reaction.

Best.

Dear Paul:

I am impressed by the Times story of January 31 about your new report on race-related violence. It sounds like just the sort of compilation that has been badly needed.

If you've got plenty, could we please have 75 copies for distribution at the next Clearing House meeting?

If that's too much to ask for, could it be possible for me to have 5 copies for the Clearing House library and files?

Hope 1966 is going great for you. Here we're just pulling out of the blizzard's leavings and are feeling like it's 1898 instead. . . . That might not be too bad at that, everything considered.

All the best,

Sincerely,

Project That Registered 700,000 Again Seeks Negro Voters in South

By Robert E. Baker
Washington Post Staff Writer

A project that registered 700,000 Negro voters in the South two years ago has been reactivated to help finish the job.

The Southern Regional Council in Atlanta announced that its new Voter Education Project is aimed at the two million unregistered Negroes in 11 Southern states as well as at encouraging full citizenship participation by them and the 2.3 million Negroes already registered.

The new project, financed by the Field, Taconic and Ford Foundations, has the endorsement of both the Democratic and Republican National Committees.

As with the first project operated by the Southern Regional Council in 1962-64, the new project will work with five major civil rights organizations: The NAACP, CORE, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and the Urban League.

But this time the project will also deal directly with local groups, whether affiliated with the national organizations or not. And, through citizenship and leadership training programs, it will seek to overcome the apathy uncovered in its first project.

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the new project, said that Negro registration in the South so far has been "largely middle class enfranchisement."

"We need to reach down deeper into our communities and register people who have not been reached by our past efforts," he said.

"We need to remember that political participation does not end with registration. Too many Southerners do not vote because they do not know how to relate their vote to the subsistence issues of their lives."

The first project was headed by Wiley A. Branton, now a presidentially appointed special assistant to the Attorney General to see that the Voting Rights Act is effectively implemented.

The new project may have the effect of providing a unified target for organizations within the civil rights movement which have been characterized recently as having both financial and directional problems.

The project also fits the Johnson Administration's view that civil rights leaders and organizations should assume the role of persuading and educating Negroes to take advantage of the Voting Rights Act. But the Southern Regional Council, at times critical of Federal implementation of civil rights laws, can be expected to call upon the Justice Department if its project meets persistent resistance from local officials.

Mr. Paul Anthony,

Dear Paul:

If you have been reading your mail from the Clearing House, you know that at our upcoming conference we are having a session on Southern Justice and what should be done to cure its ailments, with Marian Wright, John Doar and Joe Rauh talking.

I*m looking for a suitable publication as background on this for our conference information kits, and your "Southern Justice = An Indictment" is the most suitable I know of.

Would you still have this in any quantity? I'd like 400 -- but could try to squeeze through with 300 if it's scarce.

If you've got them to spare, could you have them mailed to reach me by April 6? I've got to find volunteers to stuff the kits, and would like to have this done soon as possible.

Will you write me if you can or cannot give them to us? And if you cannot, can you suggest any other piece of literature along the same line-- or at least related to the southern justice area?

Thanks tremendously,

YOurs,

Mary Alice

Dear Paul:

Here is Baldinger the Beggar again.

Is there any chance you can give the Clearing House 75 copies of either or both your report on the Office of Education and Southern school desegregation in 1966 (which was described in a New York Times story on December 19), and the Voter Education Project's "What Happened in the South, 1966"?

I'd like to have them for our next meeting, January 12.

Will you let me know if I can expect them?

Meanwhile, my best wishes that 1967 will be your finest year yet.

Sincerely,

Dear Paul:

The Literature Committee for the 19th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held here March 21 and 22, invites your organization to bring its publications to the attention of the nearly 200 agencies that will be represented at the meeting.

We are arranging for the distribution of literature related to the concerns of the Clearing House and of the Conference -- civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom and human rights. We particularly want material that deals with work toward equality in all its aspects; urban problems, with emphasis on inter-group relations; civil liberties issues; and freedom of thought, speech and belief.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we ask you to send us 50 or 100 copies each of not more than three pieces of cost-free literature which is timely and related to the Clearing House interests. Please send only substantive material. (Most of our conferees are familiar with organizational work and so have little interest in promotional brochures.)

We will not have facilities for posters or displays, and we cannot take responsibility for any material for which there is a charge.

Please mail your material so as to assure delivery by Monday, March 13, to:

National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

We will welcome your co-operation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the wide inter-organizational audience which the Conference will offer.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Wright

Dear Friend:

The National Civil Liberties Clearing House invites you to attend its 19th annual conference on civil liberties and civil rights, on March 21 and 22 at the Hotel Shoreham in Washington, D.C.

The program for the conference is attached. The topics it outlines are controversial, meaningful and timely. Acting Attorney General Ramsey Clark will speak at the dinner meeting on March 21. Discussion sessions will focus on the tortuous questions that confront us in this time when civil rights emphasis is shifting from legal equality to reforms that reach for economic and social equality; on the precarious state of individual privacy in this electronic age; and on the corrosive effects of today's spreading extremism and racism upon our national life, and whether means can be found to counteract the increasingly dangerous alienation implicit in these trends.

There will be full opportunity for participation in the open floor discussion which is a major feature of every conference session.

The Clearing House conferences are the only continuing meetings held in Washington, on the national level, that annually focus interorganizational attention exclusively upon the state of our civil rights and liberties. Last year nearly 180 agencies participated, and we expect even more to be represented at this year's meeting.

We hope that you will be with us. The conference needs the benefit of your views -- and your organization's -- in its consideration of these issues that are so vitally important to all of us.

Sincerely,

Lawrence Speiser

Dear Mary Alice:

Thank you for your kind comments about my being on your Advisory Board. More importantly, thank you for asking me. I will try very hard to be of some help to you.

There is little I can add to the ideas reflected in the minutes of the Program Planning Committee. In fact, I think they have done a commendable job in bringing up the subjects of most importance. I would only wonder if this many areas can adequately be covered during this length of time. There are two things partially referred to by the committee that I would like to see receive more emphasis:

(1) There is no doubt in my mind that the country can afford both "guns and butter." While I deplore the cost of the war as well as other things about it, the fact remains we have this very costly expenditure and it is likely that it will continue for some time to come and, therefore, are the implications of the nation deliberatly turning its back on providing adequate financing for the needed domestic programs in which we have a particular interest? And, can anything be done about it?

(2) I think the whole black power business in its most negative and destructive form will create more and more problems for us and for the society as a whole. And, I think we need some sane, sensible commentary on this. At the recent NAIRO meeting James Farmer gave a very sound and rational analysis of what I think might be termed a healthy interpretation of black consciousness and self development. At our recent Annual Meeting Kenneth Clark gave what I think was a profound and courageous speech in which he linked the outspoken black power advocates as being the Booker T. Washingtons of the present time. It might be helpful for the Clearing House participants to be exposed to this kind of interpretation and thinking.

If Ken will every finish editing it we hope to rush his speech into print and, of course, I will see that you get a copy.

Enclosed is our annual contribution which, for once, you didn't have to remind me of.

With warm regards,

Sincerely,

Paul Anthony

Dear Paul:

I'm just delighted to hear from Fred Routh that you've agreed to be one of our Advisory Board members.

We're going to be mighty proud to have your name up in the top corner of our letterhead!

And now, since you are on the Advisory Board, can I ask you for a bit of Advice, please?

We are just starting to plan the program for our 1968 conference. I am enclosing a copy of the Program Committee's first minutes. Could you possibly find time to look through them and give me your opinion about which -- if any -- of them would make constructive conference discussion topics, or whether you can think of some other approach to the civil rights situation that would be more profitable?

The committee's next meeting, as you'll see, is Thursday, November 30. I'd surely be grateful to have your reaction by that day.

All the best,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

PROGRAM PLANNING COMMITTEE

1968 National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference

Attendance : The Program Planning Committee for the 20th annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House held its first meeting on Tuesday, November 21, 1967, at 1637 Massachusetts Ave., NW, with the following attendance: Jacob Clayman, Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO, Clearing House chairman; the co-chairmen of the Committee, Walter G. Davis, AFL-CIO Educatkon Department, presiding, and J. Francis Pohlhaus, N. A. A. C. P.; Marvin Braiterman, Unkon of American Hebrew Congregations; Anne Foss, American Jewish Congress; Robert E. Jones, Unitarian Universalist Association; Dr. John Turnbull, National Council of Churches. (Absent: Harold Fleming, Potomac Institute, and Frederick Routh, NAIRO.)

Next Meeting : THURSDAY NOVEMBER 30, at 3 p.m. at 1637 Mass. Ave., NW. (PLEASE CALL M.A.B. at Dupont 7-6300 to confirm your attendance.)

Conference Time and Place : The conference is scheduled for March 21 and 22, 1968, and we have reservations for the Hotel Washington Hilton.

Session Format : After reviewing the 1967 conference program and its format, the Committee decided to follow approximately the same arrangement and to aim at developing varying points of view on each topic, with the number of speakers for each session depending on what seems the best way to accomplish this. The need for getting responsible speakers of strongly divergent views was also stressed.

Anniversary Year : Mr. Clayman stressed the importance of the 1968 conference, both because it will mark the 20th anniversary of the Clearing House and because, as an election year, it is likely to see an exacerbation of civil rights and civil liberties problems.

Possible Dinner Speakers : The Committee felt that the dinner meeting should present an overview of civil rights and civil liberties in the past 20 years, covering the changes that have occurred, the points of significant progress or lack of it, and the problems ahead, and that the speaker should be someone who has been at the forefront of these issues. Suggested were:

Senator Paul H. Douglas Justice Thurgood Marshall Herblock

Vice President Humphrey should also be invited to speak, but because his schedule is always so uncertain, the dinner program should not be dependent upon him.

Possible Themes : Mr. Davis stresses that this first meeting was not expected to reach any decisions, but was aimed rather at broad preliminary discussion of areas that might be good bases for conference topics. He also noted that suggestions should be keyed to the situations we may be facing next Spring, so far as we can look ahead now to that time. Some of the first-round ideas considered overlap and would require sharpening and re-defining. Not in any order of choice, these included:

A) New alliances for urban and racial progress: the increasing concern of the private sector with the re-shaping of the urban environment and its growing involvement in inner-city programs; the Urban Coalition approach with its aim of utilizing the combined efforts of business, industry, labor, the urban political structure and private agencies to improve the condition of the urban poor. (Mrs. Baldinger summarized some programs already initiated by Ford, the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., and Chase Manhattan Bank. Mrs. Foss raised the question of compensatory treatment in employment, job training, education, housing. Mr. Braiterman felt such a session should include the critical position, advanced by J.K. Galbraith, that government may be trying to use the private sector to conceal its own unfulfilled responsibilities, and should emphasize what is not being done as well as what is.)

B) Today's racial cleavage, antagonisms and conflict : against the background of last Summer's riots and the pessimism about 1968, what is happening to civil rights in the light of the black power thrust, with its repudiation of democratic procedures and its totalitarian attitudes; the growing desire of the black community to run its own institutions, control its own establishments, operate through its own decisions without white help or involvement; the possible courses for white liberals; the question of maintaining inter-racial co-operation for the same goals, considering Negro desperation and white inflexibility. This would also include the question of whether urban violence can be controlled, and federal and private plans now being considered to attempt to control it.

C) Race and the mass media -- television, radio, newspaper and magazine treatment of race and racial issues and incidents; question of the impact of news media on the development of violence; changes in the influence of news methods, since the Negro poor rely mainly on radio and television as news sources; question of the responsibility to report a story objectively against the responsibility to help preserve the peace; this topic could also include textbook handling of Negroes and other racial and economic minorities. (NOTE : Subsequent to the meeting, FCC Commissioner Nicholas Johnson in a speech to a regional conference of the National Association of Broadcasters defined this issue as "What are you doing to encourage communication between the blacks and the whites in your community?" and held that broadcasting so far has done more to build walls than bridges between the races. He urged broadcasters to help make a "massive national effort to close the understanding gap which divides white Americans from black Americans." While in 1964 we had a conference session on The Lessons of Dallas : Threats to Fair Trial and Free Press, the present racial context seems to vary enough from that to make this a constructive topic now.)

D) The 1968 political campaign — a "cautionary preview" of the emerging issues, and the civil rights and civil liberties questions involved, such as black power and the white packlash and the methods of the extreme right and the extreme left; the probable meaning and effects of the Wallace campaign; the use of the electoral machinery and the electoral process; the best informed opinion we can find to forecast the civil rights and liberties outlook.

E) Dissent, in the context of the Viet Nam war, and its escalation to protest and to "resistance" through acts of civil disobedience; the relationship between the authority of conscience and the authority of the state; the rights and duties of a democratic moral man in a democratic society when he considers its actions or laws immoral; the factors in public philosophy that affect dissent and permit or restrict its expression; a definition of the boundaries of protest and of the government's responsibilities or duties when these are ignored or flouted. Among the issues the Committee discussed were those of counseling others to disobey the law; interference with the free speech and movement of others; official statements that differentiate between the right to express dissent and the propriety of exercising that right under certain conditions. It was emphasized that any discussion in this area would have to be confined to the civil liberties questions involved and could not extend to foreign policy matters.

F) Civil liberties in relation to sexual and social nonconformity, including the legal rights and status of homosexuals, birth control and abortion, problems of social drop-outs and a-social individual behaviour.

At the November 30 meeting, the Committee will make a selection of three topics for conference discussion from those outlined here or from any others that may be proposed. Members are asked to bring their suggestions for program personnel for the topics they favor.

Dear Paul:

Thanks so much for your good letter of November 27, and for:

1) Your suggestions for our 20th annual conference; the Program Planning Committee thought your ideas were very constructive and intends to incorporate them in the conference program.

2) Your lovely check for $150. I'm almost as pleased at your sending it without having been reminded as I am that you increased the SRC's contribution.

Kenneth Clark's talk at your annual meeting sounds very perceptive as well as brave. I look forward to reading it when you've got it published. Myself, I'd like to invite him to talk at our conference -- but of course that'll depend on how the committee finally works things out.

All the best ,

Sincerely,

Mary Alice

Dear Paul — any chance of your being able to come? I do hope so. Mary Alice

Dear Paul,

The Literature Committee for the 20th annual National Civil Liberties Clearing House Conference, to be held here March 21 and 22, invites your organization to bring its publications to the attention of the nearly 200 agencies that will be represented at the meeting.

We are planning the distribution of literature related to the concerns of the Clearing House and of the Conference -- civil rights, civil liberties, intellectual freedom and human rights. We especially want material dealing with every aspect of work toward equality; urban problems, with emphasis on inter-group relations; freedom of speech and thought and related civil liberties issues; extremism in relation to individual liberty; and the administration of justice.

If you wish to accept this opportunity, we ask you to send us 50 or 100 copies each of not more than three pieces of cost-free literature which is timely and related to the Clearing House interests. Please don't send promotional material, since most of our conferees are already well familiar with organizational programs.

We don't have facilities for posters or displays, and we cannot undertake responsibility for material for which there is any charge.

Please mail your material early enough to assure delivery by Monday, March 11, to:

National Civil Liberties Clearing House
1637 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

We will welcome your cooperation, and we are glad to be of service in bringing your publications to the wide inter-organizational audience which the Conference will offer you.

Dear Paul:

How I hope the warnings in your "Events at Orangeburg" will be heard and heeded!

This is just the sort of thing I would like to use in the background information kits we will be preparing for our conference.

If you have the report in large quantities, would it be possible for you to give me 350 for this purpose?

And if you can, would you have them forwarded as soon as possible?

Gratefully, as always,

Yours,

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

We join in inviting you to attend a major policy conference on housing problems facing minority groups, to be held in Washington on March 14 at the Hotel Statler. The purposes of the meeting are more fully described in the enclosed statement.

The actual expansion of segregated neighborhoods in the United States is a challenge we cannot ignore. We must plan now to meet this threat, if the advances of the past decade are not to be nullified.

Because of your special leadership position we are particularly anxious for you to participate. Would you please let us know at your earliest convenience whether you will attend.

CONFERENCE ON HOUSING PROBLEMS FACING MINORITY GROUPS
March 14, 1955
Hotel Statler Washington, D. C.

We believe that housing is increasingly becoming today's number one civil rights problem. Since the Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregation in the schools certain groups, fearful that the next step will be to end segregation in housing, have intensified their campaign for racially defined neighborhoods. If they are successful in establishing this "shiny new ghetto" pattern throughout the country, American children will continue to go to segregated schools, and the significance of the education decisions will have been nullified.

While these plans to ghettoize go ahead, failure of government housing programs to cope with the minority housing problem is resulting in further intensification of segregation.

If these trends are permitted to go unchallenged, segregated living may be established for generations to come. Now is the time to develop programs to assure democratic housing. We are therefore extending a personal invitation to you and other leading citizens and heads of national organizations to meet together in Washington at the Hotel Statler on Monday, March 14, at 10:00 a.m. to discuss the housing problems facing minority groups, and to arrive at concrete proposals for concerted action by all our organizations. The conference program is as follows:

Morning Session -- 10:00 a.m.

Discussion of the nature and dimensions of the problem, to be keynoted and led by Loren Miller.

Afternoon Session -- 2:00 p.m.

Development of a coordinated action program. Discussion will be led by George L-P Weaver and Algernon D. Black.

We hope you will make every effort to attend.

Dear Harold:

The enclosed is the first issue of Trends under my editorship. There's plenty of room for improvement, but I find myself in a state of amazement that I could produce the copy, do the lay-out, handle a New York printer, and direct the distribution after too many years away from this! Add to that the fact that I have scarcely scratched the surface on this exciting business of open occupancy housing, and then treat me gently.

But not too gently! Put this under your microscope when you can spare a moment, and do let me have the benefit of your advice.

Warm regards to you and the family.

TRENDS IN HOUSING

Published bi-monthly by

National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing

VOL. II NO. 4 JUNE-JULY 1958 $2 A YEAR

Levitt's NJ Town "For Whites Only"

Levittown No. 3 was launched on June 6 by builder William J. Levitt with a public announcement that New Jersey's largest private home development will fly a "For Whites Only" banner.

The planned community of 15,000 homes matches in size and investment its predecessors at Levittown, L. I., and Levittown, Pa., both of which Mr. Levitt describes as "white communities."

Levittown, Pa., was the scene of a nine days' reign of terror last August when William Myers, a Negro engineer, purchased a Levittown home from a private owner. Both pro- and anti-integration citizens agreed that Levitt's restrictive policy played a major role in the disturbance. (Trends, Sept.-Oct. 1957)

When a second Negro family recently moved into the Pennsylvania Levittown, authorities took a firm stand that no disturbances would be tolerated and the move was made without incident. The Myers family is living a normal suburban life. A number of nonwhite families now live in the Long Island development.

The projected New Jersey Levittown is situated in Burlington County, a completely rural area ten miles from Philadelphia and within commuting distance of Camden and Trenton. The homes will sell from $11,500 to $14,000.

FHA Involved

On June 6, the New York Times reported that long-term mortgages would be insured by the Federal Housing Administration. When asked about a N. J. law which bars discrimination on the basis of color or creed in government-insured housing, Levitt said, "It is neither applicable nor enforceable as far as we are concerned. We are standing pat." (N. Y. Herald Tribune, June 8, 1958)

Sales were started on June 8, when six sample homes were opened for inspec-

National Experts View Major US Housing Ills

Twenty-three years after the Federal Government first stepped into the housing picture, America is no nearer to solving its housing problem than when it began. Despite billions in Federal commitments, we are still a nation . . . of the great un-housed, mis-housed, or dis-housed, yearning to be re-housed.

CHARLES ABRAMS in U. S. Housing: A New Program.

With the country's attention drawn to the debate in Congress on the crucial 1958 omnibus housing bill, Trends called on a cross-section of nationally recognized housing experts to outline what they consider to be America's major housing problems and to suggest solutions.

Participating in the symposium were Charles Abrams, international housing authority and chairman of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination; Ben Fischer, Housing Director for the United Steelworkers of America; Reginald A. Johnson, Housing Director for the National Urban League; Madison S. Jones, Housing Director for the NAACP; Dr. Robert C. Weaver, author of The Negro Ghetto and other important works on housing, and New York State Rent Administrator; and Dr. William L. C. Wheaton, Director of the University of Pennsylvania's Institute for Urban Studies. Also participating was Gurney Breckenfeld, News Editor of House and Home, the Luce publication for the building industry, whose views are presented separately.

There was general agreement among the experts on three major points: 1) the housing shortage is unnecessarily becoming sharper, 2) the nation's housing problems are inseparable from the housing problems of minorities, and 3) the "no-man's land" is housing for middle-income families.

The Dilemma

The consensus among housing experts is that a minimum of 2 million new homes are needed each year to provide decent shelter for American families. In 1957, the total dwelling starts were slightly

1958 Housing Act Facing Struggle

On June 11, the Housing Act of 1958 emerged from the Senate Committee on Banking and Currrency with conflicting points of view calling it "a tricky mixture of good and bad news for private enterprise" (House and Home, July 1958), and "a new Bill of Rights to achieve housing for families of low income" (National Housing Conference, June 1958).

Over vigorous opposition of the Administration and real estate groups, the bill as reported out of the Senate committee included major boosts to public housing and urban renewal.

Public Housing. The bill provides for increased administrative responsibility by local housing authorities, including the responsibility for establishing rents and eligibility requirements. It calls for planning projects as part of well-balanced and protected neighborhoods, and of sound architectural patterns with the lowest feasible density.

Also, it provides that a tenant whose income increases may remain in his apartment through purchase or payment of non-subsidized rent, if private housing is not available. The bill authorizes 35,000 additional units and extends the present over one million, and the anticipated construction rate for 1958 is considerably lower.

Further, even those houses that are being built are not available to the majority of the people. Restrictive practices keep a sizable percentage of the citizenry out of the housing market. Moreover, a survey reported in the 1958 Housing Yearbook reveals that only one-fourth of the families in the U. S. could afford to buy the cheapest new 3-bedroom houses at the end of 1957.

¶ Dr. Wheaton pointed out that only the higher income families can afford new housing at present costs and on present terms. "As a result," he said, "one-third of the building industry is now idle and the repercussions of this depressed condition are felt throughout the economy."

Number One Problem

¶ Mr. Fischer: "You can't separate the problem of providing new housing at appropriate monthly costs from the problem of discrimination." Adequate housing is essential, he said, if discrimination is to be abolished and slum clearance is to be kept from becoming slum transference. "This," he continued, "is not only our Number One housing problem, but our Number One domestic problem."

¶ Dr. Weaver: "A basic issue now before the country is whether the government's aid to housing will be used to support construction of high-priced dwellings or employed to meet the needs of minorities, low-income and displaced families. Solution of this issue will go far in determining the degree to which our expressed goal of a decent home for every American family is realized in our life time."

¶ Mr. Jones cited FHA and VA assistance to builders who practice racial and religious discrimination as a major problem. Secondly, he pointed to the role of the Federal Government and municipalities in the urban renewal program. "Positive use of this program," he declared, "can be a boon to any community. Its negative use can result only in adding to and prolonging the present housing ills so apparent in every American city."

¶ Mr. Abrams found present formulas for home construction and lending "are simply not set up for the lower-income family, the middle-income family, the large family, the migrant, the slum dweller, the elderly—in fact, for any of the folk who need housing most."

¶ Mr. Johnson asserted the lack of knowledge of human problems has resulted in the critical displacement and re-housing dilemma. "Federal housing agencies," he averred, "should be more than just policemen of the many regulations essential to meet legislative requirements." He called on government to plan for democratic community rebuilding.

Some Solutions

There was also extensive agreement on proposed solutions. Priority was given to 1) increasing the total housing supply, 2) government action to assure an unrestricted housing market, and 3) a decisive rearrangement of financing terms for middle-income families.

Expansion of the urban renewal and redevelopment program, based on wise planning, revised relocation policies, and careful examination of workable programs was considered essential. It was suggested that the cost of urban renewal housing should be related to the needs of middle-income families.

Revision of the public housing program to include the use of more open and predominantly open sites, sale or continued rental of public housing units to over-income tenants, less emphasis on slum clearance and more on an increased housing inventory, positive steps to attain integration—all were termed vital.

Other proposals included Federal assistance to make possible more cooperative housing, and long-term loans with low interest.

Mr. Abrams said the time for a Department of Urban Affairs, with Cabinet rank, is long past due.

Industry Viewpoint

For an industry point of view, Trends made contact with Gurney Breckenfeld of House and Home. Mr. Breckenfeld stated that housing's hardest problems are sociological and political rather than technical. He called for fundamental reforms of archaic state and local laws "to let home building price itself back into the market." Mr. Breckenfeld stated that legislation in favor of better housing for everybody who can't afford it is idealistic, but "seems to create almost as many problems as it poultices."

"Every time Congress gives a new segment of the population some specially favored FHA terms or a call on Fanny May special assistance mortgages," declared the editor, "it penalizes everybody else in the nation."

"At the rate housing is headed," Mr. Breckenfeld concluded, "it may soon be in a Federal strait jacket—like agriculture."

Levittown, NJ "For Whites Only"

tion. Approximately 200 dwellings have been sold. Negro home seekers have been refused application forms, and a complaint has been filed with the N. J. Division Against Discrimination.

Protests of Levitt's discriminatory policy mounted in a matter of hours. Speaking for the NCDH board, Acting Chairman Algernon D. Black told the press: "We are shocked that, despite the New Jersey law, Mr. Levitt has publicly announced his intention to establish a racially-exclusive community. We look to the Federal Government to decline partnership in any undertaking which so manifestly violates both the spirit and the letter of the law."

The N. J. Assembly unanimously adopted a resolution rebuking Levitt and stating that "discrimination will not be tolerated within the borders of the state."

N. J. Senator Clifford P. Case, Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of NAACP, Fr. John LaFarge, founder of the Catholic Interracial Council, builder Morris Milgram, the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Community Relations Advisory Council, and many other organizations and individuals publicly urged both the Federal and state governments to take action, under existing laws, to stop the development of an all-white city in New Jersey.

Protest Meeting Held

More than 300 persons representing some 35 organizations held a protest meeting in Trenton on July 1. A permanent New Jersey Committee Against Discrimination in Housing was organized.

Despite the storm of protest, Levitt's corps of builders moved into high gear and expect to be building 100 homes a week by September.

Taking cognizance of the national and international implications inherent in the New Jersey situation, NCDH moved in on all fronts:

¶ A delegation representing its 27 major church, minority group, labor and civic organizations conferred with FHA Commissioner Norman P. Mason in Washington. The group emphasized the cooperative agreements between FHA and all states having laws prohibiting discrimination in government-insured housing. It urged that FHA publicly reject Levitt's application for a commitment on the ground that the intention to discriminate has been admitted by the builder. It was pointed out to Commissioner Mason that issuing an FHA commitment in the face of Levitt's statement would be tantamount to aiding and abetting violation of state law.

¶ An appeal was sent to Gordon M. Tiffany, Director of the President's Civil Rights Commission, urging him to investigate the proposed Levittown, N. J.

¶ A joint delegation from the newly formed N. J. Committee Against Discrimination in Housing and the NCDH conferred with Governor Robert B. Meyner on July 7. The group urged 1) that he instruct the N. J. DAD to process complaints against Levitt and issue a finding as quickly as possible, and 2) that he instruct the Attorney General to explore possible action to revoke Levitt's corporate charter and to enjoin him from continuing to build in the light of his announced intent to violate the N. J. constitution, public policy and statutes.

As Trends goes to press, Mr. Levitt has not indicated consideration of any change in his racial practices. FHA has issued conditional commitments for over 200 of the first houses to be constructed. The N. J. Division Against Discrimination is processing a complaint against Levitt, and if the complaint is found to be valid will call on FHA to honor its agreement to withhold any further mortgage commitments from the project until Levitt revises his selling policies to conform to state law. Governor Meyner has stated publicly he will act to prevent the establishment of a segregated Levittown in New Jersey.

Snowden Promoted to FHA Intergroup Relations Post

FHA Commissioner Norman P. Mason has announced the promotion of Dr. George W. Snowden to the newly-created post of Assistant to the Commissioner, Intergroup Relations Service. For the past five years, Dr. Snowden has been Minority Group Housing Advisor on the Commissioner's staff.

In announcing Dr. Snowden's new position, Commissioner Mason said, "Whenever a government agency is concerned with the public welfare, it is its responsibility to see that no elements in the population are excluded from its program, and, indeed to make sure that all elements have the same chance of inclusion."

Restricted FHA & VA Housing Found Unconstitutional

In a landmark decision handed down in June, discrimination in the sale of housing involving FHA or VA financing was held unconstitutional by Judge James H. Oakley of the Superior Court in Sacramento, California.

The California case had been pressed for four years by Attorneys Loren Miller (NCDH Vice-Chairman) and Nathaniel S. Colley, co-chairmen of the NAACP's West Coast legal committee. The result contradicts a previous ruling in a case involving Levittown, Pennsylvania.

The plaintiff in the case was Oliver A. Ming, a would-be buyer who was refused consideration of his applications to purchase a new home in one of several FHA- and VA-insured subdivisions in Sacramento. Mr. Ming, a Negro, charged that the refusals were based solely upon his race and color. The defendants included the Sacramento Real Estate Board, a trade association and several real estate concerns.

The suit alleged that the defendants, in their use of Federal mortgage insurance were acting as instrumentalities of government, subject to constitutional guarantees of equal protection and non-discrimination. (Trends, Aug. 1956)

In his ruling, Judge Oakley declared that the Federal Government is strictly prohibited by the fundamental law from conferring benefits except on an equal basis — that "it cannot play favorites as to race, color or creed." He held that private builders who avail themselves of Federal support — that is, "the utilization of federal administrative process, the gaining of federal assistance in attracting buyers by advertising FHA and VA financing, the federal approval of plans, layouts, utility services, construction standards, and ultimately mortgage guaranties of loans upon federal assurance that adequate standards have been met" —that such builders commit themselves to the same principle of non-discrimination governing Federal activities.

In commenting upon the far-reaching implications of the decision, the New York Times said that in practical terms the ruling implies that a large portion of new housing can no longer be put on the market on a tacit whites-only basis.

"It is common practice now," said the Times, "when Negroes try to buy new houses in non-Negro developments to discourage them with a variety of excuses. Ending the practice would deal a blow to a form of segregation existent throughout the country that many Negro leaders consider as formidable as discriminatory statutes of Southern states: the concentration of Negroes in ghetto sections of communities through barriers to home-buying in white neighborhoods."

(Single copies of Judge Oakley's decision available from NCDH.)

Nat'l Council Sets Housing Institute

The National Council of Churches' Interdenominational Institute on Racial and Cultural Relations will concentrate on problems of discrimination in private housing at its 10th annual session to be held in Chicago in July.

The Institute serves as a practical laboratory for persons working for non-segregated churches in non-segregated communities.

Under the leadership of experts in the field of open occupancy housing, major attention will be given to the methods and techniques which are being used effectively in three or more cities to combat discrimination in the private housing market.

The Institute will be held at the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, July 21-25, 1958. Dr. Alfred S. Kramer, Associate Executive Director of the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council, will serve as Dean.

CORRESPONDENTS REPORT:

Philadelphia

An informal survey was recently conducted by the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations to determine the demand by white purchasers for housing in the Germantown-Mount Airy section, an area of the city which has had some racial change.

The study by the CHR staff was confined to those purchases that occurred in the last two years, and is based on information supplied by residents of the area and the tax assessment records.

It was found that on fifteen blocks which had Negro occupants or were adjacent to such blocks, one or more white families had purchased homes in the last two years. The price of homes on these blocks varied from a low of $8,000 to a high of $30,000, with most purchases in the $10,000 to $14,000 range. The sales prices of the houses and the mortgage amounts were comparable to other sales in the area, which would indicate there were no special financial inducements involved.

The CHR states it is reasonable to assume these purchasers knew of the racial composition of the area before they bought. In fact, it was established that some buyers had difficulty convincing real estate operators they wanted to buy after this information was advanced.

Cleveland

The Cleveland (Ohio) Church Federation reports that the majority of its cooperating churches are racially inclusive in their active fellowship.

The report, based on questionnaires sent to the 300 participating churches, states that of the 219 which replied, 115 (52.5%) have more than one racial group active in church work. Interracial congregations comprise about 10% of the total number of churches in the nation.

Concluding with the statement that while in Cleveland the charge may no longer be true that "The most segregated hour in the week is 11 o'clock on Sunday morning," the Federation report points out that housing segregation is the greatest barrier to integrated churches. It proposes that church groups work to end housing discrimination by 1) encouraging their members to sign open occupancy covenants, 2) encouraging realtors to disregard race in the sale of homes, and 3) encouraging lending institutions to make loans on a non-discriminatory basis.

Seattle

Representatives of the housing industry — builders, architects, realtors, and lenders — have joined forces with church, labor and civic agencies in a cooperative effort to eliminate discrimination from the housing market in Seattle, Washington.

A member of the American Institute of Architects, Inc. will take office as president of the Greater Seattle Housing Council in July. John M. Morse, representative on the Council from the Washington State Chapter of AIA, will succeed current president William C. Newell, Jr., a representative of the Home Builders Association.

The Greater Seattle Housing Council was organized in 1956 (Trends, Dec. 1956) as an outgrowth of a five-year educational program on minority housing problems by the Civic Unity Committee of Seattle and its constituent groups. It is staffed by the Civic Unity Committee.

In a brochure entitled "The Open Door," the Council states that the nonwhite population of Seattle is increasing much more rapidly than the white, and that 90% of the nonwhite families live in a small, old area in the central city. The Council has undertaken to develop a public awareness of the barriers minority families face as they seek better housing. The brochure states, "Calm understanding leads the way to residential patterns more in keeping with our democratic ideals; eliminates the fear of economic loss; opens the housing supply to all families."

As its first research project, the Seattle Council is conducting a series of case studies of the experiences of nonwhite families who have moved into previously all-white neighborhoods. The interviews are done by teams of two—one a member of the housing industry, and the other a representative from the church or civic agencies. The studies are under the direction of Dr. Ernest A. T. Barth, Sociologist, and the results will be analyzed and reported in the fall.

Canada

The Canadian Labour Congress, at its recent convention in Winnipeg, demanded Federal action against discrimination in housing.

Specifically, the Congress called for amendment of the National Housing Act of Canada to prohibit the use of public funds to underwrite the activities of builders or real estate agents who practice racial or religious discrimination in the sale or rental of NHA financed homes.

Berkeley, Calif.

HOME (Housing Opportunities Made Equal) is the name chosen by a new community organization in Berkeley, California. The group will offer, with careful planning, a non-discriminatory housing listing or introduction service.

Impetus for such service came from women of the First Unitarian Church of Berkeley, who enlisted the interest and support of many groups and individuals in forming a broadly-based non-sectarian agency.

Providence, R. I.

Appointment of a race relations officer to the Providence Housing Authority means new emphasis will be placed on orderly racial integration in that city's public housing projects, in the opinion of Charles M. Day, executive secretary of the Rhode Island Commission Against Discrimination.

Sirrouko Howard, a former project manager with a background of graduate study at Oxford University, was appointed by the Authority to fill the newly-created position.

Cincinnati

The segregated church is an ineffective missionary instrument, Dr. Galen R. Weaver, Secretary for Racial and Cultural Relations, Congregational Christian Churches, and NCDH Board member, recently told the Cincinnati Council of Churches.

Speaking at a Council workshop, Dr. Weaver offered the following guides based on his experience in working for church integration: 1) The pastor's firm leadership is essential; 2) few persons actually leave an integrating church; 3) denominational pronouncements can be helpful; 4) intergroup contacts, pastoral counselling, and work on common objectives are better than sermons; 5) social education and action must be an integral part of the congregation's program; 6) a willingness to come to grips with controversial questions must be developed in the church; 7) church leaders must become skilled in conducting meetings, handling controversy, and guiding group activities; 8) attacking specific discriminatory practices is more effective than an attack on attitudes.

Dr. Weaver stressed the point that the church cannot be integrated in a segregated community, and urged that the church work closely with civic movements to eliminate discrimination.

VA Aids NY SCAD Enforce Bias Law

The Veterans Administration has entered into an agreement with the New York State Commission Against Discrimination under which the VA will assist the state agency in eliminating discriminatory practices in VA-aided housing projects in New York State, it was announced on June 4.

The arrangement, first of its kind in the nation to be made by the VA, provides that the VA will disqualify builders from the benefits of future housing insurance if they are found guilty of discrimination against a veteran.

"The significance of the agreement," said Commissioner Charles Abrams, chairman of the N. Y. SCAD, "reaches beyond the curbing of discriminatory practices in federally-assisted housing. It may also highlight an emerging Federal policy under which Federal agencies will now aid in the enforcement of state civil rights laws where the state requests it."

The new VA policy, which involves the Federal Government's most active agency in the home-building field, is expected to have widespread results. Four other states (Massachusetts, Oregon, New Jersey, and Washington) have laws banning discrimination in publicly-assisted housing, and it is anticipated those states will seek similar agreements.

Urban Renewal Cuts Housing By 51,000

Racial minority aspects of the displacement and rehousing of families affected by urban renewal and redevelopment projects continue to plague housers.

Approximately 60% of the displaced families in a total of 276 approved projects are nonwhite, according to the latest official reports of the Urban Renewal Administration.

Further, the urban renewal program thus far has reduced the total housing supply by more than 51,000 dwelling units. For 276 projects, 155,262 original and 104,166 proposed dwelling units are reported.

At the end of 1957, 33% of the nonwhite families rehoused from 115 projects went into substandard or uninspected dwellings. Approximately 25% of the displaced nonwhite families and 10% of the displaced white families were rehoused in public housing.

Charge Federal Housing Reinforces Segregation

Charges that Federal housing programs are supporting and reinforcing the spread of residential segregation were made by NCDH Chairman Algernon D. Black in testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency at its hearings on the 1958 housing bill.

"For seven years," Mr. Black told the Senators, "the National Committee has urged that the benefits of Federal housing programs, which are supported by the tax monies of all citizens, be dispensed without discrimination based on race, religion, or national origin."

"Each year," he continued, "we are forced to say once more we are appalled by the fact that racial discrimination continues in federally-aided housing programs."

"Urban renewal developments continue to receive Federal approval and funds, despite plans for new segregated housing," Mr. Black asserted. "In Federal public housing, the majority of the projects are segregated. FHA and VA continue to underwrite racially exclusive suburbs. As a result," he went on, "it is the minority groups who live in substandard housing and slums."

Urban Situation Worsens

Pointing to the decline in population in rural America and the consequent increase in urban areas, Black told the Committee the housing situation is becoming more acute each year. More than two-thirds of the total population of the nation now lives in urban areas, with the nonwhite urban population increasing much more rapidly than the white, he said. By way of illustration, he cited the 14 largest metropolitan areas, where more than 1/3 of all U. S. citizens reside. Between 1940 and 1950 the total white population in those 14 cities rose 4 percent, whereas the Negro population leaped upward 68 percent.

"With the increasing exodus of middle and upper class whites to generally-restricted suburbs," Black continued, "there is emerging a national pattern of the older central city occupied by a growing concentration of nonwhite families surrounded by lily-white Suburbia, U.S.A. The economic, social and political consequences of this situation are appalling."

Emphasizing the fact that the Federal Government is the single most important factor in the national housing picture, the testimony pointed out that the Supreme Court's public school decision is being rendered ineffective by residential segregation. It called on the Congress, the Executive, and administrative officials to fulfill constitutional guarantees and pledges of equal opportunity.

The following survey of the three major Federal housing programs (Urban Renewal, FHA, and public housing) detailed the NCDH indictments:

Urban Renewal is reducing the supply of low-rent housing at a time of critical shortage—to date the program has resulted in a net loss of 51,000 homes. Two-thirds of the families displaced are nonwhites who are forced, by a restricted housing market and high rent and sales prices, into overcrowded ghettos, extending the fringes and creating new slums. (HHFA Administrator Cole has estimated that by June 30, 1960, 247,000 families will have been displaced by various government programs.) Developers are left free to "renew" presently integrated areas on a segregated basis. There is little use of open or predominantly open land. The race relations staff in the URA has decreased from five specialists to one.

FHA continues to underwrite segregated housing (see Levittown, page 1). Less than 2 percent of the total number of new homes insured by FHA since 1946 have been available to minorities—the majority of those in the South.

Public Housing persists in dispersing Federal funds for segregated housing, despite numerous court decisions which have held that segregated public housing is unconstitutional. Further, the displacement by slum clearance, the use of a high percentage of slum sites, the restrictions in the private housing market, and low incomes are resulting in threatening integration where it presently exists. The emphasis in public housing should be shifted from clearing slums to increasing the housing inventory.

Recommendations

Mr. Black called for unequivocal prohibition of discrimination in all federally-assisted housing programs. Among other recommendations which the NCDH called essential were:

- Assurance of adequate housing before slum clearance projects are approved.
- Use of open and predominantly open sites.
- The same relocation standards for

LEGAL ACTION BRIEFS

Ousted Brokers Lose to RE Board

In 1955, Realtor Harry E. Beddoe was fined by the Southeast Realty Board of Southgate, California, after selling a house to an American couple of Mexican descent. The board charged that Beddoe had violated a provision in the Code of Ethics of the National Association of Real Estate Boards that "a realtor should not be instrumental in introducing into a neighborhood" any element that would hurt its property values. Beddoe refused to pay the fine and was expelled.

Beddoe sued the board for damages, charging it with restraint of trade under California's so-called little Sherman anti-trust law. (Trends, Aug. 1956)

The Superior Court of California has ruled that the Southeast Realty Board was not acting in restraint of trade and was not liable for damages. In its opinion, the court, while it did not order it, suggested that the realty board restore Beddoe to membership "without delay upon the payment of his dues." Latest report is that Mr. Beddoe, who was in line for the presidency of the board, has not been reinstated.

Similarly, the same Southeast Realty Board fined and ousted Realtor Earl Wing for selling a house to an American-born couple of Italian and Spanish descent. Seeking reinstatement, Wing took his case to court. (Trends, Aug. 1956)

The Wing case was settled out of court, the realty board withdrew its fine, and agreed to reinstate Wing upon payment by him of all past dues.

UR Case Filed in Alabama

On June 9, a suit was filed in the U. S. District Court in Alabama to prevent the use of urban renewal funds for clearing an area which is now occupied by Negro residents and redeveloping it for white occupancy.

The plaintiffs in the case (Stephen Tate, et al, v. The City of Eufaula, Alabama, et al) argue that the underlying reason for the clearance is to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision by the establishment of a residential pattern which will automatically segregate the public schools. The section which the Eufaula Housing Authority proposes to redevelop is adjacent to the white high school. Seventy-two Negro families presently live in the area.

Religious Bias Upheld in Fla.

The Florida Supreme Court has held that an agreement between a real estate broker and a seller specifying that property should not be sold to a minority is binding and enforceable. (MacGregor v. Florida Real Estate Commission—Jan. 1958)

In September 1954, Duncan MacGregor, real estate broker, sold some Palm Beach property to a Jewish purchaser. The former owner, Herbert K. Allard, claimed that MacGregor had disregarded his instruction to restrict the sale to Christians, and called on the Palm Beach Real Estate Board to censure MacGregor.

Proceedings were initiated before the Florida Real Estate Commission to have MacGregor's license revoked. MacGregor appealed to the courts to quash the proceedings against him, arguing that if the license law authorized his suspension for not complying with a seller's desire to sell only to Christians, it was unconstitutional. The courts up through the State Supreme Court, declining to decide the case on any constitutional grounds, upheld the Commission's right to revoke MacGregor's license.

In a friend-of-the-court brief, the Anti-Defamation League argued that constitutional issues were involved. The League declared that the MacGregor case involved "a new technique through which the aid of the State is invoked to compel compliance with religious restrictions" in the sale of property.

Finally, the Real Estate Commission dismissed the charges and MacGregor retained his license. However, the decision of the Florida Supreme Court still stands.

1st Housing Hearings in N.J.

The New Jersey Division Against Discrimination will hold its first public hearing on a charge of discrimination in housing on July 15. The respondent is Centre City, a housing development in Bridgeton Pike, Gloucester County.

Frank G. Moore, Jr., of Philadelphia, the complainant, alleges he sought to purchase a home in the development and, after a series of delays, was finally told he could not do so because of his race.

The New Jersey DAD has jurisdiction over housing which receives government-insured financing.

1958 Housing Act—

70,000 unit authorization—of which only 8,000 have been used since passage of the 1956 Act. It makes it easier for public housing to be located in an urban renewal area.

Urban Renewal. Moving beyond the Administration's proposals and over its opposition, the bill as approved by the committee provides for a six-year program with an annual capital grant authorization of $350 million which could be increased by $150 million in any one year. It would maintain the present ratio for sharing land write-down cost of ⅔ Federal to ⅓ local. The Administration had requested a reduction of Federal participation aimed at a 50-50 sharing basis in three years.

The bill also authorizes relocation payments to families or businesses displaced from an urban renewal area by any governmental activity, including code enforcement, public roads or public works, even though the government action is not connected with the urban renewal project.

The Outlook

Supporters of "housing for those who need it most" feel the bill approved by the Senate committee is the best over-all Federal housing legislation in many years. However, they are quick to warn that the House is traditionally cool to public housing. Furthermore, the Administration is opposed to every section of the low-rent housing title and to many of the urban renewal provisions.

The House Committee on Banking and Currency opened hearings on the Senate version on July 7. Hearings will continue through July 18.

Albert M. Cole, HHFA Administrator, was the first witness at the House hearings. He criticized sharply many provisions in the bill, centering his attack on public housing. Mr. Cole testified that the bill "would have the cumulative effect of opening both existing and new public housing to occupancy by middle-income families."

In the Senate several drastic amendments to the reported bill are in prospect, with floor battles over them likely.

Louisville Begins Integration

As a result of a Federal Court order, Louisville's (Ky.) first Negro family has moved into a formerly all-white public housing project. Officials reported no incidents in connection with the move.

Racial Separation Must Be Ended Says Chicago Political Scientist

A free real estate market is the first answer to stopping present deterioration of the nation's cities, according to Morton Grodzins, head of the University of Chicago's Political Science Department and an authority on American minority problems.

His prediction in his scientific study of the 14 largest metropolitan areas (Metropolitan Segregation, SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, October 1957) that patterns of segregation threaten "to transform the cities into slums, largely inhabited by Negroes, ringed about with predominantly white suburbs," created widespread speculation.

In a search for solutions to the problems forecast by Mr. Grodzins, Betty Schneider of Friendship House asked him the following questions:

> "Does this HAVE to happen? Or are there ways of working against the possibility that 'the racial problem, still fostering in the rural South, will become equally, perhaps more acutely, a problem of the urban North'?"

Mr. Grodzins' answers are reported in the June issue of COMMUNITY.

The cure, says Grodzins, is obvious: "Separation must be ended." In no situation, he goes on to say, is the solution more easily stated . . . and harder to accomplish.

As a means of securing a free housing market, Grodzins strongly supports non-discrimination housing laws. While the removal of restrictions would not necessarily end nonwhite residential concentrations, a dispersion of minorities over the entire urban area would unquestionably ensue.

As his second proposed solution, Mr. Grodzins believes that legitimate methods can be found to control minority-migration and assure integrated communities. He considers the best means of accomplishing this to be a free housing market and good housing codes. However, he states that a "tip point" exists for the vast majority of white Americans. Once that point is exceeded, changing neighborhoods tend to turn into all-minority sections. So, with some reservations, he puts himself on the side of setting quotas. He says:

> "The moral problem is not an easy one; it is the problem of placing limits upon Negro in-migration to particular urban and suburban areas. It means, in part, fostering a smaller discrimination in favor of scotching a large one. Whatever the difficulties of such a position, it seems to be, for a larger number of Negroes and whites alike, a preferable alternative to the present pattern of segregated population groups."

The third avenue offered by Mr. Grodzins for changing the trend is to attract white citizens back to city living. The city must now compete with the suburb by offering moderate priced housing, green spaces, good schools, safety and convenience. Rebuilding on a large scale with governmental help will be necessary to accomplish this.

And as his fourth proposal, he envisions the simultaneous movement of nonwhites to the suburbs and to smaller cities. He feels all people must be convinced this is vital to the health and life of the whole area. Also, non-discrimination housing laws would greatly influenec such movement.

"The only way to avoid the consequences of racial schism," says Mr. Grodzins, "is to bridge it."

A Salute

NCDH salutes Mayor Robert F. Wagner for his outstanding appointments to the reorganized New York City Housing Authority. This agency is particularly gratified by the designation of former NCDH Treasurer Ira S. Robbins. Commissioner Robbins, a nationally recognized houser and civil rights advocate, was formerly Executive Vice-President of the Citizens Housing and Planning Council of New York and former President and Chairman of the Board of the National Housing Conference.

Changes Urged in Housing Policies

Basic changes in organization and management policies have been recommended to the recently reconstituted New York City Housing Authority. The recommendations, contained in a report prepared under the aegis of the Citizens Housing and Planning Council of New York, seek to reverse the trend towards economic and social stratification and racial segregation in public housing.

Study By 38 Experts

The proposals were based on a six-month study by 38 housing experts, real estate operators, welfare, business, church and civic leaders.

The report called the Authority's "color blind" policy of tenant selection "in the purest sense, non-discriminatory." But in actual practice, it said, that policy has failed to halt a marked trend towards an increasing proportion of minority occupancy. It proposed the substitution of "positive techniques" to achieve and maintain racial balance.

Race Relations Proposals

Specifically on race relations policies, the experts recommended that the Authority: 1) issue an unequivocal statement of its determination to develop and maintain integration; 2) establish a top-level race relations post; 3) initiate a program of education in race relations for all employees; 4) initiate community relations programs in project neighborhoods; 5) place the largest proportion of its new sites outside areas of nonwhite concentration; 6) see that displaced families from ghetto or fringe areas have access to non-segregated housing; and 7) enlist the support of all public and private agencies in making the relocation program contribute to integration in the city.

Race Minor Factor In Delinquency Says Pulitzer Prize-Winning Journalist

Race, as such, is not a primary cause of juvenile delinquency, reports Pulitzer prize-winning New York Times correspondent Harrison E. Salisbury in his exhaustive study of the New York City street gang situation.

In a series of articles recently published by the Times, Mr. Salisbury puts the "shook-up" generation under the microscope. Why are juvenile gangs formed? How do they exist in a world they help to make? What might be and what is being done about them?

"Geography rather than race is the major determinant in membership and conflict," he finds. Most gangs follow the racial pattern of the neighborhood, and the "integrated" gang is not uncommon. Enemy gangs may be of the same ethnic character or of varying composition — there is no hard and fast law.

In the course of his survey, Salisbury found persons on both sides of the integration question agreed that race has little or nothing to do with these major behavior problems — and that view was supported by every educator and social worker he interviewed.

"Problem youngsters spring from housing jungles," he said, as he went on to cite broken families, deprivation, poverty, insecurity and fear as major causes.

Comprehensive, coordinated social planning on a city-wide, year-in, year-out basis, concludes Mr. Salisbury, can effectively reduce delinquency and halt its development at the source: the neighborhood and the family.

all displacement by Government action.

- An increased and revitalized public housing program, with provision for families to purchase their apartments on a cooperative basis as their incomes increase, and for over-income families to remain in public housing when no decent private shelter is available.
- Government aid for middle-income families, including low-interest and long-time direct loans for middle-income housing.
- Reconstitution of the Racial Relations Service on a non-partisan professional basis to provide responsible review of all programs in all headquarters and regional offices of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constituent agencies.

Legislation

Cleveland: Illegal Conversions

Taking the profit out of illegal conversions is one of the aims of an ordinance recently passed by the Cleveland (Ohio) City Council. Introduced by Councilman Leo A. Jackson, the ordinance provides that a landlord whose building has been illegally converted can be fined 20% of the gross annual rent and imprisoned. Contractors who illegally convert any residential building are also subject to fine and imprisonment.

Connecticut: Favor FHP Law

Both the Republican and Democratic State Conventions in Connecticut have called for enactment of a state fair housing practices law.

In identical platform provisions, the two political parties endorsed revision of the public accommodations act to ban discrimination in private housing by any person who controls the sale or rental of five or more units.

Willow Run: Bans Housing Bias

The Superior Township (Willow Run) Board of Trustees, Washtenaw County, Michigan, may have the distinction of being that state's first governing body to establish a policy of open occupancy in housing constructed with public assistance, either direct or indirect. The resolution barring discrimination was passed on April 7, 1958.

RESOLUTION APPROVED BY NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

We, the assembled body of the N. C. Council of Churches, meeting in annual conference in Raleigh on Feb. 1, 1961, testify to the unity that exists in Jesus Christ. We have discovered through the Church a fellowship that transcends all differences with regard to race, and we affirm our Christian faith in the essential oneness of man.

We are grateful for our higher courts which have decided that no discrimination could be tolerated against any citizen under our democratic form of Government. We believe that North Carolinians have a high regard for law and for the Constitution, and we note with approval that the determination of our leaders to uphold the law has spared our state from lawless violence in these days of transition. We also commend the efforts of many ministers, laymen, and women who have worked courageously and diligently to open doors of opportunity for all peoples, especially the doors of churches and schools.

We applaud the following evidences of progress in our state: an increasing number of interracial ministerial associations; the peaceful integration of lunch counters in more than twenty communities; the enrollment of approximately eighty Negroes in previously all-white colleges and universities; the enrollment of seventy-seven Negro children in formerly segregated schools; the policy of employment opportunities on the basis of merit alone which five or six of our major industries have declared; and particularly for our Advisory Commission on Civil Rights for reminding us that our State is not moving with "deliberate speed" in providing equality of opportunity in education for all our children.

Believing that a role of the Church in the field of Human Relations is the cultivating of a soil and the creating of a climate in which full dignity and equality can grow, we call upon all the churches of North Carolina to consider, prayerfully and without delay, following the example of those churches in our State which have opened their doors to all persons. A church must realize it is the house of God, not a private club. When any sincere worshipper is denied admittance, a church denies its purpose. This applies also to our church-related colleges. Both the world mission of the Church and the moral leadership of our Nation is seriously imperiled by discrimination. It is our conviction that our goal as Christians and as citizens in a democracy must be nothing less than a non-segregated Church in a non-segregated society.

We call upon the General Assembly of North Carolina, soon to meet in this city, to remember that it represents all, and legislates for all, the citizens of North Carolina, including our Negro citizens who comprise nearly one-fourth of the population, but who have no one in either house or in the administration. We express particular concern for legislative action in the following areas:

1. Suffrage - North Carolina leads the South in the percentage of active eligible voters, but is fortieth in the nation. Our Governor has called on us not to be content to lead the South, but to lead the nation. Let us remove any intimidation and artful barriers and welcome all citizens to full participation in citizenship, particularly at the ballot boxes during election.

2. Public Education - Must we continue to force our Negro friends, Indians, and other minorities, to take initiative in exhausting administrative procedures and resort to the courts to obtain those rights already declared by the Court to be theirs? Our Pupil Placement laws are proving to be enormously successful in impeding the progress of school desegregation, whether this was intended or not. Of the 77 Negro children now attending desegregated schools, 42 are in districts where the Federal Government has built schools, 18 others are in one district by district court order, leaving 17, many of whom were also admitted by court orders. We pray for all these children and their families, and for our Indian friends as well, who suffer frustration, intimidation and injustice. May we speed the day when all children will be given equal opportunity under the law and are treated with equal dignity and respect as children of one God.

3. Employment - We are aware of the obvious injustices involved in denying equality of opportunity for employment in our State, and call upon our legislature to remove all barriers to merit employment in government. To deny anyone employment opportunity, whether in government, industry, and professions, in schools and churches, is to rob him of his birthright and to deprive our state of its most valuable resource.

4. Housing - We have complacently accepted the degrading slums that exist in every city and town in our state as a part of the pattern of not only segregation but of class inequality for white persons as well. Full use of public law and federal financing should be utilized in removing these barriers to human dignity and comfort.

History at this moment has summoned us to greatness as a nation. There are many voices competing to be heard as we strive to strengthen and enlarge our destiny and purpose. We pray that the voice of the Church may not be muffled in proclaiming our sovereign Lord who calls us "to love mercy, do justly, and walk humbly with our God".

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

As a key friend of NCDH, we are calling on you for vital help.

We need to compile a record of the outstanding liberal men and women of means in major sections of the country. Would you prepare for us an accurate list of such persons in your area with full name (title and initials) and complete address?

In order to undergird our activities, we have a hard push ahead. We can get the Executive Order; we can extend the open housing market. But the continuing campaign needs time and money.

In giving thought to the listing you prepare, would you try to keep these points in mind:

1) The persons should preferably have some predisposition towards the principles that guide NCDH.

2) They should have the capacity to give. (They need not be Croesus-like -- all gifts are necessary and welcome!)

3) They may represent all groups - successful business and professional men and women, prominent builders and developers, housewives, college professors, board members of housing and social welfare agencies, and community leaders.

4) The number? Send as many as you can conveniently gather within the next three weeks. (And if the information is typed, we are not likely to make errors in copying.

You will then have helped us to keep moving in the direction of open housing for all. Thanks ever so much.

Sincerely,

We urgently need your help in what we believe will be one of the National Committee's most significant projects.

During the next few weeks, NCDH will be preparing a series of basic reports which we hope will be widely used with the real estate industry throughout the country. These will be given national publicity and digests will also be carried in TRENDS. We ask your earliest possible assistance in assembling the necessary background information.

We are immediately concerned with 1) as comprehensive data as possible on the growth of residential integration over the past five years; and 2) preparation of a nationwide directory of local fair housing groups (whatever their names!).

Will you please send us as complete and specific information as possible on new developments in your state or city which have actually become racially integrated during the past five years. Also, your impressions and any detailed information available regarding the growth of integrated neighborhoods and buildings in general.

If you have not already done so within the last few weeks, please send us a list of all known local fair housing groups in your area, the name of the proper contact person, address and telephone number. Also, if available, brochures or leaflets describing their work.

Our thanks - and don't forget to keep significant news items on the race and housing field coming in to our office. We depend on your help in our effort to make TRENDS interesting and informative.

P. S. The March-April issue is on its way to you!

Dear Margaret:

Thanks for the extra copies of the handbook. We can use them.

It was, indeed, good to meet you, finally, in Chicago. I, too, hope we will have an opportunity to see each other. Don't you ever have an opportunity to come to Atlanta? We would welcome such a visit.

Best.

Dear Paul:

During a telephone visit with Josephine last night, I learned that the small stock of FAIR HOUSING HANDBOOK I had sent to the Southern Regional Council sometime ago is depleted.

Under separate cover I am sending down a dozen copies so that each member of your staff can have a desk copy. Let me know if you would like any more.

It was good meeting you in Chicago, and I shall hope that our paths will cross more frequently from now on.

With all good wishes.

Dear Mr. Rutledge:

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I am able to inform you that SRC has finally cleared the way to become an organizational member of NCADH. I am sorry this has taken so long. However, as I am sure you are aware, when one changes policy it is expedient that every "base be touched."

Will you automatically bill us, or is there a standard for which we should fill in and submit to you?

It was a pleasure seeing you briefly at John Feild's but I agree it would be nice and valuable to have more time for more leisurely conversation.

The matter of SRC becoming a member of NCDH is one for the Executive Committee which next meets on Sept ~~December~~ 12. At that time I shall recommend that we become a member and have every reason to assume that they will approve.

This is something we should have done earlier and I appreciate your calling it to my attention.

Dear Paul:

It seems the only time we ever get a chance to say three words to each other is either at a cocktail party or a NAIRO Board Meeting! We really must take some time out to discuss our mutual concerns.

I was most heartened to get your response the other night at John Feild's to my suggestion that I thought it would be most timely for the Southern Regional Council to affiliate with the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH). I hope you will give this your earliest consideration and discuss it with your Board.

I am sending along for your information a copy of our Constitution and an NCDH brochure. It would be helpful if we could discuss this soon in view of the fact that the Nominating Committee is meeting to select a new group of officers and Directors-at-Large, and we are attempting to get much broader geographic representation.

I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Best regards,

NCDH

NATIONAL COMMITTEE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION IN HOUSING
Center for Fair Housing
323 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016 • 685-8911

39

is a non-profit public interest organization working to achieve conditions in which every American family secures a decent home in an integrated living environment.

NCDH believes that rebirth of the nation's cities and solution to the crucial problem of urban slums and racial ghettos require: 1) equality of opportunity in the total housing supply; 2) massive additions to the supply of low- and moderate-income housing, dispersed throughout the cities and their suburbs; and 3) effective social programs while breaking up the racial ghettos to change the conditions of life of the people who live in them.

If any one of these three elements is lacking or is weak, the crisis of urban America will deepen as the ghettos continue expanding and intergroup tensions become increasingly explosive.

Formed in 1950, NCDH is an affiliation of 41 major religious, civil rights, labor and civic organizations. It serves as the national clearing house for information, counsel and technical guidance on the civil rights aspects of housing.

NCDH's work is beamed toward every segment of society. With the support of member agencies, philanthropic foundations and friends, it carries on five basic program operations:

Servicing government agencies, builders, realtors, member organizations and all other groups and individuals striving to break up the pattern of racial segregation. The NCDH Center for Fair Housing, a special program operation, offers direct field counseling and a wide variety of professional services for more than 1,000 voluntary fair housing groups and other local community organizations over the country.

Consultation and technical assistance are provided to employers whose recruitment programs are hampered by housing barriers faced by non-white employees; to planning bodies, urban renewal and other housing agencies, and to private redevelopers and builders; to government agencies administering anti-discrimination laws; to school boards and other educational institutions; and to member agencies and their local affiliates. The NCDH Legal Committee, composed of outstanding constitutional lawyers, provides a free consultative service for organizations and leaders.

Conferences are held on a national, regional and local basis, bringing together professionals and volunteers, and involving experts in civil rights, government, industry, labor, education and religion. These conferences have set the pattern for local and national attacks on discrimination and segregation in housing, and have resulted in the publication of valuable guidelines for community programs.

New approaches and techniques for achieving integration in housing and related areas are constantly explored and developed by NCDH. New York's pioneering "Operation Open City," a local fair housing program aimed at accelerating the dispersion of non-white families, was initiated by NCDH and transferred as an on-going program to the Urban League of Greater New York. A current pilot project now being carried forward as part of the War on Poverty is developing programs specifically designed to expand housing opportunities throughout metropolitan areas for low-income families. Other scheduled projects will relate housing programs to school desegregation and to expanded employment and job training opportunities.

Fact-finding and publication include the preparation, interpretation and distribution of accurate and current information in the field. TRENDS IN HOUSING, the NCDH periodical, is the only national publication devoted exclusively to the housing/intergroup relations field, and is widely used as a standard resource. Other publications and materials distributed include FAIR HOUSING HANDBOOK, a working manual for local fair housing groups published jointly by NCDH and the American Friends Service Committee; special surveys and reports on the effect of fair housing legislation, open occupancy campaigns, property values, blockbusting, anti-fair housing referenda, and significant reprints of the literature in the field.

is to continue, improve and expand its role as stimulant, catalytic agent and clearing house in the housing/civil rights field; its search for new methods and more effective techniques for leveling the walls of segregated neighborhoods; its multi-pronged effort to inform and mobilize public opinion in support of programs and activities to build an integrated society. NCDH invites the support of all thoughtful and concerned citizens. Contributions are deductible for income tax purposes.

Mr. Moreland G. Smith, Director

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.

Dear Mr. Smith:

Thank you for your letter of January 6, 1967. I submitted the application of the Southern Regional Council, Inc. for cooperating membership with the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing (NCDH) at our Executive Committee meeting on January 12, and I am pleased to announce that the Committee unanimously voted to approve the Southern Regional Council as a member.

Although I recall sending Paul Anthony several kits of material regarding NCDH, I am sending you under separate cover an up-to-date kit for your information.

In terms of dues payments to NCDH, the Constitution calls for $200.00 annual dues and any contribution a member wants to make beyond that amount to NCDH, of course, is welcome. In accordance with your question as stated in your letter, I am enclosing a bill in the amount of $200.00 for the Southern Regional Council's 1967 annual membership dues.

As you know, at the Annual NCDH Board Meeting held in October of 1966, Mr. Vernon E. Jordan, Jr., Director of the Voter Education Project of SRC, was nominated as a Board Member at Large to the office of NCDH Vice President and was elected unanimously. Each cooperating member organization has the right to designate a delegate to the Board to represent that organization. If you plan to name a delegate to the Board other than Vernon Jordan, please let us know at your earliest convenience who that member will be.

Sincerely yours,

Edward Rutledge

You will be interested in learning that Calvin Kytle and David Apter did a magnificent public relations job for us on this. We have had astonishing coverage by press and radio, with a considerable amount of TV coverage. Press clippings are still coming in from all over the country. It really made an impact.

HOW DOES OUR GARDEN GROW?

1949—1953

A FIVE YEAR REPORT OF THE ACTIVITIES OF THE

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR RURAL SCHOOLS, Inc.

112 East 19th Street, New York 3, N. Y. • Tel.: AL 4-5865

HOW DOES OUR GARDEN GROW?

THE SOIL . . . was a desert of poverty and despair — the areas in the rural South where thousands of Negro children are raised under the most primitive conditions. Children without enough clothes . . . or food . . . or books . . . or medical care. Children who often have to walk five or more miles each day to get to their ramshackle school buildings which sometimes don't have water . . . or windows . . . or even seats.

THE SEED . . . was an idea — the idea that Americans would join together in voluntary organization to help these rural schools and children, to contribute to their urgent physical needs, and—most of all—to stimulate self-help programs so that entire communities could find the way to improvement, by themselves. For this purpose, the NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR RURAL SCHOOLS WAS ORGANIZED in 1949.

THE SUN AND RAIN . . . giving life and nourishment to the idea were the contributions, will, and energies of hundreds of persons, volunteers all. The following page tells some of the things the NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR RURAL SCHOOLS has done in these four years. SEE HOW OUR GARDEN HAS GROWN.

What We've Done —

I. SELF-HELP — As a direct result of NCRS consultation and activity . . .

—Local groups have succeeded in persuading county authorities to erect two modern brick school buildings.

—Thriving, active parent-teacher organizations have been created in six areas.

—School bus service has been established in counties where consolidated schools have been built.

—Community clothing banks, libraries, social and music centers organized in six areas.

—Local community responsibility has been awakened. In some areas, for example, county officials and doctors have joined to develop free eye-care programs for needy children, a project the NCRS is sponsoring and carrying out.

—Parents have developed new interest in their schools. In some cases, when no funds were available, they've gone into school buildings—the fathers saw and hammer, the mothers sew and clean —and the buildings have become more healthful, cheerful places.

II. CONTRIBUTIONS

TOTAL $214,000

. . . a REAL bat instead of an old paper one . . .

The seeds have been well-planted. Our garden has grown beautifully these past four years. But it needs infinitely more care and attention.

Until segregated education is ended; until all children have equal educational opportunity, we are permitting future generations of Americans to be crippled by illiterary.

The National Committee for Rural Schools is helping the children of rural areas now—by encouraging them, their families, their communities to help themselves.

What You Can Do!

—WRITE us, telling what you can contribute in the way of clothing, books, playground equipment, etc. We will send you the name, address, and details of a community group in need.

—ASK us about our current projects so that you can organize meetings and parties in your local schools and churches to help them.

January 19, 1954

Dear Friend:

The National Committee for Rural Schools, which is primarily concerned with the problems of Negro schools in Southern rural areas, has for some time considered the problems which might arise from the Supreme Court decision affecting segregation in the schools. In order to discuss this problem we have arranged an informal luncheon conference to take place on Thursday, January 28th, at 12:00 noon, at the offices of the Anti-Defamation League, 20 West 40th Street, 8th floor.

Our guest speaker and discussion leader will be George S. Mitchell, of Atlanta, Georgia, Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council. Mr. Mitchell is one of the leading authorities on problems of segregation in the South and he has been meeting with representatives of various groups in the South to discuss action which might be desirable following the Supreme Court decision. He brings a firsthand and intimate knowledge of the problem to us.

The luncheon conference will be completely informal. It is not our purpose to arrive at any conclusions but merely to consider the problem and to have the benefit of Mr. Mitchell's views and experience. Accordingly, we have invited a small group of leaders in the field of education, labor and civic affairs to meet with Mr. Mitchell.

We would be honored if you would be our guest at the luncheon. The meeting will end promptly at 2:00 p.m. We do hope it will be possible for you to be with us.

Sincerely yours,

Benjamin F. McLaurin

Mr. George Mitchell
Southern Regional Conference
Room 432- 63 Auburn Ave.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

Please accept my heartiest thanks for myself and the Committee for giving us of your precious time while on a short visit to New York. Personally I regret that we did not have a chance to be alone for a few minutes. As I told you, each time I am in Atlanta, you are elsewhere, because you are one of the most "travelingest" men in the U.S.A. I hope I will have better luck next time you visit New York or I visit Atlanta.

Several urgent things trouble me, and I know that you would know something about one particular thing and it is this: You have seen in our folder a picture of a consolidated school for Negro children. This picture is of a school built in Richmond County, town of Hepzabah. The money for this school had been appropriated many years ago when money was appropriated for a consolidated school for White children. The school for the White children by now is quite dilapidated notwithstanding that it is constantly being repaired. It took a great deal of pressuring and the good fortune of meeting with a very fine District Superintendent of Schools to use this money for a school building.

I believe you know that Georgia has appropriated quite a bit of money in many of the counties, but that money is not being used. My problem is how to find an influential person (White) who would be sympathetic enough and understanding to make this money work. I was hoping that you might be able to help me with such contacts since you know the school problems in Georgia as well as throughout the south.

If you have any suggestion I would be grateful to you. I hope that the near future brings you to us again.

Sincerely,

Rae Brandstein

Mr. B. F. McLaurin
Chairman
National Committee for Rural Schools, Inc.
112 East Nineteenth Street
New York 3, New York

Dear Mr. McLaurin:

You wrote me August 3rd about planning ahead for the National Committee for Rural Schools.

The broad setting is the final assumption of the responsibility on the part of public officialdom in each Southern state to provide good schools. The shack school is on the way out! I perfectly know that one can hunt around and find a lot of them left, but the decision has been taken that it means good, and good they will be!

Further, there is, of course, the national decision that segregated schools, rural and urban, must go. This will be slower in its implementation in many parts of the South than the position of good schools within so much of segregation as local communities and state officials can contrive.

So, as the decision has been taken to provide good schools and, within the foreseeable future, unsegregated good schools, it seems to me an appropriate function for the National Committee for Rural Schools to become a stimulus to performance under the decision taken.

There are various ways in which that could be done:

1. Suppose that the NCRS retains an educator at some college in each of several, or in all, Southern states to make an annual report on progress achieved in improving rural schools and in reaching the stage of unsegregated rural schools. The laggard spots would be pointed out and the good spots complimented and publicized. Such an annual report circulated to citizens and to public school officials within the affected states, would have a good deal of effect.

2. Alternatively and less expensively, let your spotlight dance from state to state from year to year, and in a single state each year pick out for publicizing the best and the worst rural school. Give pictures and describe programs.

3. By field studies arranged through Southern educational institutions, describe four, five, or six sample patterns of complete segregation and desegregation. This could involve maps showing school district peculiarities, locations of school buildings, transportation patterns, residence by race, and other criteria. Thus the nation would be informed of the shifting pattern of the gerrymandering of public school districts with the view to avoiding desegregation.

4. Give an annual award to some particular school board which has done an excellent job in removing the barriers of segregation by integrating the public schools.

5. Give an annual award to the rural school which has done most in outreach to its community. This would include such matters as a forest station, soil conservation, land tenure improvements, rural housing, the marketing of farm products, home conveniences, etc.

Any of these things seem to me workable, though none of them are easy, and while I don't know what your annual budget is, none of them except the first (and then depending upon how broadly it is done) would be an expensive operation.

We will be glad to confer and work with you futhur in any way in which we can be helpful.

Sincerely,

George S. Mitchell

My dear Mr. Mitchell:

It is indeed a pleasure to listen to my friend Arthur Elder tell of his long conversation with you about the proposed project of the Rural Schools Committee. We are deeply grateful to you for the contributions you made when you spoke at our luncheon and I am particularly happy to learn of the funds you acquired to do the kind of job that has to be done in that section. I wish you every success in your efforts to organize state programs and, at the same time, raise funds to match the contributions in hand.

Because of your close association with the problems of the rural south and because of your knowledge with the whole question of leadership, I am wondering if you take time out to write us an appraisal of our work with suggestions for future orientation and application in the rural sections.

There is a real need to step up the

Dear Friend:

We told you in our August note, a copy of which is enclosed, how the Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling has sky-rocketed the number of calls on us for guidance and financial help.

With this historic change we feel sure you will understand why your past measurements on the size of your contributions to this organization should be discarded. So accelerated is the tempo of our work that dividends in concrete results can now be collected far faster than was possible in the past. The iron is really hot.

It is also important for you to know that our organization has begun to operate on a national basis this year. Converting the Supreme decision from an eloquent legal victory into a solid fact in the daily lives of millions of people is going to take a lot of hard doing in hundreds of counties, North and South.

Our budget is being raised through the Major medium of a luncheon and Souvenir Journal Saturday, November 20, in the Century Room of the Hotel Commodore, New York City.

We will honor JUDGE J. WATIES WARING, the courageous fighter for tolerance whose great contribution to the Supreme Court victory has changed the course of history. He has accepted the national presidency of this organization and will work closely with us in the future. DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE will deliver the tribute, one of his first addresses since the recent announcement of his appointment as Under-Secretary to the United Nations. A. PHILIP RANDOLPH, International President of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will be among the speakers. MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT and other great liberal figures will join us.

Enclosed is a luncheon reservation and advertising contract reply card. As you can see, time is very short and we will be very grateful for a quick response.

August, 1954

Dear Friend,

We're getting swamped ...

Calls on us for aid have multiplied tenfold since the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in the schools. It seems as if the dam has burst and much hard plowing we did in past years is ready to produce a crop.

This is completely understandable when you recall how we have always worked. Our small budget has been used to set up pilot projects through which we hope to give people in local communities the inspiration and the courage to take over. Often a single pilot project leads to several in the same county, locally run and locally financed. Your contributions then become seeds that produce forever.

Now many more courageous people, encouraged by the Supreme Court ruling, are raising their heads against the kind of blind opposition that thrives in Southern isolated rural areas. They are calling on us for guidance and a little help. We can do a great deal right now while the iron is hot. We are certain we can start many more communities on the road to giving their Negro and "poor White" children an even break.

We ask you with the utmost directness to discard your past measurements on your contributions to this organization. You who read current history know that the Supreme Court ruling has opened new and wider vistas. "The same as last year" simply does not square with today's opportunities. We can now use much more money effectively and constructively.

In another letter we will tell you about our November dinner and the journal we plan to publish to raise funds. Judge J. Waties Waring, of Charleston, South Carolina, has accepted the national presidency of the Committee and will be our guest of honor. It is our chance to pay tribute to this courageous fighter for tolerance whose great Supreme Court victory will forever be one of the bright pages in American history. The eloquent Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Director, Department of Trusteeship United Nations, will preside.

We know you share our joy at the Supreme Court ruling; you will be able to do something about making it mean something real and practical in the lives of millions of Southern children by planning now to participate wholeheartedly in our November dinner. You will hear from us soon.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mitchell:

We had a meeting of the National Committee for Rural Schools yesterday to discuss the affair we are putting on around November 20th. In addition to Ralph Bunche and Judge Waring, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is to be one of the guests of honor. I raised the point that the fact that all indications are that the affair should be a success emphasizes the need for developing a strategic program that would tie in with the work of your Council and other groups.

I also emphasized the fact that a large portion of your support up to this point had been forthcoming from labor organizations. This apparently was news for members of the group which I am sure feel the need for working closely with you.

Undoubtedly you will be hearing from Ben McLaurin. Actually up to this point he has not even seen the letter which apparently went to the office of the National Committee For Rural Schools. This leads me to believe that Ben probably used that organization's stationery. His continual absences from the city since your letter arrived means that it has remained in Rae Brandstein's possession up until this time.

My suggestion would be that if you wish to communicate further with Ben McLaurin you should write to him at his own office, C/o The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, 217 W. 138th St., New York City.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Arthur A. Elder LLS.

September 27, 1954

Dear Friend:

We told you in our August note, a copy of which is enclosed, how the Supreme Court anti-segregation ruling has sky-rocketed the number of calls on us for guidance and financial help.

With this historic change we feel sure you will understand why your past measurements on the size of your contributions to this organization should be discarded. So accelerated is the tempo of our work that dividends in concrete results can now be collected far faster than was possible in the past. The iron is really hot.

It is also important for you to know that our organization has begun to operate on a national basis this year. Converting the Supreme decision from an eloquent legal victory into a solid fact in the daily lives of millions of people is going to take a lot of hard doing in hundreds of counties, North and South.

Our budget is being raised through the Major medium of a luncheon and Souvenir Journal Saturday, November 20, in the Century Room of the Hotel Commodore, New York City.

We will honor JUDGE J. WATIES WARING, the courageous fighter for tolerance whose great contribution to the Supreme Court victory has changed the course of history. He has accepted the national presidency of this organization and will work closely with us in the future. DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE will deliver the tribute, one of his first addresses since the recent announcement of his appointment as Under-Secretary to the United Nations. A. PHILIP RANDOLPH, International President of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will be among the speakers. MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT and other great liberal figures will join us.

Enclosed is a luncheon reservation and advertising contract reply card. As you can see, time is very short and we will be very grateful for a quick response.

Sincerely yours,

Arthur A. Elder

Dear Mr. McLaurin:

All success to your forthcoming meeting. There is a long difficult pull ahead of all of us in getting adequate and integrated education for all school children, and the problems will be particularly difficult in the rural areas.

I feel sure that the local state organizations of the Southern Regional Council will wish to be helpful to the National Committee for Rural Schools as its expanded program proceeds.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

I appreciated receiving your note of September 27th advising me that you were expecting to hear from Ben.

I never realized how busy Ben is away from New York City until two or three days back. It seems that he is international field organizer for his union and his work certainly keeps him on the road. He just got in the city last week and left this morning for Richmond, Virginia, where he will be until the end of the month.

No doubt he has written you. Just in case he has not, however, I want you to know that your letter was read to the Board of Directors last week and then turned over to a sub-committee of which I was chairman to consider along with other suggestions that had been made regarding the possible future direction of the NCRS program.

I am enclosing a draft of the statement which we will be considering at a meeting next Wednesday. If you care to make any comment regarding things we have included, or in your opinion, we have omitted that should be in the statement of purposes, I would be happy to hear from you.

Prospects for a very successful luncheon are very good. In addition to Judge Waring we expect to have Eleanor Roosevelt, Ralph Bunche and A. Philip Randolph as honored guests.

Since the work of your Regional Council has received such consistent support from the AFL and CIO I would like to have specific reference made to the need for our tying in with such groups as yours on a day to day basis. This reference might appropriately come in the form of a statement from you as executive director of the Council which could be printed in the Souvenir Journal we are publishing for distribution at the luncheon. I would appreciate your reaction to this suggestion which I will bring up at the next meeting of our committee. I am also enclosing copies of the two communications which have been sent out to quite an extensive mailing list up to this point.

Next week this time we will really begin to step up our campaign for contributions and reservations to the luncheon.

It so happens that I had a very pressing problem concerning Griffin, Ga. I left three messages for you at the office of I.L.G. Training Institute in the hope that they would reach you. I hope you had a successful trip.

Dear George:

I have been invited to make a talk in New York on May 17 before the National Committee for Rural Schools. Do you know anything about that outfit?

I recall that you and Paul Christopher were very doubtful about my making a talk some time ago before Southerners for Civil Rights. Your fears were well founded. They were prompted by the possibility that we might hurt ourselves with the Ford people.

If you will read the last two paragraphs on page 6 and the first paragraph on page 7 of the speech of Robert M. Hutchins before the National Press Club (which Mrs. Hamilton sent me) you will see that the foundations perforce are paying some attention to such matters.

April 25, 1955

Dear Friend:

You are invited to attend a meeting of the National Committee for Rural Schools, on Tuesday, May 17th, at 8 P.M., at the Community Church, 40 East 35th Street, New York City.

On this day, we are commemorating the decision of the United States Supreme Court, made on May 17th, 1954, to abolish segregation in the public schools and give every American child an equal opportunity at schooling, which is his inherent right. The National Committee for Rural Schools is determined to work for integration now! We must work and never falter for a moment to help make this law a living reality.

The speakers will be Judge J. Waties Waring, Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, the eminent psychologist, Mr. Marion A. Wright, from the South. Reverend Donald Harrington will preside.

I am certain that all interested people will want to hear of what has been done since that momentous decision. We hope you will join us.

Sincerely yours,

J. Waties Waring

Dear Mr. Elder:

Last Spring, at your invitation I believe, Marion Wright spoke to the National Committee forthe Rural Schools. The Fund for the Republic is interested in distributing copies of Mr. Wright's speech to consultants and board members of the Fund. The Fund has asked us to get the necessary permission.

Could you obtain for me the permission of the National Committee for the Rural Schools?

I will be most appreciative.

TENTATIVE DRAFT

STATEMENT OF PURPOSES
NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR RURAL SCHOOLS

The NCRS is dedicated to the promotion of adequate unsegregated public school facilities extending from kindergarten through high school to which all children may have access. The NCRS believes that the inability of children in some parts of the nation to take advantage of existing school facilities and the lack of buildings and adequate teaching staff in many areas still combine to deprive thousands of our children of the opportunity for education.

The NCRS supports the following program as a means of eliminating disparities and achieving the objective of real equality of educational opportunity:

1. Assisting and stimulating the establishment of pilot operations for new and improved schools in such a manner as to encourage maximum community interest and self-help.

2. Bringing areas and schools which need help in touch with institutions, agencies and individuals able and willing to give help.

3. Supporting publicly financial programs directed at making it possible for all children to attend school regardless of place of residence or economic status of their families.

4. Promoting local, state and Federal tax programs based primarily on ability to pay that will provide funds necessary for adequate housing, staffing and operation of schools.

5. Encouraging outstanding achievements by the making of awards to pupils, teachers, school boards or organizations which have made significant contribution to the building and enrichment of integrated school programs.

6. Conducting conferences, issuing reports and cooperating with all agencies concerned in promoting extension of educational opportunity.

A seed was planted...

1949

1950

This is what can be done — if YOU want to do it!

Does it look small for the number of pupils standing in front of it? There are more than twice as many as are shown.

The children walk 3-8 miles from their homes, each way, every day. There they are (below).

there was no "recreation" for the children except playing in the dirt! Yes, the older ones played "baseball" — with a "ball" of crumpled newspaper and a "bat" of cardboard tied with string, which flopped about uselessly after a few swings . . .

Now they have bats and balls and play equipment. We sent it — with funds begged from friends . . . to guarantee the inalienable right of these American citizens to play baseball — for real!

One day the mother who was president of the P.T.A. dressed up and went to the County Building and made a simple speech: "See what these people away off North did for us," she told them. "Now what are you going to do?"

It worked! The county got busy! And that's why the children whom we found in a one-room shack are now learning to be Americans in a new modern brick county school for Negro children! It's the one in the photo on the fly-leaf, labeled "1950."

It has modern school appointments, 10 class rooms for 480 students, 13 teachers, a janitor, a cafeteria and 2 cooks, and 4 school buses transport the children back and forth.

Not only that: the people in the neighboring county were stirred to action. They also built a grand new school, even larger than this one!

Beyond that are other counties . . . and other states . . . This is a beginning. The seed can be planted, if YOU want to do it!

Maybe you know the conditions in the rural South, the conditions under which the children grow up . . . We thought so too, until we saw them . . .

Maybe you think nothing can be done about it by private individuals, without government action . . .

We know something can be done about it, because —

We are doing it. We have done it. We have made a beginning,* and all on a voluntary basis.

We are aware of the federal aid-to-education bill, and are also aware that while the lawmakers are pondering it, it will take years, if ever, before any part of the funds reaches rural Negro schools.

But in one county of one southern state, this is what has been done —

NOW!

We decided to start with one typical schoolhouse. Here it is (above), as it was in 1949.

But you see only the outside: a weather-beaten ugly clap-board shack standing in a dusty patch on a rural lane. Inside it's one room, there are no seats except for younger children (planks). There are no classroom facilities. There is not even an outhouse. There is no water . . . not even to drink. It is just . . . a shack.

Does it look small for the number of pupils standing in front of it? There are more than twice as many as are shown.

The children walk 3-8 miles from their homes, each way, every day. There they are (below).

One of the boys owned a broken-down bicycle. Here is how it served (below) . . . School buses? There aren't any.

These older boys will stand up in the classroom all day. Without lunch. They have had a scrap for breakfast; at night they will get another skimpy meal and go to bed. No wonder they look more dead than alive in the classroom!

Americans are generously giving for children the world over, and justly so. There is something you can do for our own.

The National Committee for Rural Schools was formed to do it. Without waiting — now!

These children need classroom facilities, hot lunches, new clothing, bus transportation, recreational and playground facilities, a community center, books, a livable school.

You have just read our program.

We moved into this county. We assisted in organizing a community P.T.A. among the parents, with one of the mothers as its energetic president. With guidance and just a trickle of funds from us, they started to work . . . to build a new school, themselves!

But before starting to build, they took care of something else . . .

Below, the men are shown readying the grounds for a grassy baseball field. Think: during the whole school day, there was no "recreation" for the children except playing in the dirt! Yes, the older ones played "baseball" — with a "ball" of crumpled newspaper and a "bat" of cardboard tied with string, which flopped about uselessly after a few swings . . .

Now they have bats and balls and play equipment. We sent it — with funds begged from friends . . . to guarantee the inalienable right of these American citizens to play baseball — for real!

The mothers and fathers got to work on the old shack (above) with lumber bought with the few dollars we could raise here at the time. The men sawed and hammered; the women sewed new curtains . . .

Below is the new school they built with their own hands. It has seats for all the children! It has a desk for the teacher. It has windows. It is raised above the swampy ground. And for it we managed to obtain blackboards and maps and books — and a radio — The parents themselves walked in from miles around to listen to the radio. The people had a community center . . .

It didn't stop there!

And that's the point! This isn't charity. The seed had been planted . . .

One day the mother who was president of the P.T.A. dressed up and went to the County Building and made a simple speech: "See what these people away off North did for us," she told them. "Now what are you going to do?"

It worked! The county got busy! And that's why the children whom we found in a one-room shack are now learning to be Americans in a new modern brick county school for Negro children! It's the one in the photo on the fly-leaf, labeled "1950."

It has modern school appointments, 10 class rooms for 480 students, 13 teachers, a janitor, a cafeteria and 2 cooks, and 4 school buses transport the children back and forth.

Not only that: the people in the neighboring county were stirred to action. They also built a grand new school, even larger than this one!

Beyond that are other counties . . . and other states . . . This is a beginning. The seed can be planted, if YOU want to do it!

WON'T YOU HELP?

As one friend has written about our work: "This sort of thing is contagious . . . I do not know any useful educational enterprise in which your dollars will get prompter results. This is not a private charity which helps people to evade responsibility; it is an organization which teaches and stimulates people to learn to live together."

Although this situation has been neglected for decades, there is no valid reason why it should continue. We have no right to permit future generations of Americans to be permanently crippled by illiteracy.

Because the need is so great, our Committee has received hundreds of requests from other states for assistance. We are pledged to a continuation of this program and we need your help.

You can shrug your shoulders and turn away from human beings who desperately need your help — or you can say: "Here is where I can do something — something which is not merely charity — something which will plant a seed..."

CONFIDENTIAL

The National Committee for Unity

Objectives:

1. To re-establish the lines of communication between the Negro and white races.
2. To initiate an educational program designed to raise the morals and health standards of Negro residents of the South.
3. To promote a clean-up, paint-up program; to instill pride in the domesticated Negro communities.
4. To sponsor an educational program designed to insure the Negro his unqualified civil rights which will include fair and unbiased legal representation and equitable right to vote.
5. To continue to find substitute channels or progress which will establish peace and social advancement in preference to the current trend toward violence and destruction created by the drive to integrate the South's public school systems.

1. LINES OF COMMUNICATION: First objective of the committee will be to re-establish lines of communication between Negro and white with members seeking to reach the core of difficulties between the two races. This means a cooperative, give-and-take attitude is necessary from the representatives of both sides and a dedication to an effort to find solutions which are just.

2. NEGRO EDUCATION: Negroes will initiate an educational program designed to raise the moral and health standards of those Negroes who (individuals or communities) have not reached a level commensurate with normal community or individual standards as recognized in the framework of contemporary society.

3. CIVIL RIGHTS: Whites are to initiate and sponsor an educational program designed to insure the Negro his unqualified Civil Rights. These will include fair and unbiased legal representation, the equitable right to vote after meeting the qualifications set for any other citizen, and establishment of a common code of decency.

4. PAINT-UP, CLEAN-UP: The committee, as a whole, sponsor and promote a paint-up, clean-up program primarily aimed at neighborhoods or entire communities, but also to include the individual. An attempt should be made to gain donations of most working materials needed, and a drive set for diversion of funds from both within and without the Southern region for funds to secure paid labor from the ranks of Negro unemployed.

5. TREND TOWARD VIOLENCE: There is little doubt in the minds of leaders of both sides that continued pressure for integration of the schools will lead to bloodshed. It is, then, encumbent upon the members of the committee to maintain an active program of improvement, which reflects both in the individual and the community, in preference to the current program moving toward complete abolition of the social and economic structure.

SUMMARY:

By re-opening the lines of communication and maintaining them by persons willing to sit and discuss common problems there is hope of rejuvination in a critical period. There is no question about the necessity for a give and take attitude on the part of both Negro and white. There must be a withdrawal from the current press for immediate integration of schools and parks. And, on the other hand, there must be a similar and equal determination on the part of whites to seek channels through which the Negro can expect and be guaranteed certain civil rights which now are completely missing, only implied, or present only on a once-in-awhile basis.

Through education and employment of the paint-up, clean-up program, the committee should seek to give the Negro a basis for pride both in himself and the community to which he belongs. The two divisions, education on the moral and sanitation plan, cannot justly be separated from the physical show of progress. Negroes, through their influence with members of their race in various communities throughout the region, must combine, then, the forces of physical labor and those equipped to do the job of constructing a sound spiritual foundation. It seems feasible that funds now designated for the all-out fight for integration, and more, could be channeled into a fund for labor. Salaries thus would go to presently non-working members of the communities for their part in the painting and cleaning. The role of teacher, played by doctors, lawyers, teachers, ministers and other professionals of the same communities would, by necessity, be asked to devote part of their time in a coordinated program for completion of the educational phase which would stress the importance of maintaining the district in a clean and orderly fashion.

Common decency would indicate that while such a program is being realized, the Negro should, as he reaches that accepted level of citizenship, be accorded the right of franchise. Other civil rights should be his by virtue of the fact that he is a human being. There is no short road to such ends. All possibilities must be searched out and all things considered in the ultimate solutions. It will take time.

This outline is provided only as a basis from which the committee might operate initially. It is fully expected that expansion and ultimate changes will be realized. And there is no attempt to signal the final inroads to the solutions sought. These can only be found through thorough and frank consideration of what we consider to be the problems at hand.

PERSONS WITH WHOM THIS PROGRAM HAS BEEN DISCUSSED INCLUDE:

1. Cooper Green, Birmingham.
2. Earl Pippin, AFL-CIO Vice-President, Montgomery.
3. Ed Mauldin, Large landowner, farmer and noted cotton statistician, Town Creek, Ala.

8. Carl Bear, Contractor, businessman, Montgomery.
9. Noble Crump, businessman, Montgomery.
10. Dr. Henry Russell, former Pastor Trinity Presbyterian Church of Montgomery, now in Memphis.
11. John Hodgson, contractor, Montgomery.
12. The Rev. K. L. Buford, Pastor Methodist Church, Tuskegee.

Others who would fall into the category of "man in the street," who would have no other interest than that of seeing peace preserved and progress in the making, also have been asked for their reactions to such a program. This was done in an effort to gain a fairly sound cross-section opinion.

Reaction to the proposed program has been mixed. Among those mentioned on the foregoing list, there has been, without exception, an expressed desire to see a return to peaceful relations between the races. Most of the opinion differences have been in expressions on the possibility of success of a middle of the road program at this stage. At least two expressed the belief that relations were fractured beyond repair. "It is too late to do anything but toe the line and prepare for an all-out fight," was their first reaction. The majority, however, expressed a firm desire to seek a solution, even at this late date, and voiced the opinion that the outlined program apparently would provide a basis for the opening of such preparations. The Rev. Buford, who agreed to lead Negroes of the region in such a program as outlined here, wished for a firm commitment to the establishment of the educational program which would eventually bring the Negro his Civil Rights. He places this above all else in the matter of race relations and makes this his key to success for any proposed change in the present "do it now" program. According to his own statement, he does not consider integration the basic need, or for that matter even a necessary consideration, so long as the Negro is given some foundation for self respect and the privilege of exercising the customary rights of citizenry. He is aware, too, that the program will take time. This seems not an unfavorable thought in his consideration of the possibilities for success. Additional Negroes, leaders in their respective communities over the state, are being contacted by the Rev. Buford. They (seven of them) will be asked to serve as committee members. Other white businessmen and industrialists over the state also are being asked for their cooperation in the overall program, if not to serve on the committee.

ORGANIZATION: (Suggested structure for the committee, with national, regional and state divisions.)

MEMBERS:	EAST————6	(New York and Washington)
	REGIONAL——6	(Southern, excluding Alabama)
	ALABAMA——14	(Representing both Negro and White on state-wide basis)
	NATIONAL——6	(2 from each of the 3 divisions to serve as National Exec. Comm.)

Mr. Leslie Dunbar
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

Responsible persons rejoice in the passage of the Civil Rights Act. Yet we must heed the prophetic words of Norman Cousins:

> "Not much time is left. The white people of America are going to have to do something dramatic and they have to do it fast. The passage of the civil rights bill is the least, not the most, that is required. The main work has to be done not just by legislation but by enough individual Americans who accept a moral obligation and responsibility in their everyday attitudes and actions. ... A national tragedy is in the making. If it is to be averted, the eyes and consciences of the nation will have to be opened wide - and soon." (Saturday Review 5/30/64 p 22)

Many of us would respond to such a call for individual action but need clear direction as to where and how to act. One important area of action is in the field of housing, "perhaps the most ubiquitous and deeply rooted Civil Rights problem in America." (1963 Report of The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, p 237)

Suburban housing, virtually closed to non-whites, leads to Negro central cities, with consequent segregation in schools. Bold steps are needed now to change this pattern. But how?

Patterns of segregation in both housing and schools are in large part determined by investors in real estate who decide who may buy or rent. Therefore, we must encourage investors of good will to make their dollars work for justice as well as monetary return. The National Committee On Tithing in Investment, Inc. (NCTI) of which I am co-chairman has been formed to develop this dramatic new approach to investment.

Mr. Leslie Dunbar
July 27, 1964

Prior to making a broad national appeal I am writing to a group of concerned people to inform you of our plans, to seek comments and questions, and to invite you to become a national sponsor. After having given this matter your serious consideration, I hope you will sign the enclosed sponsor card and return it to me as soon as possible. A stamped reply envelope is enclosed.

NCTI's purpose is to educate non-profit agencies and individuals to commit about 10% of their available capital for investments in housing open to all, as well as to encourage, perform or sponsor research on investment patterns of churches, unions and other groups.

The function of The National Committee On Tithing in Investment, whose board is listed in the enclosed "The Terrible Silence of the Decent," is not to raise funds but to encourage tithing in investment by emphasizing the moral urgency of the problem. NCTI will serve as a clearing house for information on tithing, and urge banks and brokers to handle tithing accounts. Several have already agreed to do so. A wide range of investment opportunities is available to meet the varied needs of individuals and institutions for safety.

The tithing in investment movement can be part of the great social revolution now taking place. Not all of us can go to Mississippi to register voters, but we can act boldly to end the insufferable restrictions in housing. We must act now, as one Mississippi student volunteer has said, to do something about "the closed society." (Jerry Parker, The New York Times 6/30/64, p 19)

Sponsorship involves no obligation save belief in the idea. But it is an idea that can start now to change the world of segregation in housing and education for many Americans.

Do return the sponsor card today and help to build a world where people can know each other across all walls of race or creed.

Sincerely,

Don Fraser

Help Break

THE TERRIBLE SILENCE OF THE DECENT

Many Americans want open occupancy in housing, but few of us in our daily lives can take the trouble and time to work for it. We are caught in what Life has aptly called "the terrible silence of the decent" -- a silence that undermines our convictions and erodes the cause of civil rights. Suburban housing, virtually closed to non-whites, leads to Negro central cities, with consequent segregation in schools. Bold steps are needed now to change this pattern. But how?

The following proposal -- Tithing in Investment -- explains one important way we can break the silence. It is based on the proposition that one's investments can be an eloquent voice for integration. Money talks. If you want your money to speak for your beliefs, you will want to consider this proposal for Tithing in Investment.

1. Q. What is Tithing in Investment?

A. It is investment by non-profit institutions or by individuals of about 10% of their available investment capital in housing that is open to all. The investor gradually builds a "Tithing Portfolio" consisting of stocks, bonds and other securities or investments in real estate issued by organizations that practice housing integration.

2. Q. What is the National Committee On Tithing in Investment and what is its program?

A. This is a non-profit agency organized to meet the challenge of "the terrible silence of the decent" in the field of investment in housing. NCTI will not invest. It will endeavor to link sound investments with fairness and justice in housing. It will serve as a clearing house for information, so that stockbrokers and banks can act knowledgeably on behalf of their tithing clients. It will promote research on the investment policies of churches, labor unions, colleges and other non-profit institutions.

3. Q. How would investments be linked with fair housing?

A. NCTI will develop a panel of people familiar with open occupancy housing problems. This group, on request, will advise on the social aspects of investments. The panel will not concern itself with assessing financial risks. This is the responsibility of the investment agency.

4. Q. How else will NCTI assist tithing investors?

A. NCTI is accumulating a list of brokers, banks and other investing groups that will handle tithing accounts. This list will be sent to any person or institution upon request.

5. Q. Who runs the National Committee On Tithing in Investment?

A. Listed below are the directors. The Board of Directors sets the policy.

6. Q. Doesn't the existence of FHA and VA mortgages make your program unnecessary?

A. Even if government housing agencies were enthusiastically promoting open housing, these activities cover only a small part of the housing market. In addition, FHA mortgage insurance is not available in many situations. The buyer of a large apartment house, for example, would have to make major improvements (about 20% of value) in the building to become eligible for an FHA mortgage. Few buildings worth buying need such extensive improvements. Moreover, purchasing groups and builders need equity capital for all buildings -- and such funds are not readily available for open housing.

7. Q. Doesn't the late President Kennedy's Executive Order on housing do the job, making tithing unnecessary? What about The Civil Rights Act of 1964? What about state and local fair housing laws?

A. The sad fact is this: Most dwelling units in the United States are not covered by the Executive Order or by any fair housing law. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 does not cover housing. Housing integration requires the energy and funds of dedicated Americans, not laws alone.

8. Q. How much safety is available in open occupancy housing investments? What are the risks?

A. As with all investments, there is risk. In our judgment there are sound investment opportunities in this field, and these opportunities may multiply as NCTI's success encourages builders and developers to open their housing to all.

9. Q What about the person with a complex investment portfolio? Could he reorganize his portfolio gradually over a period of time -- say, one year -- or would he have to set up a Tithing Portfolio overnight?

A. NCTI does not intend to put a time limit on a person's effort to tithe. Conscience and sound business judgment are the sole criteria.

10. Q. Can a church practice tithing in investment?

A. Certainly. And so can a union, college, pension fund, charitable foundation, or any other responsible institution. Most such institutions have assets which are presently invested in some fashion. We seek to encourage these institutions to channel a portion of their investment capital into open housing.

11. Q. Having agreed that about 10% of one's investments shall be used to promote open housing, how does an individual or institution then assure himself that the balance of his portfolio is invested consistent with belief in equal opportunity for all citizens?

A. For information, contact the United Council for Fair Employment, Inc., 342 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y. 10017, a non-profit agency.

12. Q. How is the tithing movement financed?

A. NCTI is supported by voluntary contributions. Gifts are needed -- to pay for staff, rent, printing, postage, phone, etc. Contributions are not invested; they are used for current operating expenses. Checks to "National Committee On Tithing in Investment, Inc." should be mailed to Howard W. Smith, executive secretary, room 704, 1914 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009.

13. Q. What can I do to help?

A. You can become a sponsor of NCTI. This does not obligate you to contribute money to the agency. There is no commitment, save belief in the idea of tithing.

Here are other ways you can help:

Seek sponsors -- especially among people who control capital either personally or through their roles in churches, pension funds, foundations, universities, labor unions, etc.

Be on the lookout for ways that you can influence investment policies: as a college alumnus, as a bank depositor, as a church member, as a member of any board, and even as a voting citizen with a stake in the administration of municipal and state pension funds.

Spread the word about NCTI. Send us names of concerned friends so that we can send them material on tithing.

Send us names of brokers, banks and other investment agencies interested in handling tithing accounts. Help us build up a national list of friendly investment agencies. Start now to change the world of segregation in housing and education for many Americans.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

We continue to seek sponsors. The Board is now turning to the task of finding suitable means to identify investment opportunities in open housing for those prepared to carry out their commitment to the tithing concept.

You will hear from us soon. In the meantime, you can help by distributing additional copies of "The Terrible Silence of The Decent."

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

As a founding NCTI sponsor, you will be happy to learn of our continuing growth since the first printing of "The Terrible Silence of The Decent. Two thousand responsible citizens, including 100 college presidents and scores of business and religious leaders have become sponsors. Also we have received enthusiastic letters from every state commending NCTI for encouraging investors to provide equal opportunity to all citizens who buy or rent housing.

The tithing movement has met a positive response far beyond our most optimistic expectations, indicating that the eyes and consciences of the nation are now being opened. Mindful of the great urgency for private initiative in housing, the board has decided NCTI should make a dramatic appeal for sponsors. We want to reach the American public as soon as possible by full page advertisements in such publications as the New York Times, The Wall Street Journal and The Saturday Review.

Since you are one of the people who helped get the tithing movement off to this tremendous start, I am inviting you to share in its growth by making a generous contribution for ads in the New York Times and elsewhere. A card and stamped envelope are enclosed to speed your reply.

Public word of this tithing movement in large national ads will give new hope to all who have experienced the bitterness of housing discrimination. Your early response will be doubly helpful, as space must be reserved in advance.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

I am happy to announce that generous contributions by sponsors of The National Committee On Tithing in Investment make it possible for the board to go ahead with plans to announce the tithing movement by ads in the Times and elsewhere. A proof of the copy prepared by advertising friends is enclosed. We are ready to go to press.

However, although we already have your agreement to sponsor NCTI, the Times requires specific permission to list your name as a sponsor in a N. Y. Times ad. The enclosed list includes your name among those we would like to name in the ad.

Your listing on the enclosed card is as we would like it to appear in the ad. If this is agreeable with you, please check the card for accuracy, and make only necessary corrections. Please give your approval by signing the card, and return it promptly so that your name can be included in these major announcements.

These ads, in my opinion, will give new hope to countless Americans that equal housing opportunity may become a reality for them. A stamped reply envelope is enclosed to speed your answer.

Dear Mr. Dunbar:

The NY Times ad which bears your name brought an exciting response. The tithing movement, strengthened by you as a founding sponsor, is gaining momentum daily. People from every part of the nation are becoming sponsors, indicating growing acceptance of the tithing concept -- that one's investment can do powerful work for fair housing.

All of us are encouraged by the results. Now, clearly, is the time to make the tithing movement a vigorous force in American life.

Our immediate goal is to reach thousands of potential NCTI supporters throughout the nation. We can do this through wide distribution of the NY Times reprint. This will not only enlist new supporters essential to the growth of the tithing idea, but will also encourage developers of housing to plan open communities.

Presently, we are developing the following steps to provide leadership and to educate for tithing:

1) a series of one-day conferences for religious leaders, their investment counsellors and people who have successfully invested in open housing ..

2) an educational NCTI Newsletter ..

3) a research program on the investment policies of non-profit organizations.

For these and other important tasks in the NCTI program, we need major contributions. Won't you please send your check today. Make it out to NCTI, and mail it to me at 1914 Connecticut Ave., N.W. Washington, D.C. 20009.

With gratitude for the new moral climate which your sponsorship is helping to develop, I am

Sincerely,

Donald M Fraser

In addition, NCTI intends to undertake or sponsor research and education concerning institutional investment policies. Is Fair Housing Good Business?

As with all investments, there is risk in open housing. But in our judgment there are many sound investment opportunities

Many Americans want open occupancy in housing, but only a few of us in our daily lives can take the time and trouble to work for it. We are caught in what Life Magazine has called "the terrible silence of the decent."

The following proposal – Tithing in Investment – is based on the idea that one's investments can be an eloquent voice for integration. In just a few months – and with very little promotion – this plan has attracted nearly 3,000 sponsors. They include churchmen, educators, congressmen, businessmen, authors, union leaders, lawyers, economists, artists, entertainers and many others. The list grows longer every day.

Money talks. If you want your money to speak for your beliefs, you will want to consider this proposal for Tithing in Investment.

What Is Tithing In Investment?

It is investment by individuals or by non-profit institutions of about 10 per cent of their available investment capital in housing that is open to all. The National Committee on Tithing in Investment (NCTI) will serve as a clearinghouse for information about such investments. Organized as a non-profit agency, NCTI will not invest. But it will alert individuals and non-profit groups to investment opportunities in equal housing.

NCTI will bring together investors of good will and housing professionals who are committed to open occupancy. In this way the investor will gradually build up a "tithing portfolio," consisting of investments favorable to open occupancy housing. Such a portfolio might include equity in a real estate investment trust or a partnership owning apartment houses, mortgages, securities of development companies, and deposits in commercial or savings institutions.

In addition, NCTI intends to undertake or sponsor research and education concerning institutional investment policies. Such a program might suggest, for example, ways in which those policies could be altered to effect a lessening of neighborhood tensions, reduce prejudice and discrimination, and promote civil rights secured by law.

Is Fair Housing Good Business?

As with all investments, there is risk in open housing. But in our judgment there are many sound investment opportunities in this field; and these opportunities may multiply as NCTI's success encourages builders and developers to open their housing to everyone. However, NCTI will not advise investors on the financial soundness or safety of the investment. That is clearly the responsibility of the investor's broker or banker. NCTI will provide information on the social soundness of the investment – that is, whether the company's selling and renting policies are in line with the investor's own convictions.

What Good Will It Do?

Plenty! There is today a tragic shortage of capital available to developers and apartment house owners who wish to practice equal housing. The consequences are all too clear: each year about 1.5 million new family units are built, nearly all of them on a "de facto" segregated basis. And each year we get larger "black belts" in our cities and larger "white belts" in our suburbs.

One clear way to reverse this trend is to pour investment capital into equal housing. The money is available. Think what a tremendous difference it would make if the churches, the colleges, the labor unions and the foundations earmarked a small portion of their investments for equal housing. Not to mention the millions of additional dollars in pension funds, trust funds and individual portfolios!

What Can You Do To Help?

You can become a sponsor of NCTI. This does not obligate you to contribute money. The only commitment you make is to the idea of Tithing in Investment. If you want to contribute money to be used for this educational work, wonderful. We can use it. There are other ways to help, too:

Seek sponsors – especially among people who invest capital either personally or through their roles in churches, pension funds, foundations, universities and labor unions.

Be on the lookout for ways that you can influence investment policies: as a college alumnus, as a bank depositor, as a church member, as a member of any board, and even as a voting citizen with a stake in the administration of municipal and state pension funds.

Spread the word about NCTI. Send us names of concerned friends so we can send them material on tithing. And order reprints of this ad for friends (see coupon).

Send us names of brokers, bankers, persons holding investments and non-profit groups who believe in equal housing. Help us to build a national list of friendly investors and investment agencies.

And Send Us The Coupon

Right now send the coupon enrolling yourself as a sponsor. Send it today, whether or not you choose to send money as well. Tithing in Investment is one important and practical way of breaking "the terrible silence of the decent." You can speak up for equal housing. Do it now.

Help break

Many Americans want open occupancy in housing, but few of us in our daily lives can take the trouble and time to work for it. We are caught in what Life has aptly called "the terrible silence of the decent"—a silence that undermines our convictions and erodes the cause of civil rights. Suburban housing, virtually closed to non-whites, leads to Negro central cities, with consequent segregation in schools. Bold steps are needed now to change this pattern. But how?

The following proposal—Tithing in Investment—explains one important way we can break the silence. It is based on the proposition that one's investments can be an eloquent voice for integration. Money talks. If you want your money to speak for your beliefs, you will want to consider this proposal for Tithing in Investment.

1. Q. What is Tithing in Investment?

A. It is investment by non-profit institutions or by individuals of about 10% of their available investment capital in housing that is open to all. The investor gradually builds a "Tithing Portfolio" consisting of stocks, bonds and other securities or investments in real estate issued by organizations that practice housing integration.

2. Q. What is the National Committee On Tithing in Investment and what is its program?

A. This is a non-profit agency organized to meet the challenge of "the terrible silence of the decent" in the field of investment in housing. NCTI will not invest. It will endeavor to link sound investments with fairness and justice in housing. It will serve as a clearing house for information, so that stockbrokers and banks can act knowledgeably on behalf of their tithing clients. It will promote research on the investment policies of churches, labor unions, colleges and other non-profit institutions.

3. Q. How would investments be linked with fair housing?

A. NCTI will develop a panel of people familiar with open occupancy housing problems. This group, on request, will advise on the social aspects of investments. The panel will not concern itself with assessing financial risks. This is the responsibility of the investment agency.

4. Q. How else will NCTI assist tithing investors?

A. NCTI is accumulating a list of brokers, banks and other investing groups that will handle tithing accounts. This list will be sent to any person or institution upon request.

5. Q. Who runs the National Committee On Tithing in Investment?

A. Listed below are the directors. The Board of Directors sets the policy.

6. Q. Doesn't the existence of FHA and VA mortgages make your program unnecessary?

A. Even if government housing agencies were enthusiastically promoting open housing, these activities cover only a small part of the housing market. In addition, FHA mortgage insurance is not available in many situations. The buyer of a large apartment house, for example, would have to make major improvements (about 20% of value) in the building to become eligible for an FHA mortgage. Few buildings worth buying need such extensive improvements. Moreover, purchasing groups and builders need equity capital for all buildings—and such funds are not readily available for open housing.

7. Q. Doesn't the late President Kennedy's Executive Order on housing do the job, making tithing unnecessary? What about The Civil Rights Act of 1964? What about state and local fair housing laws?

A. The sad fact is this: Most dwelling units in the United States are not covered by the Executive Order or by any fair housing law. The Civil Rights Act of 1964 does not cover housing. Housing integration requires the energy and funds of dedicated Americans, not laws alone.

8. Q. How much safety is available in open occupancy housing investments? What are the risks?

A. As with all investments, there is risk. In our judgment there are sound investment opportunities in this field, and these opportunities may multiply as NCTI's success encourages builders and developers to open their housing to all.

9. Q. What about the person with a complex investment portfolio? Could he reorganize his portfolio gradually over a period of time—say, one year—or would he have to set up a Tithing Portfolio overnight?

A. NCTI does not intend to put a time limit on a person's effort to tithe. Conscience and sound business judgment are the sole criteria.

10. Q. Can a church practice tithing in investment?

A. Certainly. And so can a union, college, pension fund, charitable foundation, or any other responsible institution. Most such institutions have assets which are presently invested in some fashion. We seek to encourage these institutions to channel a portion of their investment capital into open housing.

11. Q. Having agreed that about 10% of one's investments shall be used to promote open housing, how does an individual or institution

"The tithing in investment movement can be part of the great social revolution now taking place. Not all of us can go to Mississippi to register voters, but we can act boldly to end the insufferable restrictions in housing. We must act now, as one Mississippi student volunteer has said, to do something about 'the closed society.'"

—Letter from Congressman Donald Fraser inviting friends to sponsor the movement.

"More and more I feel that the people of ill will have used time much more effectively than have the people of good will. We will have to repent in this generation not merely for the hateful words and actions of the bad people but for the appalling silence of the good people. Human progress never rolls in on wheels of inevitability; it comes through the tireless efforts of men willing to be co-workers with God, and without this hard work, time itself becomes an ally of the forces of social stagnation. We must use time creatively, in the knowledge that the time is always ripe to do right. Now is the time to make real the promise of democracy and transform our pending national elegy into a creative psalm of brotherhood. Now is the time to lift our national policy from the quicksand of racial injustice to the solid rock of human dignity."

"Why We Can't Wait"

then assure himself that the balance of his portfolio is invested consistent with belief in equal opportunity for all citizens?

A. For information, contact the United Council for Fair Employment, Inc., 342 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017, a non-profit agency.

12. Q. How is the tithing movement financed?

A. NCTI is supported by voluntary contributions. Gifts are needed—to pay for staff, rent, printing, postage, phone, etc. Contributions are not invested; they are used for current operating expenses. Checks to "National Committee On Tithing in Investment, Inc." should be mailed to Howard W. Smith, Executive Secretary, Room 704, 1914 Connecticut Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20009.

13. Q. What can I do to help?

A. You can become a sponsor of NCTI. This does not obligate you to contribute money to the agency. There is no commitment, save belief in the idea of tithing.

Here are other ways you can help:

Seek sponsors—especially among people who control capital either personally or through their roles in churches, pension funds, foundations, universities, labor unions, etc.

Be on the lookout for ways that you can influence investment policies: as a college alumnus, as a bank depositor, as a church member, as a member of any board, and even as a voting citizen with a stake in the administration of municipal and state pension funds.

If your home or college town is all white or segregated, organize a fair housing committee. About 400 are now at work for equal housing opportunities. For information on organizing fair housing committees, write to the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, 426 W. 58 Street, New York 19, N.Y. When moving from one city to another, find an integrated community or help to integrate one by your action. Ask for aid in getting facts on housing desegregation in your community. Sometimes such facts are available from local offices of the American Friends Service Committee, 160 N. 15 Street, Philadelphia 2, Pa.; National Urban League, 14 East 48 Street, New York 17, N.Y.; NAACP, 20 West 40 Street, New York 32, N.Y., or Congress on Racial Equality, 38 Park Row, New York 38, N.Y. Morris Milgram —"Developing Open Communities," National Student Councils of YMCA & YWCA.

"Not much time is left. The white people of America are going to have to do something dramatic and they have to do it fast. The passage of the civil rights bill is the least, not the most, that is required. The main work has to be done not just by legislation but by enough individual Americans who accept a moral obligation and responsibility in their everyday attitudes and actions. . . . A national tragedy is in the making. If it is to be averted, the eyes and consciences of the nation will have to be opened wide—and soon."

Many Americans want open occupancy in housing, but only a few of us in our daily lives can take the time and trouble to work for it. We are caught in what Life Magazine has called "the terrible silence of the decent."

The following proposal – Tithing in Investment – is based on the idea that one's investments can be an eloquent voice for integration. In just a few months – and with very little promotion – this plan has attracted nearly 3,000 sponsors. They include churchmen, educators, congressmen, businessmen, authors, union leaders, lawyers, economists, artists, entertainers and many others. The list grows longer every day.

Money talks. If you want your money to speak for your beliefs, you will want to consider this proposal for Tithing in Investment.

What Is Tithing In Investment?

It is investment by individuals or by non-profit institutions of about 10 per cent of their available investment capital in housing that is open to all. The National Committee on Tithing in Investment (NCTI) will serve as a clearinghouse for information about such investments. Organized as a non-profit agency, NCTI will not invest. But it will alert individuals and non-profit groups to investment opportunities in equal housing.

NCTI will bring together investors of good will and housing professionals who are committed to open occupancy. In this way the investor will gradually build up a "tithing portfolio," consisting of investments favorable to open occupancy housing. Such a portfolio might include equity in a real estate investment trust or a partnership owning apartment houses, mortgages, securities of development companies, and deposits in commercial or savings institutions.

Is Open Housing Sound Business?

As with all investments, there is risk in open housing. But in our judgment there are many sound investment opportunities in this field; and these opportunities may multiply as NCTI's success encourages builders and developers to open their housing to everyone. However, NCTI will not advise investors on the financial soundness or safety of the investment. That is clearly the responsibility of the investor's broker or banker. NCTI will provide information on the social soundness of the investment – that is, whether the company's selling and renting policies are in line with the investor's own convictions.

What Good Will It Do?

Plenty! There is today a tragic shortage of capital available to developers and apartment house owners who wish to practice equal housing. The consequences are all too clear: each year about 1.5 million new family units are built, nearly all of them on a "de facto" segregated basis. And each year we get larger "black belts" in our cities and larger "white belts" in our suburbs.

One clear way to reverse this trend is to pour investment capital into equal housing. The money is available. Think what a tremendous difference it would make if the churches, the colleges, the labor unions and the foundations earmarked a small portion of their investments for equal housing. Not to mention the millions of additional dollars in pension funds, trust funds and individual portfolios!

What Can You Do To Help?

You can become a sponsor of NCTI. This does not obligate you to contribute money. The only commitment you make is to the idea of Tithing in Investment. If you want to contribute money to be used for this educational work, wonderful. We can use it. There are other ways to help, too:

Seek sponsors – especially among people who invest capital either personally or through their roles in churches, pension funds, foundations, universities and labor unions.

Be on the lookout for ways that you can influence investment policies: as a college alumnus, as a bank depositor, as a church member, as a member of any board, and even as a voting citizen with a stake in the administration of municipal and state pension funds.

Spread the word about NCTI. Send us names of concerned friends so we can send them material on tithing. And order reprints of this ad for friends (see coupon).

Send us names of brokers, bankers, persons holding investments and non-profit groups who believe in equal housing. Help us to build a national list of friendly investors and investment agencies.

And Send Us The Coupon

Right now send the coupon enrolling yourself as a sponsor. Send it today, whether or not you choose to send money as well. Tithing in Investment is one important and practical way of breaking "the terrible silence of the decent". You can speak up for equal housing. Do it now.

"We cannot keep our moral convictions in one pocket and our thoughts and actions about business and politics and social order and justice in another pocket quite apart."

BISHOP ARTHUR LICHTENBERGER
PAST PRESIDING BISHOP, PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, U.S.A.

"The Tithing in Investment movement can be part of the great social revolution now taking place. Not all of us can go to Mississippi to register voters but we can act boldly to end the insufferable restrictions in housing. We must act now, as one Mississippi student volunteer has said, to do something about 'the closed society.'"

Dear Mr. Kane:

I am dreadfully sorry that I have an engagement standing now for many months to teach for the whole week of December 5-10 at a Southwestern A.F. of L. school at Mineral Wells, Texas, and that cuts me out of accepting your kind invitation to be present at the NCRAC meeting at Atlantic City December 9-11.

I will do my best in the next few days to study with care Will Maslow's paper and send you my comments.

Most kind of Maurice Fagan to suggest that you invite me, and I am sorry as can be that I can't be a part of the meeting.

RECEIVED
Southern Regional Council

Mr. George Mitchell
Southern Regional Conference
63 Auburn Ave. N.E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

There will be a meeting of the NCRAC Special Committee on Reassessment on December 9-11, 1954 Thursday through Saturday, at the Hotel Ritz-Carlton, Atlantic City, New Jersey, on the topic: "THE ADVANCEMENT OF COMMUNITY RELATIONS OBJECTIVES THROUGH LAW AND LEGISLATION: The Significance and Value of This Approach; The Role of the Jewish Community Relations Agencies." Our practice is to invite a small number of social scientists and other experts to participate with us in each such meeting. It is my privilege to invite you to attend this meeting as a guest of the NCRAC and to participate with us in our discussions of these weighty problems. Maurice B. Fagan has suggested your name, and would be happy to supply you with further information.

The projected meeting will be the third in a series, each meeting designed to examine thoroughly the problems in a given area of community relations work, to assess the activities and approaches which have been conducted in relation to the problem and to formulate a general policy statement on work in the area for guidance of the Jewish community organizations dealing with the questions. I enclose a copy of the statement dealing with overt anti-Semitism. This pamphlet will demonstrate more clearly than I can, within the confines of a brief letter, what it is that we are trying to do and how we are going to do it.

Mr. Will Maslow, director of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the American Jewish Congress, has prepared a paper to initiate discussion of the topic of the Conference. A copy of this paper is enclosed. I shall appreciate your comments, in writing, if possible, so that they can be reproduced for distribution. A syllabus for the meeting is also in preparation and a copy

Dear Arnie:

Delighted to be asked to the meeting at the Willard Hotel September 18th. Will put it down and will expect to be there. It is a little difficult for me because I shall have been travelling lengthily through the 16th of September, and in a very few days thereafter have an Executive Committee meeting of the Southern Regional Council coming up. But I expect to make the grade.

Sincerely,

RECEIVED AUG 9 1956

Mr. George S. Mitchell,
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council
Room 432, 63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

This is an invitation to participate in an informal, unpublicized meeting of a limited number of leaders of major organizations which are committed to the principle of equality of citizenship and orderly processes of law.

The purpose of the meeting is to exchange views and to consider how best to pursue our shared democratic objectives of facilitating the rapid and harmonious transition to an integrated public school system, in accordance with the rulings of the United States Supreme Court.

The meeting will take place on September 18, 1956 in the Congressional Room of the Willard Hotel in Washington, D. C. at 9:30 A.M. In order to afford a genuine opportunity for completely informal discussion by yourself and the other participating leaders, no advance publicity will be issued and no reports of the meeting will be released, unless the participants themselves so decide.

We join in extending this invitation in the conviction that greater mutual knowledge of plans and better mutual understanding of methods will contribute toward the achievement of our common purpose; and that a free, informal exchange may lead to some concert of effort that will enlarge the effectiveness of all our programs.

A committee is now formulating an agenda which will be submitted to you at the earliest possible date.

We earnestly hope that you will be able to join us at this vital meeting. Please address your acceptance to

Mr. Arnold Aronson
Room 801
9 East 38th Street

Dear Mr. Aronson:

I am coming up and I will be there.

As to the luncheon speech, I suppose O.K., though I had sent messages to George Guernsey at AFL-CIO that in a pinch I could do things for him on that day in midday.

Dear George,

I just returned from my vacation and was delighted to learn that you will be able to attend the meeting on the 18th.

I've been trying to catch up with you by phone for the past two days in order to invite you formally to speak at the luncheon session. Since you apparently can't be reached

Mr. George S. Mitchell, Exec.Dir.

63 Auburn Ave. N.E. Room 432
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

This is a follow-up to the letter which was sent to you previously by Dr. Blake, Rabbi Feldman, and Father Shean, inviting you to join with a limited number of other leaders of major national organizations in an informal unpublicized meeting, Tuesday, September 18, on problems arising out of the desegregation issue.

The response to the invitation has been most encouraging and assures a representative and well-attended meeting. As you know, the meeting will be held in the Congressional Room of the Willard Hotel, Washington, D.C., beginning at 9:30 a. m. A group luncheon will be served and adjournment will take place no later than 5 o'clock.

As indicated in the original letter of invitation, the meeting has been called "in the conviction that greater mutual knowledge of plans and better mutual understanding of methods will contribute toward the achievement of our common purpose; and that a free, informal exchange may lead to some concert of effort that will enlarge the effectiveness of all our programs."

Accordingly, it is planned to devote the morning session to reports by the participating leaders on the programs and activities to facilitate integration being pursued by their respective organizations, the problems that have been encountered, both within the constituencies of the organizations and in the general community, the results achieved, etc.

At the luncheon session, Dr. George Mitchell, Director of the Southern Regional Council, and Mr. Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will speak briefly, the former on how voluntary organizations can best help facilitate the rapid and harmonious transition to an integrated public school system, and the latter on how government can most effectively contribute toward this same result.

In the light of these presentations and of the discussion at the morning session, attention will be focused during the afternoon on suggested programs, approaches, and techniques, and on the roles which various groups and organizations might play and the facilities which they might provide, either individually or jointly, in relation to the maintenance of law and order, the mobilization of favorable public opinion and community action, the improvement of communication within the South and between the North and South, the counteraction of intimidation and economic pressure and other similar problems.

We are looking forward to your presence and active participation in the meeting. If you wish us to make hotel reservations for you, please let me know the type of accommodations you desire.

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Aronson

Dear Arnie:

I am O. K. about being Chairman of the committee you wrote me about October 19th.

Also quite true that October 24-25 there will be a meeting that will give a good chance to further coordination in the South.

But I can't come myself to the November 20th meeting, though I send Harold Fleming who will do a mighty good job.

RECEIVED OCT 22 1956

Dear George:

As you know from the cover note which accompanied my summary of the Willard Hotel meeting, Dr. Blake, Rabbi Feldman and Father Shean have appointed a number of subcommittees, each of which is being asked to formulate recommendations and procedures to facilitate cooperative planning and action in a specific area of common interest and concern.

Perhaps the most important such area, as reflected in the discussion in Washington and in your own remarks at that time, is what might be called local community organization. I have been asked by Dr. Blake, Rabbi Feldman and Father Shean to invite you to serve as chairman of a subcommittee in this area. Other members of the proposed subcommittee are Mrs. Frances Cahn of the National Council of Jewish Women, Gloster Current of the NAACP, Mrs. Vivian C. Mason of the National Council of Negro Women, Alex Miller of the Anti-Defamation League, Mrs. Savilla M. Simons of the YWCA, Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO, Miss Esther Stamats of the United Council of Church Women, and Rabbi Marc Tannenbaum of the Synagogue Council of America.

KDO

The task of this subcommittee is to formulate recommendations to facilitate the organization of small groups of representative citizens in Southern communities concerned with developing plans for compliance with the Supreme Court decision. This would involve the development of procedures for exchanging names among the participating organizations of interested constituents for improving communication, for coordinating the work of the Southern field representatives, for selecting the communities which merit priority attention, etc.

It was the feeling of Dr. Blake, Rabbi Feldman and Father Shean that the work of the subcommittee could be accelerated if these questions could be considered first in a meeting of the Southern field staff members of the various participating organizations. I understand from Father Shean that you have already taken steps toward this end through a meeting which you are convening on the 24th and 25th. I would be interested in learning more about this meeting and, if you wish, I will be happy to do what I can to assure participation of the Southern representatives of as many of the cooperating national organizations as possible.

In accordance with the decision at the Washington meeting, we hope to be able to distribute the recommendations of the various subcommittees in writing at least a week in advance of the next meeting, which is scheduled to take place on November 20. I realize that this is a tight schedule but I am confident that you will be able to make the deadline. I do hope that you will accept this assignment and I will be more than happy to do anything that I can to help.

Best personal regards.

Cordially yours,

Arnie

Dear Arnie:

I have waited this long to write you about the Monday meeting because I wanted to be sure that there was absolutely no chance of my being there. Unfortunately, I am now sure. We are hard-pressed here on both program and organizational ventures, and I must be in Washington on the 21st and in New York from the evening of the 22nd well into the following week.

As a substitute, I sent you yesterday, Air-Mail Special Delivery, four copies of our summary of the Atlanta University meeting. It took us some time to get it done, but I feel that it is fairly thorough and should give you and members of the Executive Committee much of the background you will need.

Maybe we can get together when I am in New York the week of the 25th. I will call you.

Best regards.

Dear Mr. Kane:

Thank you for your letter of December 20th which apparently got lost in the holiday mails and has only arrived today. I appreciate the invitation to attend the NCRAC evaluative workshop on February 13-15. Unfortunately I am tied up with a prior engagement in Atlanta on the 13th and on the 15th am committed to present the annual address to the Allegheny County Council on Civil Rights in Pittsburgh.

I am interested in the conference which you propose and would like very much to receive the report when it comes out. May I ask who is doing the major paper? Thanks again for the invitation and I would appreciate a rain-check for a subsequent year's conference.

Dear Mr. Routh:

On February 13-15, 1958, the NCRAC Special Committee on Reassessment will hold a conference on the topic: "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Agencies in Advancing Community Relations Objectives." The purpose of this letter is to extend to you a cordial invitation to attend this meeting and to participate in our discussions. The meeting will be held at Fellowship Commission Bldg., 260 S. 15th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

As you may know, the Special Committee on Reassessment was established in 1952 in accordance with a recommendation of Professor Robert M. MacIver. Its special responsibility is that of conducting a searching examination of the assumptions underlying the various areas of activity in the field of community relations (intergroup relations) work. Last year our topic was: "Community Relations Work with Children and Youth."

It is our practice to invite a number of social scientists, practitioners, and other persons with special knowledge of the area under discussion to participate in each of our meetings. One purpose of the meeting is to develop and publish a statement of conclusions and recommendations regarding the areas of work examined. This is issued in the names of those participants who are willing to join in the statement. Acceptance of the invitation to participate in the conference does not necessarily imply endorsement of the statement of conclusions; each participant decides on the basis of the formulated statement of conclusions and recommendations after the conference, whether he wishes to be a signer or not.

Each participant has the privilege of submitting for publica-

Both his conference participation and his view on any statement of conclusions are regarded as individual activities and not as positions of either his agency or of NCRAC. The major part of the conference will be organized into three workshops, one of which will deal with the "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Community Relations Agencies in Law and Social Action," a second with the "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Community Relations Agencies in Education and Interpretation," and a third with the "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Community Relations Agencies in Research."

An annotated bibliggraphy for this meeting is in preparation. This, and other background material, will be sent to you in advance of the meeting.

I know that you will have a significant contribution to make to our deliberations on the topic of the "Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Private and Public Agencies in Advancing Community Relations Objectives," and so hope very much that you will be able to attend the conference.

Sincerely yours,

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON REASSESSMENT

Conclusions and Recommendations of the Conference on

RESPECTIVE ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF PUBLIC AND PRIVATE COMMUNITY RELATIONS AGENCIES*

The past two decades have witnessed a phenomenal growth and proliferation of agencies directed to the elimination of discrimination and the fostering of better intergroup relations in our nation. The Hitler period brought home to many the evils and dangers of racism and bigotry. Since World War II there has been a tremendous surge toward the creation of community relations agencies - general purpose, special purpose, sectarian and community-wide private agencies and a wide variety of public agencies with and without enforcement powers at all levels of government. This development has taken place in an atmosphere of recurrent crises and in response to need and demand for prompt action. As a result, little attention has been given to problems of overlapping, duplication of function or integrated planning.

More recently, however, as in other areas in which similar expansion of facilities under both public and private auspices has taken place, the question has arisen in the community relations field as to whether the growth of public agencies has lessened and may not in time obviate the need for private agencies. Moreover, whatever the ultimate answer to this question, the simultaneous existence of both public and private agencies has given a practical urgency to the need for assessing the roles and responsibilities of each and the relationships that should obtain among them in order that the optimum benefits to the society as a whole may be realized from their operations.

Accordingly, the Special Committee on Reassessment of the National Community Relations Advisory Council sponsored a conference on the Respective Roles and Responsibilities of Public and Private Agencies for the following purposes:

1. To review what, if any, have been historically the lines of demarcation in the responsibilities and roles of the various types of public and private community relations agencies.

2. To evaluate such divisions of responsibility and function and the modes of relationships among the agencies in the light of the purposes that are common to all of them.

3. To seek consensus - or clarify differences - regarding desirable forms of relationships and desirable differentiations of roles and responsibilities among public and private community relations agencies in order to promote the realization of common objectives.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The Objectives of Community Relations Work

The objectives of all community relations work may be defined in terms of two goals, toward which, in their several ways, all community relations activities and programs are directed:

1. The assurance of equal justice, equal treatment and equal opportunity to every individual without regard to race, color, creed, religion, nativity, ancestry, or other considerations irrelevant to the judgment of individual worth.

2. The creation of relationships of mutual acceptance on a basis of equality, with respect for differences, among individuals and groups.

In a large sense, these goals represent the democratic ideal. Responsibility for working toward their realization therefore does not rest with those disadvantaged by discrimination or prejudice. Responsibility for furthering the goals of a democratic society should be shared by all the institutions of that society, public and private.

We conclude therefore that there is continuing need for both public and private community relations agencies; and that progress toward the goals of community relations work is to be measured in part by the rate at which both government and private groups undertake commitments to those goals and develop programs for their realization.

We welcome the growth and spread of community relations agencies as evidences of an increasing recognition that the resolution of community relations problems is a responsibility of the total community.

We believe, however, that there is need for continuing examination of the relative responsibilities and functions of public and private agencies in this field, with a view to the development of guides to such differentiation of roles and such patterns of relationships as will promise the maximal realization of the potentialities of all.

We believe that this task has not as yet received adequate attention.

Dynamics of Private-Public Agency Relationships

It is characteristic of the expansion of governmental activity in a variety of social welfare areas that this expansion has taken place in response to public demand initiated and stimulated by private groups, organizations and agencies.

Historically, the community relations field had its origins in the efforts of racial, religious and ethnic groups to protect their own members against the adverse consequences of prejudice and discrimination, spread to programs under community-wide auspices and, more recently, under the continual impact of demand and education by private groups, to the assumption of governmental responsibility for the protection of civil rights and the promotion of good intergroup relationsh and the creation of public community relations agencies for the accomplishment of these purposes.

It is in the context of this dynamic relationship - between the private agency as advocate and prod and the public agency as the official instrumentality for the implementation of what has come, as a result of the efforts of private groups, to be adopted as public policy that the respective roles of the public and private community relations agencies and the relationships between them must be examined and understood.

We conceive the roles of public and private community relations agencies as complementary, each contributing appropriately toward the common objectives. Each, we believe, has roles related primarily to the essential functions of government and private initiative and effort in the striving toward the perfection of our democracy.

Unique Roles

In this context, it is uniquely the role of private organizations to formulate the needs and aspirations of various groups, to espouse their causes, and to press continuously for the assumption by government of responsibility for the achievement of such objectives as the groups and organizations deem to be in the public interest. The private agency is the prod, the critic, the pressure source, responsible for assuring that the agencies of government neither neglect their duty nor abuse their authority. Only through voluntary organizations of citizens can the pressures upon government that constitute the bloodstream of our political system be organized and effectively directed.

In the same context, the public agency is uniquely the instrument through which the will of the total community as embodied in declarations of public policy is made manifest. Its primary role is to interpret public policy clearly and unequivocally and to administer that policy with firmness and impartiality.

In all circumstances, it should be clear to the public agency that the role played by the private agencies is designed and calculated to facilitate the work of the public agency and to enlarge its capacity for contributing to the common objective. The private agencies, for their part, should pursue their role in this spirit.

a. The Public Agency

The complementary roles of public and private community relations agencies and the dynamic relationship between them are reflected in functions and powers which are unique to each.

Enforcement is by its nature uniquely a function of government and of the public community relations agency. Related to it is the power to subpoena records, to compel testimony, to issue orders, and the like. All these may be enjoyed by public agencies that lack enforcement powers, but none can under any circumstance be assumed by any private agency. Public agencies which lack these powers are deprived of the strengths which are uniquely vested in government and which, whether invoked or not, assure, we believe, more effective implementation of public policy.

Although the twin objectives of community relations work - equality and mutual acceptance with respect for differences - may both properly be embodied in declarations of public policy, the unique powers of the public agency are applicable only with respect to the first of these objectives.

Equal justice, equal treatment and equal opportunity are posited as fundamental principles in the basic political instruments of the United States. The public community relations agency can, and we believe should, invoke all the powers and authority which as an arm of government it uniquely possesses, "to secure these rights" and to eliminate the discriminatory practices that prevent their enjoyment.

Just as the public agency's invocation of the sanctions of law to prevent discrimination rests upon the constitutional guarantee of equality, an equally basic constitutional guarantee - that of freedom of thought and expression - makes the elimination of prejudice insusceptible of approach through prohibitions and legal sanctions. Prejudice is a matter of individual thought and conscience. Upon this area, government may not properly intrude with any sanctions or compulsions whatsoever.

This is not to say that public community relations agencies have no role to play in regard to prejudice. There is an intimate mutually consequential relationship between discrimination and intergroup hostility; they feed upon each other.

We believe that the elimination of discrimination through law may do as much to foster mutual acceptance and respect as the fostering of such acceptance and respect may do to bring about the elimination of discrimination. Thus, every move toward the elimination of discrimination through law makes a major contribution toward the building of mutual acceptance. The role of the public agency is to reduce constantly the number of opportunities available for the overt expression of prejudice, to interpose the sanction of law against the overt acting out of prejudicial attitudes, to create conditions in which prejudiced attitudes become pointless and frustrating for lack of opportunity for overt expression.

b. The Private Agency

Social action, community organization, the mobilization of groups and individuals for public actions, these are uniquely the functions of private agencies. It is these functions that enable the private agency to fulfill its role as critic and prod for the constant enlargement of public policy and for the more effective administration of that policy. Any intrusion by government upon the process whereby citizens groups formulate and express their views and demands represents a threat to that interplay through which the public conscience and the public will shape and direct government, and thus threatens the deterioration of democracy itself.

Public community relations agencies should weigh very carefully any contemplated role in organizing citizen groups lest such groups, being dependent upon the support of the public agency, lose their essential character as free agencies for the expression of views which, under other circumstances, might be critical of or hostile toward the public agency or the public policy.

We approve, however, of the provisions in some statutes providing for the establishment of citizen advisory councils to help effectuate the purposes of the laws; we regard such councils as proper and helpful where they serve as vehicles for interpretation of the law or the transmission of advice to the agency established by the law, but we regard their role as inappropriate and harmful if they are utilized as protective shields for the public agency or as a buffer against criticism of the public agency by private agencies, or where they become in any sense instruments by which the public agency seeks to manipulate opinion in the community.

Differentiation of Emphasis

Except for the unique functions discussed above, public and private community relations agencies alike perform a number of functions in common. These include among others, investigation, negotiation, litigation, legislative activity, education, interpretation, research.

Individual agencies, both public and private, may be limited by the laws, charters, constitutions and by-laws under which they operate to one or more of these functions or to the degree or scope to which they can apply them.

We believe that all these functions are appropriate to both types of agencies.

We believe, however, that differentiations in emphasis, manner of employment, and specific ends-in-view for these functions as they are employed by agencies of the two types derive from the respective unique roles and functions of public and private agencies and from the dynamics of the relationship between them. Clarification of such differentiations is desirable as a means to realizing the complementary potentials of public and private effort in the community relations field.

Ways in which public and private community relations agencies will most effectively complement each other while pursuing both their common roles and those that are unique to them may be illustrated by reference to the several categories of activities upon which our examination of the work of the agencies proceeded.

1. In the advancement of legislation, for example, while private groups as well as public agencies may properly initiate legislative recommendations, we believe that the task of assessing the gaps and weaknesses in existing law, in formulating proposals for closing the gaps, and in interpreting these proposals and the need for their adoption falls primarily on the public agency. The role of the private agency, on the other hand, in addition to assuring that these public agency responsibilities are discharged effectively, is that of public advocacy and organization, of mobilization of sentiment and pressure, of supplying leadership in creating a broad base of citizen support prerequisite to a successful legislative campaign.

After private agencies have stimulated, organized and successfully articulated the demand for a law, an executive order, or an administrative ruling, they have further obligations. Laws or rulings do not by themselves solve problems; they merely provide a framework within which solutions may more easily be sought. The enunciation of public policy inherent in legislation, executive orders, or court decisions calls, not for a cessation of private agency activity, but for a modification and adaptation of role to the changed circumstances. Private agencies should utilize their social action function to assure that the instrumentality created to administer a law is sufficiently well-staffed and financed to permit its effective implementation. They should seek to further public acceptance and support of its provisions, to encourage their constituencies to avail themselves of its protections, and to test its effectiveness and limitations.

2. In case-finding, differential roles of the public and private agencies may be similarly delineated. Some public agencies have statutory authority to initiate investigations of discriminatory practice on their own initiative; others do not have such authority, but must await receipt of a complaint. In the former case, responsibility for uncovering, investigating, processing and, if necessary, litigating instances of discrimination rests clearly upon the public agency. The private agency's role in such circumstances is to facilitate the effective discharge of the public agency's responsibility by directing the attention of the public agency to discriminatory practices it has discovered and by exerting pressure upon the public agency to press its investigative and allied activities to the fullest extent of its authority.

Where the public agency lacks authority to initiate its own investigation, the task of uncovering instances of discrimination falls upon the private agency. In performing this task, the private agency has the responsibility of advocating and otherwise stimulating public support for the enlargement of public policy so as to confer upon the public agency the authority to initiate its own actions.

3. In its educational and interpretive activities, the public agency, consistent with its differentiated role, can make its most effective contribution by emphasizing the provisions of the public policy that the agency is mandated to execute, asserting and interpreting the right of each individual to equality of treatment and of opportunity and the obligation of government to secure these rights and to protect him in his exercise of them, disseminating information as to the means by which the individual may obtain relief from lawful discrimination, and the like. The public agency has a special responsibility to work with other agencies of the government of which it is a part to bring about conformance by those other agencies to the community relations policies of the government. (This special responsibility parallels, in a sense, the responsibility of private agencies to promote among the groups they represent conformance to the principles they espouse.) In advancing arguments and adducing evidence regarding the evils of prejudice and of discrimination, the public agency may cite their adverse effects upon the economy, upon social harmony, or other aspects of the community, but in no case may it invoke sanctions or arguments that are not embodied in social, political and ethical commitments common to the community.

The private agency, on the other hand, faces no such restrictions on the character or scope of its interpretive and educational efforts. It may incorporate all the kinds of material appropriate to the public agency; but it need not stop there. It may denounce as discriminatory acts that are not so defined by public policy. It may adduce arguments in favor of non-discrimination and of tolerance of difference that are related to the value system held by its constituents, but that cannot be invoked by the public agency because it is not common to the community. It may exhort to action or conduct which the public agency, within the limits of its mandate, cannot advocate. It may criticize the public policy itself, as it may criticize the administration or conduct of the public agency.

4. In research, likewise, the emphases and directions that may be taken most effectively by public and private agencies respectively are derived from their unique roles. The public agency, we believe, can pursue most fruitfully research relating to the utilization of powers unique to government; research dealing with problems of equal treatment and requiring systematic fact-finding on a large scale; research resting upon the subpoening of witnesses or records or otherwise requiring the exercise of authority; research dealing with other public agencies, etc. Research into group attitudes, beliefs, and identifications; research in interreligious and other intergroup relationships; and research dealing generally with sensitive and controversial problems not subject to legislative or police resolution appear to us more appropriate for the private agency.

The total volume of research in community relations is inadequate. We believe that all agencies should give major emphasis to expansion of research programs.

Increasingly, research in community relations, as in other areas, is being conducted under university auspices. We regard this as a trend to be encouraged, and as one which may have a potentially salutary effect upon research efforts of intergroup agencies as well. We recommend the development of closer working relationships among community relations agencies and universities for the identification and formulation of problems for research, the more effective sharing of research findings, and the training of more research personnel for work in community relations.

Adjustments to Changing Situations

As the foregoing illustrations suggest, the dynamics of community relations work require constant adjustments and adaptations of agency programs to changing situations, if all agencies are to contribute maximally to the common objectives. Such adjustments and adaptations may be required because of changes in the nature of problems to be dealt with or because of the creation of new agencies or the expansion or contraction of existing agencies or the adoption of new legislation or the rendering of new judicial interpretations, etc.

Private agencies, we believe, are better able to make any such adjustments than are public agencies. Public community relations agencies operate under the limitations that press upon all public agencies in our political system. Their scope is restrained by declared public policy, and they can make substantial changes in their programs only after legislative or executive sanction has been obtained. The private agency is not constricted by statutory limitations upon its freedom and its flexibility. As compared to the public agency, it can expand, contract, alter, initiate or abandon any particular program or activity with relative ease. It is relatively free to experiment with techniques and approaches, to test ideas, to advocate and to criticize.

We believe that, because of their greater flexibility, private agencies should be prepared to make the major portion of the adjustments and adaptations required to meet changing needs and circumstances.

Cooperation and Coordination

However efficiently and effectively each individual community relations agency may operate, we believe that through cooperation among them in their common cause of promoting equality and mutual acceptance with respect for difference the maximum good to the community as a whole can be realized.

Since all the agencies are committed to the fostering of good intergroup relationships, we believe they can discharge an important part of their function in the process of cooperation itself, making an effective contribution toward the building of such relationships by systematic approaches to working together among themselves.

We believe that cooperative relationships among community relations agencies can also provide dramatic demonstrations of the feasibility of achieving mutual acceptance with respect for difference.

To this end, we urge that the cooperative relationship, however it may be structured, impose no strictures on the autonomy of individual agencies and exert no coercive force upon them in regard to policy or program.

We believe that there should be cooperation among all agencies both public and private, at every level, national and local. This cooperation should involve continual interconsultation and exchange of plans, views and information. Public agencies should feel free to call upon private agencies for consultation, cooperation and assistance and private agencies should encourage such approaches to them by the public agencies. Private agencies should feel free and be encouraged by the public agencies to make suggestions and recommendations regarding the programs of the public agencies. Frequent conferences are to be encouraged, as are cooperative relationships among staffs.

There should be systematic interconsultation among public agencies having similar functions at various governmental levels - i.e., fair employment practice agencies at federal, state and municipal levels - and among public agencies at the same level of government in different jurisdictions - i.e., state agencies and municipal agencies.

We believe, however, that the dynamics of the relationship between public and private agencies and the unique roles of each preclude the effective participation of both as co-equals in any permanent overall coordinating structure; since such co-equal participation would, in our judgment, compromise both the public agency, as the impartial implementer of public policy, and the private agencies in discharging their unique role of critics and prods of the public agencies.

These considerations, in our judgment, do not in any way militate against effective cooperation among public and private agencies at operating levels involving no conflicts of policy, no implied endorsement by the private agencies of the total programs or approaches of the public agencies, and no implied yielding by the public agency to pressures or importunings of particular private agencies.

We conclude that there should be coordinating bodies inclusive of all private community relations agencies at all levels, national and local, created upon the initiative of private agencies. Such coordinating bodies, we believe, can make major contributions to public policy by coordinating the views and positions of the private agencies - insofar as this proves feasible - and the demands of the private agencies upon the public agency. They can also play an important role in clarifying differences among the private agencies, within a framework that respects difference while fostering cooperation where there is agreement, thus making it possible for each agency to pursue its own programs with knowledge of the support it may have or the opposition it may confront from the others.

We believe that there is need for exploration of the most effective structuring of coordinating mechanisms. We suggest that since inter-agency cooperation may be more readily achieved for specific purposes - e.g., fair employment practices, fair educational practices, immigration policy reform - early efforts toward coordination be made around such specific issues. Successful cooperation on a series of specific projects, we believe, may facilitate the later creation of more inclusive and permanent coordinating structures.

Sectarian Agencies

Those agencies that are the instruments of various sectarian groups have a certain uniqueness among private agencies. Sharing the characteristics of all private agencies, they have in addition a special role in their concern for the dynamic survival of the groups they represent and for the preservation of the values cherished by the groups. Thus, the Jewish community relations agencies, in addition to sharing with other agencies, both public and private, a commitment to equality and to the fostering of mutual acceptance with respect for difference, have the further purpose of creating conditions conducive to dynamic Jewish living.

Not only do sectarian agencies serve as instrumentalities for the formulation and assertion of group values and group wants; they are essential to dynamic group survival. Group morale may be much better served by some action that the group takes in its own behalf than by any benefit, however great, conferred by an agent outside itself. A group's struggle for equality and self-expression has dynamic group survival values, as struggle, that cannot be matched by any guarantee of equal treatment.

We conclude that, notwithstanding the desirability of community-wide acceptance of responsibility for community relations objectives, there will be a continuing need for sectarian community relations agencies.

In striving for the furtherance of group values, the sectarian community relations agencies seek to promulgate and defend those views of what constitutes the good life and the good society that prevail among their constituents. These views frequently are in conflict. It is out of such conflict that the moral and ethical temper of a society or a community emerges. The operation of the democratic process requires that each group have full opportunity for expression of its views and that the competition among the varying viewpoints take place in the open forum of public opinion.

Such competition for public opinion may - though it does not necessarily - contribute to intergroup prejudice and hostility.

Just as discrimination may exist in the absence of prejudice and prejudice may exist without manifesting itself in overt discrimination, so intergroup competition does not invariably or inevitably lead to prejudiced intergroup attitudes. Conflicting views that find their sanctions in theological or doctrinal sources or that are regarded by the adversaries as affecting their religious values may be wholly irreconcilable; and groups may regard their defense of such values more highly than the amelioration of intergroup hostility engendered thereby. Issues around which such conflict exists include religious teaching in public schools, compulsory Sunday observance laws, divorce laws, laws governing child adoption.

The amelioration of intergroup hostilities arising out of or ascribable to public controversy over social issues is as much the concern of public community relations agencies as the amelioration of hostilities and tensions having any other origin.

We believe, however, that the public agency exceeds its proper role if it seeks to prevent intergroup tension either by attempting to mediate among the contending groups or by taking sides on the issues in controversy. Neither may the public agency seek to apply sanctions to the thoughts or attitudes of parties to a controversy or take steps calculated to restrain or limit free expression on either side.

We believe that the public community relations agency can best help to minimize tensions and hostilities arising from differences among sectarian groups by affirming and interpreting the democratic right of each group to express and to seek public acceptance for its position.

We suggest, as an appropriate area for further exploration, the possible role of the public and the non-sectarian community relations agency in formulating and promulgating rules of fair play, for general voluntary acceptance in the community as standards by which contending groups should be governed in their public debates over issues in controversy among them.

Although a public community relations agency should not enter into controvers es among groups, it has a direct and urgent responsibility for dealing with any conflicts arising from such differences that reach the point of endangering the public peace. Violence and vandalism are unlawful; public agencies must intervene in any situation in which they occur.

There is need for exploration of the question of the point at which, and the manner in which, public agencies may intervene in instances of intergroup controversy without limiting the full and free expression by any group, yet without waiting for conflict to erupt overtly.

Where more than one agency operates under the auspices of a particular sectarian group, we believe that all such agencies of the same group have a special obligation to maintain clearance and coordination among themselves, especially as regards their relationships with the public agency. Otherwise, the public agency may be subjected to conflicting demands and pressures that it has no means of reconciling and no basis for choosing among; or, conversely, it may be afforded a basis for justifying inaction on the ground of unclarified public demand. In such circumstances, the complementary roles of the public and private agencies may be led astray into conflict and disputation.

Dear Miss Rudy:

Thank you for the expense check covering part of my travel to the Richmond meeting. As I told Arnie Aronson, I split the cost among the several agencies in whose programs I participated that week. The $62.50 was NCRAC's share. No pain or strain caused by the delay in your getting the check to me.

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Recently, I wrote to the Virginia Council on Human Relations to ask for a copy of the favorable ruling it received from Internal Revenue under Section 501 (c)(3). I also requested a copy of the application for exemption or pertinent correspondence. If the latter documents are too bulky, I asked for the summary documents rather than the sustaining evidence.

Mr. Bowers, in reply, said that you have his files in this matter, and suggested I write to you for these materials. Might I put you to the trouble?

In appreciation, and with all good wishes.

Introduction

The Joint Planning Process

The purposes of the Jewish community relations field have been defined as the protection and enhancement of equal rights and equal opportunities and the fostering of conditions that contribute toward the vitality of Jewish living. Thus, all Jewish community relations agencies are committed to a common cause.

In order to get the most out of available resources, avoid conflict among themselves, and give the Jewish community the largest return for the funds appropriated for community relations, the member agencies of the NCRAC pool their ideas, their information and their experience, seeking agreement as to (1) what the major problems are that the Jewish community relations field must deal with, (2) what needs to be done about these problems, and (3) what programs are most important and which, though needed, are less urgent. They continually review existing programs, evaluate their effectiveness, and consider what should be done in the light of new or changed conditions.

This is joint program planning. It is a continuous process. It must be so, for conditions change constantly, new developments occur without prior warning or notice, unanticipated events demand adjustments or revisions of judgment.

In order that the results of the continual process of joint study, analysis and projection may be presented for the guidance of all agencies working in the field of Jewish community relations, it is necessary that the process be interrupted at some point in time and its outcomes up to that point be set down in writing. Each published Joint Program Plan is such a summation as of the date of adoption.

Different Roles and Responsibilities of Agencies

Over the years, a wide and varied range of activities has been developed for the furtherance of the basic purposes of the Jewish community relations field. All these activities are important. All properly find their place in a comprehensive program of Jewish community relations work.

The facilities and resources available to each agency, whether national or local, are limited, however, and none can possibly pursue to the fullest fruitful degree every proper avenue of programmatic activity. Agencies vary not only in respect to the extent and scope of their resources, but in the emphasis they give to particular aspects of the entire field of Jewish community relations work. Local agencies not only vary most markedly in the extent of their resources, but also in respect to the conditions within which they work and the pressures that these conditions exert upon their programs. The necessity of making selections among the many programs and projects that might be usefully pursued thus is imposed upon every agency.

Certain phases of program are the common responsibility of all agencies, national and local; for example, social action projects of various kinds, which require the concerted impact of multiple influences and forces.

Certain phases are the primary responsibility of particular national agencies. By resolution of the NCRAC Plenary Session of September 1952, it was agreed "...that within the areas of labor, veterans, interreligious activities and legal and legislative service, primary responsibility be assigned to the Jewish Labor Committee, the Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A., and the Orthodox, Conservative and Reform branches of Judaism, and the American Jewish Congress, respectively..."

Within the limitations of their respective resources, local community relations agencies participate in programs that they regard as meriting attention, in such measure and in such manner as they may locally decide. Policy unanimously approved by all the constituent agencies of the NCRAC recognizes that local community relations councils have "primary responsibility for planning and conducting community relations programs" in their respective communities.

In the carrying out of community relations programs, national and local agencies play complementary roles. Consistently with this concept, national resources are made available for help, consultation and advice to communities in the conduct of these activities.

Using the Joint Program Plan

The purpose of each annual Joint Program Plan of the NCRAC is not to recapitulate the entire range and variety of programmatic activities; but rather to express the joint judgment of all the agencies as to the particular activities that merit special attention in the light of trends and conditions in any particular period.

It is not contemplated that the recommendations in this Joint Program Plan – or any of the recommendations developed in the NCRAC – will be applied uncritically by every member agency, but rather that they will be regarded by each agency or community as a general guide, to be used as a basis for the planning of the program of each agency or community, taking into account all the factors that must influence such planning.

Constant alertness to shifts and changes in the circumstances to which planning must be continually adapted is a feature of NCRAC process. It is exercised jointly by the cooperating agencies, both national and local, through the NCRAC standing committees. These committees, in addition to maintaining watch over developments in their respective areas of concern, continually review existing programs, evaluate their effectiveness and consider what needs to be done in the light of changing conditions. (A list of Standing Committees and their Chairmen will be found on the inside of the back cover.)

The judgments of the Plenary Session and of the Executive Committee of the NCRAC – both of these bodies being more broadly representative of the constituent agencies than any one of the standing committees alone – stand as guides to the committees as to the concerns and objectives deemed most significant and important for their consideration, just as they stand as guides to the agencies engaged in Jewish community relations work.

The Plan does not deal in extenso with techniques, methodology, or procedure. The use of particular techniques is suggested, in some instances, in connection with activities recommended for priority consideration; but, in general, it is assumed that the agencies will employ such methods, techniques, and procedures as may be deemed most effective in relation to particular objectives, taking into account prevailing conditions, considerations of timing, etc. Among the methods widely employed in the field are those of the mass media of communication, intergroup education, community organization, litigation and other legal process, social action, and continual maintenance of contacts with various groups and with official bodies.

It is part of the continuing role of the standing committees of the NCRAC to develop recommendations from time to time as to the techniques, projects and activities to be employed in pursuit of particular program objectives. Such recommendations are conveyed to the constituent agencies and to the communities as they are developed in the course of the ongoing NCRAC process.

About This Joint Program Plan

While every Joint Program Plan grows organically out of the sum total of experience and discussion that enter into the continual NCRAC coordinating process throughout the months preceding its adoption, a process specially directed toward the formulation of the Plan is followed each year, so as to assure the fullest representativeness of participation in the development of its findings and the widest possible concurrence in its recommendations.

The Joint Program Plan for Jewish Community Relations in 1959-60 encompasses (1) a "Background for Planning," which is a broad review and analysis of events, developments and trends that have occurred since adoption of the 1958-59 plan – and that are expected to take place within 1959-60 – that must be taken account of in planning for the year ahead; (2) a "Guide to Program Planning," which is a briefer summarization of such events and developments, designed to facilitate a quick review, and (3) "Programs of Timeliness and Importance in 1959-60," comprising recommendations for projects, programs, and activities meriting priority or major emphasis during 1959-60 in order to make the most of favorable developments or guard against adverse influences.

Like the six previous annual Joint Program Plans issued by the NCRAC, this is a carefully considered expression of the consensus of the constituent national organizations and community councils comprising the NCRAC. This consensus was reached in part by the Plenary Session in May 1959 and in part by the Executive Committee in June 1959.

Following is a review of the process pursued in formulating the present Plan:

(1) In the early spring of 1959, all the constituent agencies, both national and local, were asked to hold discussions within their own separate bodies of trends and developments since the previous Plan was adopted and to project the programmatic implications of these trends and developments for the field. A discussion outline was developed to guide these discussions. It was announced at the same time that similar discussions, following a similar outline, would take place at the Plenary Session in May, and it was suggested that prior discussion within the several agencies would make it possible for delegates to the Plenary Session to bring to the discussions there not merely their personal views but those of their agencies.

(2) At the Plenary Session, two periods were set aside for discussion:

(a) A full afternoon was devoted to discussions in small round table groups of approximately twelve delegates. These comprised representatives of national and local member agencies, of large and small cities, and of various geographic areas. Each round table was led by a chairman, and a record of the discussion was kept by a secretary, who afterward caused his notes to be transcribed. Discussion at these round tables followed essentially the outline that had been previously disseminated to the member agencies.

(b) At a later time in the Session, a composite summary of the round table discussions was presented to the Plenum, and general discussion among the delegates ensued.

(3) The complete transcript of this discussion, including the summary of the round tables and the observations on it of the delegates in the plenary meeting, were referred to the NCRAC staff, with instructions to formulate, on the basis of it, a proposed draft Joint Program Plan for referral to the Executive Committee for definitive action.

(4) The Executive Committee met for a full day to review the proposed draft, which was made available in advance to all members of the Executive Committee. Changes in the draft were agreed upon in the course of discussion at this meeting. The Joint Program Plan for 1959-60 was then adopted in the form in which it is here presented.

I. Background for Planning

Forward planning for Jewish community relations cannot be based on an appraisal of circumstances and events in our land alone, but must take into account relevant circumstances and events elsewhere in the world.

THE WORLD SCENE

During the past year, the focus of world interest in the struggle between free West and Red East shifted from crisis to crisis – Quemoy, the Middle East, Africa, Central Europe. At the end of June 1959, a conference of the foreign ministers of the United States, Great Britain, France and the U.S.S.R. had exhausted itself in exchanges of propaganda, without seriously negotiating a single substantive issue. The "summit meeting" of heads of state, for which the foreign ministers conference was to have been a preparation, appeared uncertain.

The basic issue remains the conflict between freedom and totalitarianism: are people to be free, free to think and speak and choose how they shall be governed, free to develop their economies and change their social status, free to worship as they choose and to determine their own destinies according to their democratically expressed will, or are they to be the slaves of an authoritarianism imposing its will upon them while it poses as an agent of succor and liberation?

Throughout Asia and Africa, the fires of nationalism burn strongly and colonial peoples are beginning to demand and in some cases already have achieved political independence. The dark-skinned peoples of these continents measure our declarations about racial equality against our treatment of our own colored minorities. They appraise the merits of the democracy we hold up to them as a goal of their own aspirations according to the extent to which our political processes make possible the genuine participation of all our citizens, regardless of race, color, or religion, in the determination of policies and the choice of leadership. The favorable opinion of the nations being newly formed in Africa and Asia is important, for it may prove crucial in determining the outcome of the conflict between the free world and the communist bloc.

But the importance of demonstrating the workability of our American pluralistic society transcends even this crucial issue. The protection of civil rights in America and the preservation and enhancement of the civil liberties of Americans are essential to the fruition of the American idea of freedom and equality. Moreover the fate of the world – assuming it escapes nuclear destruction – may rest upon the perfection of processes whereby people of differing races and beliefs can live together in mutual acceptance with respect for their differences. Such processes are inherent in the American system. If they are to commend themselves to the rest of the world as adaptable to relationships among nations, we must first make them succeed here.

ISRAEL, THE MIDDLE EAST AND JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS

Political developments in the Middle East during the past year were marked by fresh evidences of disunity within the Arab world. Nasser's efforts to impose Egyptian hegemony upon the Arab world produced no less than seven crises during the past year, none involving Israel. In Iraq, Kassim clearly challenged Nasser and repudiated his claim to leadership of the Arab world. Jordan, Lebanon and Sudan complained to the U.N. against actions of the United Arab Republic. Countries on the periphery of the Arab world – Tunisia, Turkey, Ethiopia – successfully resisted Nasser's persistent policy of subversion and intimidation. At the same time, acrimonious propaganda exchanges notwithstanding, economic and military relationships between the U.A.R. and the U.S.S.R. continued strong. These developments served to illustrate the extent to which the peace and stability of the Middle East are aggravated by Nasser's imperialistic ambitions and fed by Soviet machinations, and helped to expose the hollowness of the Arab propaganda seeking to depict Israel as the root of all the trouble in the region.

In the hope of recouping some of the prestige he had lost since the Sinai campaign, Nasser early in 1959 resumed interference with the passage of cargoes bound for Israel through the Suez Canal, in violation of the pledge made by Egypt in the U.N. at the time of the reopening of the Canal in 1957, "to afford and maintain free and uninterrupted navigation for all nations."

The United States, which helped defray the costs of clearing and reopening the Canal, is deeply committed to its operation as an international passage. President Eisenhower, in comment on the international agreement reached at the time, observed that Egypt had "bound itself to free and open transit through the Canal and to the principle that the operation of the Canal should be insulated from the politics of any country." The President added: "If, unhappily, Egypt does hereafter violate the ... international obligations, then this should be dealt with firmly..."

Nasser's claim that a state of war exists between Egypt and Israel, which he again asserted in justification of his acts, has been explicitly rejected by the U.N. Security Council. Nothwithstanding the extralegality of such conduct, Egypt has denied transit through the Canal to ships flying the Israel flag since 1957, but ships of other nations carrying cargoes to and from Israel have been allowed to pass through.

Beginning in February 1959, Egyptian authorities seized Israel-bound goods in ships of Liberian and West Germany registry. They also detained a Danish ship carrying cargo consigned to Israel when the captain of the ship refused to allow confiscation of the cargo. Israel appealed to the U.N. for redress, but Nasser obdurately resisted pressures from that source to abide by his commitments. Nasser's completely illegal and high-handed administration of the Suez Canal as a private domain rather than an international waterway required to be kept open to ships of all nations in peace and war thus again produced a situation extremely damaging to the stability of the Middle East.

Israel's Relations with U.S. and with New Asian and African States

In the eleventh year of her life, the State of Israel enjoyed a position of growing status and prestige among the nations. Her relationships with the United States probably never have been more cordial. While reductions in U.S. mutual assistance funds will adversely affect grants to Israel, precisely at a time of major need, this is the result of a general pressure for cutting mutual aid funds and is in no sense directed against Israel.

Especially noteworthy are Israel's newly formed ties – commercial as well as diplomatic – with some of the newer Asian and African nations. Burma, Ghana, Liberia and several other newly formed states in the two continents look to Israel for technical assistance, counsel in developing democratic procedures, help in setting up social welfare services, developing agriculture, and so on. Evaluated against the background of the Bandung conference of only a few years ago, with its widespread display of overt hostility toward Israel, this is an extraordinary achievement. It may be expected to grow in significance as further new African and Asian states emerge during the next few years. Given their suspicions and distrust of the large nations, whose policies they tend to equate with colonialism and exploitation, these new states most probably will gravitate toward the nucleus of small states already existing. Thus, within a few years, the attitudes toward Israel among the nations comprising the Arab-Afro-Asian bloc in the U.N. may undergo substantial change, breaking down the hitherto rather solid anti-Israel posture of that significant bloc.

There has been an increasingly observable tendency for American Negroes to identify with dark-skinned peoples throughout the world. Just as Asians and Africans are influenced in their attitudes toward America by the status of Negroes in this country, American Negroes sympathize with the oppressed Negroes of Africa and take pride in the independence achieved by Ghana and Liberia. This tendency toward identification with dark-skinned peoples everywhere has led to a sympathetic regard among American Negroes for the Arab struggle for independence and nationalism. Arab propagandists, in their approaches to the American Negro community, have capitalized on this underlying sympathy.

At the same time, American Negroes have been impressed by the courage and achievements of the Israelis, as a small nation establishing and maintaining itself against great odds in a hostile environment and as a minority people overcoming the handicaps of prejudice and successfully asserting and defending nationhood. Negro perception of Israel as a nation friendly and helpful to the new African nations might very well influence Negro thinking about the Israeli-Arab conflict.

POPULATION MOBILITY

The movements of people from farm to city, from South to North and from all parts of the nation to the West continued during the past year at a perhaps accelerated rate. Pockets of unemployment and economic distress in the midst of general prosperity were a factor in increasing the volume of movement, sending people in search of jobs and livelihoods. The impact of unemployment fell inequitably upon Negroes, who were relatively twice as numerous as whites among those displaced from jobs. The rural-to-urban trend involved not only the migration of large numbers of southern Negroes to the industrial cities of the North and West, but of substantial numbers of southern whites also. Another contributing factor to the increased mobility was the spread of Puerto Ricans from the eastern seaboard cities to New England and the industrial east central and midwestern cities. Because of their marginal work skills these newcomers have been relatively numerous among applicants for public assistance, and this has led to demands for laws requiring a period of residence as a qualification for eligibility for such assistance in some states.

Not until the results of the 1960 decennial census are known will the full impact of the population shifts of the past several years on our national political scene be felt. It can be foreseen that, as a result of Congressional reapportionment based on the census, representation from the South and from rural areas generally will decline, thus augmenting the relative strength of the metropolitan centers. Already in these centers the steadily growing Negro and Puerto Rican populations are becoming increasingly influential politically and developing indigenous leadership. There are profound implications here for the future prospects for legislation affecting civil rights, and there are equally profound and much more immediate implications for intergroup and community relations.

Jewish Move Toward Suburbia

Population mobility within the Jewish community continued during the past year to be principally a movement from city to suburb. While some of the suburban communities were new and largely Jewish in composition, others were established communities in which the Jewish newcomers constitute a minority. In suburban communities of the latter type, Jewish influence in politics tended to be small. At the same time, Jewish political influence diminished also in the central city districts from which Jews continued to move out.

Suburban communities, by and large, are without the services and protections provided by public municipal civil rights agencies, whose jurisdictions are limited by the corporate boundaries of the cities. There is much need, therefore, for exploration of means whereby the operations of state agencies may be extended more effectively to suburban areas; or, alternatively, of the possibilities of creating public county, regional or area instrumentalities.

Jewish community relations services, meanwhile, have been extended to many of the suburban communities through expansion of local Jewish community relations councils into metropolitan councils serving entire metropolitan areas, through affiliated neighborhood or area councils and other forms of organization.

As observed in previous Joint Program Plans, the synagogue has taken on a new centrality in the suburban setting, reflecting the prevailing pattern of American community life, in which the churches tend to be the principal point of convergence for people seeking companionship, sociability, and cultural stimulation, as well as spiritual solace and common worship, and through which groups brought together by common faith express themselves on many social issues. In these circumstances, rabbis become counselors to the Jewish community, spokesmen of the Jewish community on many matters broadly deemed to fall within the scope of community relations. It is gratifying to observe that, where the new metropolitan Jewish community relations councils have expanded into the suburbs, they have taken special pains to involve rabbis in every way.

Problems of Housing and Residential Segregation

In nearly every city in the nation, housing has become a critical problem. Not only is the total supply of dwellings inadequate, but the shortages are aggravated by patterns of residential segregation. Nor is this problem exclusively one of the central cities. As Negroes make their way upward in the economic scale, their desire for housing that conforms to the standards of the American middle class results in the movement of increasing numbers of Negro families to suburban areas, where the familiar segregated neighborhood pattern is repeated.

Several successive Joint Program Plans have stressed the ubiquitously adverse influence of segregated housing practices on all intergroup relationships and their perpetuation of segregation in all phases of community living. The deleterious effects of housing segregation upon the economic, social and cultural character of our urban centers also have been observed. Equalization of opportunity for access to the available housing supply was the object of increased legislative activity during the past year, as reflected in the later references in this review to state and municipal fair housing laws.

The legislative enactments during the past year were accompanied by evidences of growing recognition by business and real estate interests of their stake in the maintenance of a free housing market. Some businessmen's associations, taking alarm at the threat to their enterprises posed by the danger of central city deterioration incipient in the growth of slums and the outward migration of families in the higher economic categories, have begun to support fair housing practices. Increasingly – although still on a limited scale – builders and real estate operators have entered the open occupancy housing field as a paying business activity.

Even more noteworthy is the increase during the past year in the work of churches, church bodies and voluntary organizations in furtherance of equal housing opportunity and in the actual opening of neighborhoods to unrestricted occupancy. These voluntary actions by religious, civic, racial, ethnic and other groups, individually and in concert, to develop effective programs for the realization of true equality in access to housing, to minimize racial tensions in transitional areas, and to move toward the acceptance of racially integrated neighborhoods as a normal aspect of American life represent substantial progress in directions pointed in Joint Program Plans for several years past.

While Jews on the whole seem more receptive than most other groups in the community to non-white neighbors, many Jews fail to recognize the relationship between housing discrimination and the essential interests of the Jewish group. It remains, therefore, a major and increasingly urgent task to bring the attitudes and the behavior of the whole Jewish community more closely into conformity with the principles of equality to which it is committed through its agencies.

INTERRELIGIOUS RELATIONSHIPS AND CHURCH–STATE ISSUES

Throughout the year, the major faith groups continued their cooperation for a variety of social welfare objectives. In communal life, on the whole, religious separatism diminished in civic and political affairs as people joined on equal terms in common purposes and common tasks; but this did not carry over into ordinary social intercourse, which continued to be largely confined within faith groupings.

The relationships between government and religion within the structure of the American democratic system continued to pose major problems during the past year. Concern about these relationships may even have taken on a new dimension with the apparently growing recognition that the problem is one for the whole community and not merely for particular religious groups. Jewish community relations agencies, both national and local, are justified in assuming that their intensive educational activities over a period of years have contributed to this salutary development.

"Dialogue"

With the realization that church-state relationships are a matter of general community concern has come a greater readiness on the part of most groups to discuss their differing views of these relationships in an atmosphere of reasonableness. This "dialogue," encouragement of which was recommended in the 1958-59 Joint Program Plan, contrasts with traditional "brotherhood" meetings in that its purpose is not to seek to suppress or to gloss over differences, but to encourage discussion and clarification of differences, with a clear mutual recognition of the right of each view to exist and to compete with the others in the free marketplace of ideas. Such dialogue gave promise of continuing to provide a salutary basis for fruitful discussion of some of the controversial church-state issue, with an increase in mutual understanding of opposing positions and with a diminution of the tensions and hostilities that so often have impeded reasoned consideration of such issues in the past.

Religion and the Public Schools

Indeed, although there were no essential changes during the year in the positions of any of the groups involved in the dialogue, bitterness and animosity over the differences among them appeared to abate. Thus, while there was no diminution – indeed there may have been an increase – of concern and action in connection with intrusions of religion upon the public schools, there were fewer cases in 1958 in which bitter intra-community conflict erupted over Christmas observances, for example, than in several recent previous years. Publication almost on the eve of the Christmas holiday of the joint Synagogue Council-NCRAC position on religious holiday observances in the public schools occasioned respectful attention in the press, particularly in cities where the question of Christmas observances in the schools was being agitated, but did not elicit any of the emotionally charged, anti-Semitic or anti-Jewish responses that often attended past public assertions of that position at holiday time. Such issues as religious symbols, bible-reading, prayer recitation, and baccalaureate services vied with holiday observances as bases for controversy over religion in the public schools.

Sunday Closing Laws

Aside from questions of religion and the public schools, the church-state issue receiving principal attention during the past year was that of statutory Sunday observances. There was an observable intensification of pressure for vigorous enforcement of such laws in a number of localities, and for extension of the scope of their coverage. To some extent, this apparently was in reaction against widespread carrying on of retail businesses by suburban shopping centers on Sunday. There was thus a conflict of practical commercial interests around the issue. In this conflict, of course, individual Jews were to be found on both sides, as were others in the communities affected. The Jewish concern about religious freedom, as the principled issue involved, was in no way diminished or augmented by such individual positions; nor were the effects upon the relationships among religious groups of the division among them on this score in any degree mitigated thereby.

State courts generally have upheld the Sunday closing laws. In an important case tried before a special three-judge federal court in Massachusetts, however, the Massachusetts compulsory Sabbath observance statute was found unconstitutional, being deemed by the court to deny the equal protection of the laws to those who observe a day other than Sunday as the Sabbath and to deprive them of liberty and property without due process. This decision has very far-reaching implications, since the Massachusetts law is similar in essential respects to compulsory Sunday observance laws in other states. It may be assumed that it will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which may resolve the issue of constitutionality at its next term.

The prevailing Jewish view that governmental regulation of Sabbath observance is an intrusion upon religious freedom won little adherence among other groups and there was almost no non-Jewish support for repeal of Sunday observance laws. The Jewish position that, at the very least, observers of some day other than Sunday as their Sabbath should not be penalized for following the dictates of their religious conscience appeared, on the other hand, to have gained some acceptance among Protestant leadership; the Catholic position, however, remained adamantly opposed to any such exemptions.

Religion and Politics

Religion in politics was projected into general public discussion in two separate contexts during the past year. The possibility that one or both of the major political parties might nominate a Catholic for either President or Vice President revived memories of the Al Smith candidacy of 1928 and led to widespread speculation as to the acceptability of a Catholic as President. Meanwhile, Abraham Ribicoff was elected Governor of Connecticut and Eugene McCarthy as Senator from Minnesota – states in which Jewish and Catholic populations respectively are minimal–following campaigns in which there was scarcely a murmur of religious bigotry.

While it is evident that overt appeals to religious prejudice are diminishing in American political campaigns, the very fact that interest is displayed in the religion of candidates suggests that religion continues to be regarded by politicians as a factor in the ability of candidates to gain voter approval. Certain associations are made by the public between the religion of a prospective candidate and his probable views on certain public issues. This is evident from the nature of questions often put to Catholic candidates, for example. It thus appears that religion continues an operative influence in American politics, though in a much lower key than in earlier periods.

For the first time in many years, charges were made publicly that anti-Semitism was a component of the opposition to Senate confirmation of a Presidential Cabinet appointee. The charges never were lodged against specific individuals. It is perhaps a measure of the extent to which the utility of anti-Semitism as a political weapon is rejected in our nation that the Jewishness of the appointee at no time was employed openly as an argument against his confirmation. On the contrary, the very suggestion that anti-Semitism was a factor in the case was denounced as abhorrent on all sides.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY ASPECTS OF HUMANE SLAUGHTERING LEGISLATION

As anticipated, the 85th Congress in the summer of 1958 passed P.L. 85-765, the humane slaughtering act. The law contains an explicit finding that Shechita – the Jewish religious method of slaughter – is humane. It includes also a section stipulating that "in order to protect freedom of religion, ritual slaughter and the handling or other preparation of livestock for ritual slaughter are exempted" from the law's provisions regarding handling and preparation. (The exemption is related by reference specifically to the Jewish religious method of slaughter.) The law creates a national advisory committee on humane methods of slaughter and handling, which is to make recommendations, based on studies which it is to pursue, to assist the Secretary of Agriculture (who administers the law) in the formulation of regulations. While the law applies only to meat bought by the federal government for use within the federal establishment, it is probable that efforts will be made to extend its coverage to all meat sold in interstate commerce.

State Humane Slaughtering Legislation

Meanwhile, as predicted, the enactment of the federal law led to the introduction of similar bills in state legislatures at their 1959 sessions. Many, but by no means all, of the fifteen state bills followed the federal law in defining Shechita as humane. Three had been enacted – in California, Minnesota, and Washington – and others were pending at the time of this review.

State legislators on the whole proved as sympathetic as members of Congress had been to the concern of Jews for the protection of the practice of Shechita as a religious right. Inasmuch as preparatory steps are not prescribed by Jewish religious law, many legislators, however, appeared to have difficulty in understanding the Jewish fear that prescriptions as to methods of handling prior to slaughter (for example, stunning prior to slaughter – which is prohibited under Jewish religious law) might make adherence to the Jewish law regarding Shechita impossible. In some states, leaders of humane societies, pressing for the state laws, tended to grow increasingly caustic in their comments on the nature and motivation of Jewish opposition.

Launching of Research Study of Humane Methods

Early in 1959, it was mutually agreed within the Synagogue Council of America and the NCRAC that the efforts of the constituent organizations in respect to the protection of Shechita be coordinated through their Joint Advisory Committee. In regard to state legislation, the coordinated approach:

(1) Urged postponement of action on all humane slaughtering legislation, pending the outcomes of two separate study processes of handling methods now in progress – (a) under the direction of the National Advisory Committee established under the federal law (whose recommendations will not affect handling prior to Shechita, since this is explicitly exempted from regulation by the Secretary of Agriculture); and (b) by an independent research agency, under the auspices of the Joint Advisory Committee of the NCRAC and Synagogue Council of America, to ascertain the most humane practical methods of restraining animals in preparation for Shechita and, if necessary, to develop equipment and processes in connection with such methods.

(2) Sought to assure that any humane slaughtering legislation nevertheless adopted include a finding that Shechita is humane.

The Jewish organizations sponsoring the study of humane handling methods announced their readiness to recommend modification or alteration of present methods of handling preparatory to Shechita, should the research disclose more humane practical methods than those currently employed. They said that they then would ask for legislative findings affirming the humaneness of such methods, similar to the present legislative findings of the humaneness of Shechita itself.

The community relations implications inherent in the complex and delicate issue of humane slaughtering legislation had become sharply evident by the end of the period covered by this review.

THE 1958 ELECTIONS AND THEIR IMPORT

As a result of the election of liberal candidates of both major parties in 1958, the complexion of the Congress, both Senate and House, was considerably changed. High expectations that the change would lead to prompt and effective legislative action to enlarge the practical applications of constitutional rights and liberties soon proved unrealistic, however, as it became clear that the power of committee chairmen, the procedures governing the flow of bills, the operation of the seniority system, and other Congressional procedures left control in essentially the same hands as in the 85th Congress.

Even before Congress convened, the Democratic leadership in the House put down a move by no fewer than 75 liberal Democratic Congressmen to press for rules changes and reorganization of the House Rules Committee that would break the present stranglehold of that Committee on House bills. Similarly, the Senate leadership quelled an effort by a bi-partisan group of liberal Senators at the opening of the Session to amend the Senate rules so as to end the power of the filibuster. (This is considered more fully later in this review.) An attempt by a group of liberal Republican Senators to name a Minority Leader to succeed former Senator Knowland similarly failed.

Retention of Conservative Control

It is one of the ironies of American politics that the election of so many additional northern Democrats to both Houses of Congress should have strengthened rather than weakened the influence of the Southern bloc. With its Congressional representation sharply reduced, the Republican Administration found it necessary to seek support on the Democratic side for its budgetary and other economic programs. This support has been provided by Senators from segregationist Southern states, who, however, have been able to exact a quid pro quo. The result has been a revitalization of the conservative Republican-Southern Democratic coalition that had dominated so many previous Congresses. An early evidence of the reconstitution of this coalition was provided by Senator Dirksen's co-sponsorship of Majority Leader Johnson's resolution on amendment of the Senate rule on cloture. Further evidence of the working of the coalition was provided when the Administration, in deference to the segregationist Southern bloc, abandoned its earlier advocacy of legislation to provide injunctive relief in civil rights cases.

While the conservative Republican-Southern Democratic coalition has thus been operating in its long-established way, another cohesive bloc of Senators has grown into a force that on some issues can exert decisive power in the Senate. This bloc is made up of the Democratic Senators from western states. The members of the bloc are under no strong pressures on civil rights issues, since they represent states in which minority populations are negligible. The bloc is, on the other hand, frequently dependent upon the southern contingent for support of legislation affecting water power, reclamation, and other matters in which it is deeply concerned. Therefore, it has tended to support only such civil rights proposals as the southerners find tolerable.

The "liberals" in Congress, whether in the Senate or in the House, have shown little political cohesion as a voting bloc; the firmness of their stand on civil rights – except for a steadfast minority commanding too few votes to be a decisive influence – has repeatedly been weakened by the conflicting demands of partisanship and sectional interests. The influence of the liberal Congressmen and Senators can be strengthened, but only by greatly enlarged public demand for and support of liberal measures.

SENATE RULE XXII

Liberal pressure finally succeeded, at the opening of the 86th Congress, in forcing the first change in ten years in the Senate filibuster rule, whereby the Senate repeatedly has been prevented by a determined minority from expressing its democratic will on crucial legislation. Under the new rule, cloture (termination of debate) can be effected by a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting, whereas the rule formerly required an absolute two-thirds of the full Senate. The amended rule also permits cloture to be invoked on debate over a proposal to change the rules – which was wholly proscribed under the old rule. But these are changes more in appearance than in substance. On any decisive vote on cloture, as indeed on any important vote on a hard-fought issue, substantially the entire Senate is present. The change is thus not sufficient to break the obstructive power of the filibuster; yet the appearance of improvement may make future efforts toward this end more difficult than ever.

The failure of the liberal group in the Senate to muster more than 28 votes in support of a majority cloture rule is attributable in part to the lack of general public understanding of the complex relationship between procedure and substance in the legislative process. The fate or shape of legislation frequently is determined by parliamentary maneuvering which precedes floor action, by the application of rules of procedure in the committee process, with which the public is generally not familiar. Congressional procedures thus can be and often are employed to thwart the majority will and block attainment of legislative objectives.

These same procedures make efforts to amend the rules virtually impossible at any time other than the opening of a new Congress. If effective rules changes are to be achieved at the opening of the 87th Congress, the interval will have to be used to increase public understanding of the ways in which the Senate filibuster and other obstructive tactics can be and have been used, not only as roadblocks to any effective civil rights legislation, but as devices whereby a determined minority can bring to a standstill the whole democratic process by preventing a vote on any issue.

FEDERAL CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

The first session of the 86th Congress saw the introduction of the usual quota of civil rights bills. The three principal proposals advanced were: the Douglas-Javits-Celler bill, the Administration program, and a bill introduced by Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson. The first of these, which embodies substantially the provisions designated as necessary in the 1958-59 Joint Program Plan, had the support of major civil rights organizations, which regard as of primary importance the provision for preventive relief in school desegregation cases. The Administration proposals, like the Douglas bill, provide for financial and technical assistance to school districts seeking to desegregate (though on a more limited scale), but – in contrast to the Administration's earlier position (as noted earlier in this review) – omits any provision for injunctive relief. The main feature of the Johnson bill, which contains no reference to the desegregation question, is a provision for creation of a "Community Relations Service" to conciliate "disagreements or difficulties regarding the laws or Constitution of the United States." Civil rights organizations, while favoring conciliation processes within the framework of a comprehensive program to facilitate compliance with the Supreme Court rulings, fear that the Johnson proposal might result in civil rights being bargained away rather than enforced.

At the end of June 1959, no committee in either house had reported out any civil rights bill. Hearings were conducted in both Senate and House, but without any sense of urgency, many being conducted in the presence of a single subcommittee member, sometimes in the absence of legislators altogether.

It appeared likely that some civil rights bill would be enacted in the present Congress. However, it was doubtful that a sufficient number of Republican members of both Senate and House would reject the Administration stand to make possible enactment of a measure with injunctive relief provisions. The question thus appeared to be not whether any civil rights bill would pass, but whether the law enacted would be a meaningful one or a civil rights measure in name only.

A major legislative achievement of the first session of the 86th Congress was the admission of Hawaii as a state. While not in any strict sense a civil rights action, this was one of the recommendations included in the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights a decade ago, and opposition to Hawaii's admission had been spearheaded by opponents of civil rights, whose concern about the racial composition of the islands has been undisguised. The admission of Hawaii is likely to result in the not too distant future in the election of a non-Caucasion to the Senate for the first time since Reconstruction times.

Public Apathy and Segregationist Intransigence

The legislative apathy toward federal civil rights legislation was but a reflection of the general public apathy toward such legislation, growing out of the lack of public understanding of the standard-setting and educational role of legislation in molding attitudes in a democratic society.

The intransigence of the opposition to the Supreme Court school desegregation rulings meanwhile was unabated. There is grave danger that this intransigence may so dismay and alarm other parts of the nation as to intimidate them into a withdrawal from the struggle. Such a surrender by default to the segregationists could only have the effect of persuading them that intransigent resistance advances their cause and thus encourage them in their defiance of law.

In the face of this danger, it grew more urgently necessary than ever that the public be made to understand the national impact of the struggle for equality of opportunity, and that public demand for early and effective action by Congress on civil rights be intensified.

STATE AND MUNICIPAL CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

By contrast with the inaction of Congress on civil rights, the expansion of civil rights protections by states and municipalities has been heartening.

The fruits of a decade of effort were reaped during the past year in Ohio and California when both states enacted effective fair employment practices laws. With these enactments, Illinois remains the only major industrial state in the Union without such legislative prohibitions against employment discrimination.

Of even greater significance is the spread of legislation against discrimination in housing. California joined the roster of states with laws against discrimination in public and publicly-aided housing. A year of successful experience with New York City's Sharkey-Brown-Isaacs law had laid to rest the fears expressed by some who had seen in such laws a dire blow at private property rights. The legislatures of Colorado, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Oregon in 1959 adopted laws forbidding discrimination in privately owned and operated housing. A comprehensive fair housing ordinance was adopted in Pittsburgh, Pa. These laws go beyond the proscription of discrimination in public and publicly-assisted housing which has been a feature of many anti-discrimination statutes for some years.

Testimony by a number of Jewish organizations before the Federal Commission on Civil Rights hearing held in New York in February disclosed that housing discrimination against Jews is experienced chiefly in privately owned apartments and homes. The new laws thus brought such discrimination for the first time within range of legislative prohibition.

The enactment of these laws and ordinances should give impetus to campaigns for similar state laws in the few states whose legislatures will be in session during 1959-60; and for municipal ordinances in major cities in other states.

The year saw, also, the creation of a number of additional municipal civil rights commissions, including notably the Commissioners' Council on Human Relations of the District of Columbia.

FREEDOM OF FRANCHISE

After a long period of inaction, agencies charged by the 1957 Civil Rights Act with protection of voting rights began to function during the past year. Moving cautiously, so as to preclude the probability of failure in their first official actions, both the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department and the Civil Rights Commission chose situations for investigation that involved flagrant and incontrovertible violations. The Civil Rights Commission encountered obdurate refusal on the part of registrars of voters to testify or produce records. It was necessary for the Commission to resort to prolonged litigation, the outcome of which was an agreement providing limited access to records.

The Justice Department sued for injunctions against flagrant denial of Negro voting rights in two counties – Macon County, Ala., and Terrell County, Ga. In the Macon case, the judge dismissed the action on the ground that the Civil Rights Law had not been intended to permit suits against states, and since the county registrars had resigned – which they had done on the eve of the proceedings – there was no one against whom an injunction could be entered.

In the Terrell County case, the judge ruled unconstitutional the injunctive relief provisions of the 1957 Act on the ground that they would permit federal proceedings against private individuals in state elections, which lie wholly within state jurisdiction under the Constitution. Even though the respondents in the case at trial were state officials, not individuals, the judge ruled the suit against them could not be entertained in view of the unconstitutionality of the statute on which the suit rested. An appeal from this ruling to the United States Supreme Court will not be decided until the Supreme Court's next term. The injunctive relief provisions of the 1957 Civil Rights Act thus have been rendered effectively inoperative for some months at least.

The experience of the Civil Rights Commission and the Justice Department demonstrated that additional federal legislation is imperatively needed if the aims of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 are to be realized. It demonstrated also, that, in those parts of the South where the maintenance of political power rests upon Negro disfranchisement, the political leadership is determined not merely to delay but to resist intransigently any extension of citizenship rights to Negroes.

Home Rule for District of Columbia

Continuing pressure for home rule for the District of Columbia grew more difficult to reject, as Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union. While the likelihood of self-rule for the District accordingly improved, it remained true that the residents of the Nation's capital city, having no votes, have no means of directly exerting political pressure. Moreover, the growth of the Negro population of the District in recent years has intensified the opposition of southern segregationists to self-rule. Thus, the success of the home rule drive continues to depend on the recognition by the rest of the country that the denial of self-government to the one million residents of the District is an anomoly in a democratic nation.

PUBLIC SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

Only relatively few formerly segregated public school districts were desegregated during the past year – an even smaller number than during the preceding year. The decelerating rate of progress toward desegregation is not unexpected. Fairly rapid progress was made, after the Supreme Court rulings, in the border states. The still segregated systems are largely in the areas of hard core resistance, where, in official defiance of law, state governments still plot means of circumventing the rulings.

Public School Closings

Most dramatic of all developments on the desegregation front during the year, and perhaps most significant for the long run, were the actual closings of public schools in the Virginia communities of Charlottesville, Front Royal and Norfolk and in Little Rock, Ark. These closings affected thousands of white as well as Negro pupils. Many were left without any opportunities for formal education. Wealthier parents sent their children to schools in other cities. Some joined in supporting makeshift classrooms in church basements, vacant stores, homes, or elsewhere. These quasi-schools lacked accreditation by educational standard-setting bodies, and the academic futures of the youngsters attending them were clouded.

In general, Jewish religious and communal institutions did not participate in these extra-public school programs, the Jewish community as a whole regarding them as devices to further circumvention of law and to undermine the public schools, which are held by the Jewish community to be an indispensable bulwark of the American social and political order.

The school closings shocked many people into realization of the tragic implications of "massive resistance." Buttressed by a federal court decision in the Little Rock case, that the existence of danger of violence cannot be made lawful ground for failing to comply with an order to desegregate, and by the Supreme Court's invalidation of the laws on which Virginia hoped to rest its maintenance of segregated schools, an open movement developed in several southern communities for preservation of the public school system under whatever conditions federal law imposed. Many who prefer segregation joined in this movement. Many who previously had remained silent now spoke out. The Governor of Virginia, in a dramatic shift of ground, fought off efforts by irreconcilable segregationists in the legislature to enact fresh laws to keep the schools closed rather than permit any racial mixing.

The peaceful admission of Negro pupils to formerly all-white schools in Arlington, Alexandria, and Norfolk, following upon the Supreme Court's nullification of Virginia's laws, is bound to spark similar moves elsewhere. The repudiation by the voters of Little Rock of Governor Faubus' attempt to pack the local school board with die-hard segregationists, and through them to bully the community into acceptance of school closing as a preferable alternative to desegregation, cannot fail to have its effect upon other communities. Thus, the school closings may prove to have been a turning point in the school desegregation controversy.

Pupil Assignment Laws

Meanwhile, the Supreme Court's validation of Alabama's pupil placement law would seem to provide sanction for very limited token compliance with the desegregation rulings. It seems likely that such laws will be enacted in some other southern states. The Alabama law, and a similar one in North Carolina (now being tested in the courts), establish a long list of criteria on the basis of which pupils may be assigned to specific schools within a school district. Race and color are not among the enumerated criteria, which do, however, include such imponderables as "psychological qualifications" and social adaptability. Segregationists see a small fissure here in what they would like to regard as an impervious barrier to any racial mixing in the public schools, since the laws vest in individual district school boards administration of the assignment procedure, thus creating the possibility of desegregation in particular districts where sufficient local pressure is generated.

Should the laws be so administered as to keep public schools completely segregated, it is probable that they would become vulnerable to attack in federal courts. Should they be used to admit a token few Negroes, however, it may prove impossible to establish their unconstitutionality to the satisfaction of the courts. In that event, a generation or more may pass with but token integration in a number of states.

Public School Desegregation in the North

In many cities outside the South, because of patterns of residential segregation, the pupils attending many public schools are drawn overwhelmingly from single racial, ethnic or religious groups. During the past year, an increasing trend toward recognition of integration as a positive factor in educating for democracy has led to the conclusion that such "one-group" public schools create barriers to the cultivation of that free and comfortable acceptance of difference that is an indispensable ingredient in the creative life of a pluralistic society such as ours. In some cities – New York and Chicago are outstanding examples – boards of education are experimenting with various procedures designed to make the pupil composition of schools approximate more closely the composition of the community as a whole and to integrate facilities. At least one state legislature – that of Illinois – is considering the revision of school district boundaries so as to promote racial mixture in the public schools. As this problem is likely to grow in importance in the years ahead, the experiments being tried merit the most interested attention.

While these experiments in physical integration are proceeding, many school systems continue to press forward with applications of well-established principles of intergroup education, structuring curricula and organizing and administering their educational process so as to afford each individual child the fullest opportunity to develop to his greatest potentiality and to enhance the free and comfortable acceptance of difference – whether of race, color, or religion – as a natural, inevitable and indispensable aspect of the democratic way of life. There continued to be a lack of teachers and administrators adequately trained in the means and methods for fostering equality in the public school setting.

DEFIANCE AND DISREGARD OF LAW AND LAWFUL PROCESS

Unhappily, the events of recent months have validated the observation ventured in the Joint Program Plan for 1958-59 "that successful flouting of the law leads only to larger outrages; and that lawlessness tends to spread, both geographically and in the nature of its victims." Assaults on persons and property continued, indeed became perhaps more numerous. A lynching took place during this period – the first in three years. Bombings, dynamitings and other assaults spread to areas outside the South. At the same time, there were somewhat reassuring evidences of spreading recognition that these violent acts are the inevitable fruits of defiance and contempt for law by public officials and political leaders, and responsible voices were increasingly raised in making the relationship clear.

An example was provided by the strong public reaction against the dynamiting of The Temple in Atlanta. The spontaneous expressions of horror and denunciation of that crime by public officials, by clergy and by the general citizenry, and the prompt and effective action by local police and federal authorities to apprehend the perpetrators and bring them to trial provided a deep sense of reassurance to the American Jewish community. It also demonstrated that the maintenance of ongoing year-round Jewish community relations programs contribute greatly toward the enhancement of Jewish group status and community-wide acceptance of responsibility for anti-Semitic violence and other acts directed against Jews or Jewish institutions.

In some other situations, in which the help of federal authorities was not sought, the public was apathetic and police work was poor. The need for federal legislation to authorize the Justice Department to act on its own initiative in dynamitings and bombings thus was accented. Several bills to this end, similar to measures that died in the last Congress, were again introduced.

The gravest and most frequent victims of violence, of course, have been the Negroes of the South. But even the lynching at Poplarville, Mississippi – the most widely publicized and most shocking of the many crimes against the persons and property of Negroes to be committed during the year – excited scarcely more than a flurry of public excitement throughout the nation. The government of Mississippi failed to act promptly against the abductors and murderers despite the fact that the Federal Bureau of Investigation publicly announced that it had supplied the state authorities with information as to their identities.

There were increasing signs, in Negro press comment and in utterances of some Negro leaders, that public apathy and police inaction in regard to crimes against Negroes and differential standards of punishment of Negro and white criminals was breeding cynicism among Negroes about legal process as a means of obtaining protection of their rights and redress of wrongs done them. With the growth of cohesive group consciousness and sense of group identification among Negroes, and with the rapidly continuing emergence of the Negro group from its passive acceptance of lesser caste status, awareness of these differences appeared to be producing among some Negroes a potentially dangerous mood. This was exemplified in the recent intimation by a president of an NAACP branch in North Carolina – repudiated by the national organization – that southern Negroes might find it necessary to meet violence with violence.

The implications of this are not limited to the South, but are even more applicable to northern communities where Negroes and other minority groups, not restrained by long habits of submission, feel themselves to be victims of unequal treatment.

IMPAIRMENT OF INTEGRITY OF U.S. CITIZENSHIP

No change was observed during the past year in the official acquiescence by our government in the imposition by foreign states of discriminations upon United States citizens because of their religion. The governments of Saudi Arabia and of other Arab states did not abate during the year their refusal of visas or transit permits to almost all Jewish travelers. Saudi Arabia continued to refuse to permit Americans who are Jews to be stationed in that country even as members of military or diplomatic units.

In the course of proceedings before the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, in which the Arabian-American Oil Company is charged with violating New York's law against discrimination, in that it refuses to consider Jews as applicants for jobs in Saudi Arabia, it was established that the company refuses also to consider Jews for employment within the United States, and has boycotted American firms owned by Jews, taking its instructions in these regards from Saudi Arabia. The Commission's determination was that New York's legal prohibition of discrimination should be set aside in this instance, in view of assertions by U.S. State Department spokesmen that major national interests are involved. This determination was being tested on state constitutional grounds in the New York State Supreme Court as this review was concluded. Regardless of the determination of state constitutionality, it is plain that the New York State Commission, charged with enforcement of the state's law against employment discrimination, has allowed itself to be used as an instrument for the negation of that law. Jewish community relations agencies, which expended such great effort in bringing about the enactment of laws for protection of equal employment opportunity and the creation of public agencies to enforce the laws became deeply concerned. The Jewish community moreover found profoundly repugnant the imputation created by the State Department's request, viz., that any protest against the selective application of fair employment laws in this situation suggests a disregard of the national interest.

IMMIGRATION

Early in the present session of Congress, a move to transfer immigration and passport matters from the jurisdiction of the House Judiciary Committee to the Un-American Activities Committee was frustrated. Defeat of the move followed a vigorous campaign of protest and opposition by groups and organizations concerned about immigration policy. They found untenable the idea that immigration policy was to be considered primarily in terms of security.

The usual array of immigration bills was introduced, ranging from proposals to amend various technical and procedural passages in the present law to comprehensive revisions of the entire structure of our immigration and naturalization policies and procedures. A number of the measures dealt with the quota system in various ways: some would abolish the discriminatory national origins system, but others would merely shift the base for determining quotas to another census period or increase the total number admissable annually or both. Several contained provisions for pooling of unused quotas. Some represented fresh approaches to the refugee problem by proposing the incorporation of parole provisions in the general immigration code, so that special legislation would not be necessary in every emergency. All these developments permit the conclusion that the long and arduous public educational activities of the groups and organizations advocating immigration policy reform had begun to show results.

World Refugee Year

By resolution in December 1958, the United Nations designated the year beginning July 1, 1959 as World Refugee Year. President Eisenhower proclaimed United States participation in the observance and a United States Committee for Refugees was created. The President's proclamation in effect constituted a pledge that the government of the United States would promote intensive efforts during 1959-60 to ease the plight of the estimated 15 million unfortunates who, of the 40 million that have become refugees since World War II, remain displaced and without permanent homes.

The United States Committee for Refugees is the chief instrumentality through which private efforts in the United States will be mobilized and coordinated. The stated purposes of the Committee envision programs of public education on the magnitude and scope of the world refugee problem, the stimulation of research, the study of plans and proposals for solution or alleviation of refugee problems. It maybe assumed that proposals developed under the aegis of this Committee will include suggestions for federal legislation; and that the problem of the Arab refugees will command substantial attention.

Jewish community relations agencies, both national and local, and Jewish community agencies will participate in the United States Committee and in the local and regional committees to be created under its general guidance and influence.

UNRWA

Meanwhile, the life of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA), which has been maintaining the Arab refugees of the Arab-Israel war, will come to an end on June 30, 1960, unless again extended. The United States, which has contributed some $200,000,000 of the $300,000,000 spent by UNRWA since its creation in 1949, has suggested through its representative on the U.N. Special Political Committee that, instead of direct relief grants for the refugees, the United Nations provide them with help in becoming self-sufficient in the countries where they now are.

American Jewish organizations long have contended that a decade of experience has demonstrated the inadequacy of direct relief as a solution to the Arab refugee problem. This view has come to be generally shared by objective students, though it continues to be rejected for political reasons by the Arab states. In the summer of 1959, the Secretary General of the UN recommended a program of absorption of the refugees by Arab countries, linked to economic development of those countries with funds from outside the area. This offer confronted the Arab leadership with the alternative of using the refugees as an instrument for regional development or continuing to exploit them as an instrument in the campaign against Israel.

CIVIL LIBERTIES AND THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE SUPREME COURT

Pressures Toward Conformity With Segregationist Views

Physical force, economic pressures and other forms of intimidation and coercion continued to be applied, in many parts of the South, to both Negroes and whites, as means of inhibiting free expression of views or public actions favorable to desegregation. Under these pressures, civil liberties eroded. White persons, regarded as "traitors" to the "Southern way of life" became increasingly the objects of such pressures to conform. As the violence fed by official contempt for law grew, some who had remained silent or aloof apparently began to perceive that by their silence they had been passive contributors to the consequences, and were moved by this realization to speak out against some of the more flagrant denials of basic constitutional liberties. It is to be hoped that the number of such courageous voices will increase and that their influence will grow.

Anti-Semitic Agitation

Anti-Semitic agitation and distribution of hate literature increased during the year, especially in some parts of the South, as bigots sought to exploit tensions over the desegregation controversy. Despite these stepped-up activities, the efforts at reorganization of the Ku Klux Klan, and the overt anti-Semitism of such segregationist demagogues as John Kasper, overt anti-Semitism continued at a low ebb and the appeals were almost universally disregarded and rejected.

Decent Literature and Related Campaigns

Efforts at suppression of freedom of expression in literature and the arts continued during the year by private groups seeking to impose their own concepts of morality, decency, and public order on various communities. Jewish community relations agencies, confronting the need for clear guides to their own conduct that would reconcile their concern for public morality and their concern for maintenance of freedom of expression, engaged in intensive discussions of the question. As this review was written, clarification of the Jewish position remained an important continuing challenge.

Attacks on Independence of the Supreme Court

The United States Supreme Court continued under attack during the past year by interests opposed to the Court's rulings on civil liberties issues and civil rights. The enemies of the Court found allies in such highly respectable quarters as the American Bar Association and the Conference of Chief Justices of State Courts, both of which joined in the demand for reversal by legislation of some of its rulings. It should be remarked, however, that state and local bar associations did not all join in this demand, but, on the contrary, many of them, as well as many groups of state court justices publicly dissociated themselves from the actions of the national bodies.

Defeat of legislation to limit the Court's jurisdiction at the close of the 85th Congress was by such a narrow margin that it heartened its proponents to intensify their attacks in the present Congress. Of the many bills embodying such attacks, the most far-reaching is H.R. 3, which would permit the states under their own laws to punish subversive activities directed against the federal government, and authorize the states to legislate in all areas where they have concurrent jurisdiction with the federal government, unless Congress specifically preempts the field in legislating on any specific subject. It is retroactive and apparently would affect all past laws, as well as future ones. No one is quite certain what effect it would have on interstate commerce, labor-management relations, public works, immigration and naturalization, and civil rights. Despite its characterization by the Justice Department as the "most hazardous" of the measures aimed at curbing the Court, Republican Congressional leadership in the House joined with some Southern Democrats to pass the bill – though with a smaller majority than had been mustered in support of an essentially identical bill in the previous Congress. The Senate had not acted on the measure when this review was concluded.

Opposition to Loyalty Oaths

Meanwhile, there was evidence of concern in the Senate for preservation of certain civil liberties principles. This was reflected in a bill to repeal a provision in the 1958 National Defense Education Act requiring students applying for loans to finance their college education to take a loyalty oath. The provision had been inserted as an amendment and passed without notice in the rush of action on pending measures just prior to adjournment of the 85th Congress. When colleges and universities met with federal administrative agencies to discuss implementation of the law, there was widespread denunciation of the loyalty oath provision. Some institutions refused to participate in the program. The bill to repeal the loyalty oath requirement, S. 819, was unanimously approved by a subcommittee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, and prospects for its passage are regarded as good.

Supreme Court Rulings in 1958-59

Rulings of the Supreme Court during the past year on civil liberties issues meanwhile in some respects enlarged and in others reduced the extent of the Court's defense of individual freedoms against infringement by government.

In the former category may be listed:

1. Two unanimous decisions affecting freedom of association, in which the Court upheld the rights of an individual – Scull, a printer – to refuse to answer questions regarding his membership in or association with various private organizations, including Jewish organizations active in civil rights issues; and of an organization – the NAACP – to refuse to disclose its membership lists. The importance of these decisions cannot be overstated. The power to compel disclosure of membership is the power to destroy voluntary associations, for individuals can be subjected to intolerable forms of intimidation and coercion and thus forced to withdraw from membership or support of such associations. All Americans, whatever their views on desegregation, have a stake in the preservation of the freedom of the NAACP to pursue its programs. It is to be hoped that the burden of defending that freedom will not be allowed to rest wholly upon the Supreme Court, without the intervention of the Executive authority, but that the NAACP's right to exist and to operate free from unconstitutional interference or arbitrary restraint will be defended by the Department of Justice.

2. A case involving loyalty oaths, in which the Court found unconstitutional a California law requiring such an oath as a condition of enjoying tax exemptions available under state laws. The loyalty oath requirement would have affected such Jewish institutions as synagogues and other religious and communal agencies and services.

3. A ruling extending to the motion picture medium the same broad protection of freedom of expression and presentation of ideas that has long been accorded to literature, the theater and other media. The specific issue was the constitutionality of a state law prohibiting the showing of a motion picture presenting adultery in a favorable light or seeming to approve it.

4. A case involving dismissal of a federal employee on "security" grounds, in which the Court ordered reinstatement with back pay from 1954. The decision is of special interest to Jewish community relations agencies. The Court observed in its ruling that the employee's "security" hearing had "developed into a wide-ranging inquisition into this man's educational, social and political beliefs encompassing even a question as to whether he was a 'religious man' ". The record revealed that among the questions asked in the course of the hearing were a number probing into the employee's views as to whether "Negroes and Jews are denied some of their constitutuional rights"; seeking to determine whether he had "voted for Norman Thomas and Henry Wallace," and whether he was "an extremist on equality of races."

In contrast to these decisions, in which concepts of individual freedoms were broadened, are others in which the Court appeared to be narrowing earlier interpretations of constitutional guarantees. Some observers interpreted these rulings as retreats by the Court in the face of criticism.

Thus:

1. In two cases testing the right of witnesses to refuse to answer questions put by investigating committees, the Court circumscribed earlier decisions on the same issue, upholding contempt convictions that had been obtained in state courts in one case and in lower federal courts in the other. These rulings appeared to narrow the ground on which witnesses may decline to answer questions put to them by investigating bodies.

2. The same rulings also defined much more narrowly an earlier decision, that seemingly had preempted to the federal courts jurisdiction in sedition prosecutions.

3. In a third instance, the Court upheld a Congressional enactment limiting its own ruling in the celebrated Jencks case in 1957. The new law, upheld by the Court, allows only restricted access by the defense to the records of pre-trial statements made by Government witnesses, whereas the 1957 ruling had ordered fuller disclosure of such statements.

While some of the rulings of the 1959 term may have the effect of pacifying some of the Court's critics, they may also have the reverse effect of encouraging the critics to believe that by continued attack they may pressure the Court into further modifications of its stand. It is regrettable that the single-minded persistence and vigor of the Court's critics has not been countered by any evidence of corresponding public support in its defense. There is thus need for continued alertness and firm opposition to further Congressional efforts to limit the Supreme Court's proper jurisdiction, nullify some of its recent rulings, and impair its independence.

II. Guide to Program Planning for 1959-60

In accordance with its purposes of promoting equal rights and opportunities and creating conditions that contribute to the vitality of Jewish living, the Jewish community relations field pursues certain constant objectives. Among these are:

- Freedom of religion from any interference or intrusion by government; maintenance of complete separation of church and state.

- Amicable relationships among ethnic, racial, national, religious and other groupings in the population; an atmosphere of mutual acceptance with respect for differences; cooperation in the advancement of the general welfare.

- Equality of opportunity, without regard to race, religion, ancestry, or origin, in employment, in education, in immigration, in housing, and in every other phase of our national life.

- Freedom of individual thought, opinion, expression and association; and the protection of these freedoms, through democratic means, against subversion and assault by all inimical forces.

- Public understanding in the United States of the role of Israel in the Middle East and of the stake of our nation in the establishment of a stable peace based on justice and equity between Israel and the Arab states.

Since the adoption of the Joint Program Plan for Jewish Community Relations, 1958-59, much has happened that has to be taken into account in planning for program designed to advance the field toward the foregoing objectives during the ensuing period of 1959-60.

Following are some of the significant trends and developments during the past year that may affect the progress of the field favorably or adversely. (Numbers after some items refer to pages in this Plan where the development is dealt with in a broader context.)

A.

Trends and Developments of Broad General Significance

- Continuation of the Cold War, with intermittent emigration of Jews from Iron Courtain countries as aspects of constantly shifting crises

- Evidence of intensified suppression of Jewish culture and institutions in the Soviet Union

- Continued surge toward emancipation and political independence among peoples of Africa (5)

- New United States Congress, with an enlarged liberal contingent, but with power essentially retained by conservative Republican-Southern Democratic coalition (11)

- Continuing population shifts and neighborhood changes, affecting community interrelationships (7)

- Continued pockets of high unemployment, with disproportionate ratio of unemployment among non-whites, notwithstanding generally high prosperity (7)

- Growing shortages of educational facilities in relation to constantly increasing demand for education at secondary and post-secondary levels

- Rejection of demagogic anti-Semitic appeals, with continued low level of overt anti-Semitism (19)

B.

Trends and Developments Affecting Community Relations Aspects of Developments in the Middle East

- Increasing role of religious institutions as centers of social life in the suburbs (6)

- Continued cooperation among religious bodies for common social objectives (8)

- Initiation by NCRAC and Synagogue Council of scientific study to ascertain most humane practicable method of handling animals preparatory to Shechita (10)

- Public projection of question of religion as a factor in elections for national office (10)

D.

Trends and Developments Affecting Equal Rights and Opportunity

- Adoption of a limited modification of the Senate filibuster rule (12)

- Growing apathy toward needed federal civil rights legislation (13)

- Enactment of first state laws prohibiting discrimination in private housing and extension of state laws against employment discrimination (13-14)

• Growing participation by church groups, real estate and business interests in furtherance of equality of housing opportunity (8)

• Continued intransigent denial of voting rights to Negroes in some southern states despite federal intervention (14)

• Decelerating rate of progress toward public school desegregation (15)

RECEIVED
MAR 1 1961

Dear Harold:

I am sorry that you and I did not get an opportunity to chat after the meeting, and that I failed to get an opportunity to personally thank you for the excellent wrap-up of the situation in the South. My own impression was that it was packed with a number of very provocative and basic conceptions. This is one reason why I tried to steer the discussion to these concepts which you asserted.

I might add that my very positive impressions were shared by the others at the Conference, and that this was particularly reflected in the sessions we held on Sunday. Any number of times on Sunday morning and Sunday afternoon individuals at the Conference referred back to statements that you had made the previous evening related to the subject at hand. In fact, toward the end of the session on Sunday afternoon, one of the participants noted how your comments of the previous evening tied together with the other threads that wove their way through the meeting on Sunday.

I do hope that in some future visit to Atlanta that I might get an opportunity to sit down and chat with you, and in turn, when you are in New York perhaps we can do so then.

Warmest regards.

Cordially,

Al Chernin
